The Day-Spring.

O! to behold the morning dawn
In floods of brightness in the sky,
To watch, as night's dull gloom is gone,
The day-spring bursting from on high.

Ah! in that day of great delight,
Shall tears and woes be all unknown,
While waves of glory, ever bright,
Shall beam from the eternal throne.

Earth's deep and voiceless joys sublime
Shall then to rapturous song aspire,
And the glad throngs who there shall shine,
Shall know no grief or vain desire.

Then shall earth's night-long weeping cease,
And dried forever sorrow's springs,
While o'er the realms of light and peace
Our sun shall spread his healing wings.

Prov., R. I., Nov. 13th, '61. H. L. H.

The End at Hand.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down, for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great."—JOEL.

Multitudes are looking for a triumph of the principles of christianity, and ministers are preaching the universal spread and success of the gospel and ushering in of the millennium in some way, that all the universe of mankind shall be counted before the Lord can come to judge the world, notwithstanding our divine Master declared the tares and the wheat should continue until the harvest, and "the harvest is the end of the world." In view of the above popular yet unscriptural theory, the Rev. Dr. Raffles wrote some few years since:—

"But till that great consummation,
That bright Sabbath of mankind,
Till each tribe and nation
Taste the bliss by God designed,
Speed the Gospel! let its tidings
Gladden every human mind;
Be its silver trumpet sounded,
Let the joyous echoes roll,
Till a sea of bliss unbounded
Spread o'er earth from pole to pole;
Then shall come the great Messiah,
In millennial glory crowned."

It would look truly encouraging to those who profess to believe the above view of things, if missionary effort seemed to meet with the success that so vast an expenditure of time, money, and loss of precious life claim at its shrine. But, alas, alas! if the reports of many persons who have visited numbers of those stations can be relied on, the prospect is a gloomy one. Here is one among the many, taken from a Journal some few years since:—

"THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—A recent letter from the Sandwich Islands says: 'The fact is, religion and morals here are at a pretty low ebb. Most all the missionaries have forsaken their calling, and some have got fat births under government, others are in mercantile business,' etc."

Another missionary writes:—

"AFFAIRS IN CHINA.—The following private letter from a missionary at Hong Kong, received in this city, gives a graphic picture of the state of affairs at that place and Whampoa: 'There are some beautiful residences here, which would do credit to any city of the old world; and the luxury of the rich is boundless, so that in five minutes' time you may go from the very extreme of fashion and refinement to the very depths of heathenism. A Gothic cathedral here, a temple of Budha there; a Scotch kirk here, a Joss house there; brothels and prostitutes everywhere. There is not a place in the reach of all my travels where vice is so open and so unblushing in its character as in Hong Kong. Religion is dead; a revival of religion is a thing unheard of—a convert a thing unknown.'"

In connection with the above, let me present the following; and I am compelled to exclaim with the Psalmist, "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty!"—

"A CRUCIFIXION IN CHINA.—An American, writing from China to the New York Times, after giving an account of the numerous executions of the rebels, says: 'Two weeks since, to vary the scene, they had a crucifixion. A woman was sentenced to be crucified for the crime of having given birth to one of the rebel chiefs. If a father is a rebel, his family is considered the same, and the whole family, from the old man of four score to the child of four years, share the same fate. The poor woman was nailed to the cross while living, a gash made across the forehead to the bone, and the skin pealed down so as to hang over the eyes; after which the breasts were cut off; they then proceeded to [illegible] every bone in her body; a large knife was next thrust into the throat and passed downward, cutting the chest open. The executioner then thrust in his hand, and grasping the heart, tore it from its socket, and laid it beating and reeking before the judge. At Shanghae they drown them by dozens.'"

"PROSPECT OF THE WORLD'S CONVERSION.—Prof. Seegar, in his missionary address at New York, stated as follows: 'After all that christianity has achieved, there remain 600,000,000 in the darkness of idolatry. Myriads of human beings are hastening to the judgment and will meet us at the bar of God. Alas! their heathenish ignorance will afford them no passport and will ensure them no protection against eternal wrath. And, in spite of all we are doing, heathenism is gaining ground in the world, by the natural increase of population, which far exceeds the conversions to christianity.'"

Speaking of GERMANY, the land of LUTHER and MELANCTHON, a British writer says:—

"From the following creed of many Socialists, what hope of future perfectibility can be entertained?

'1. Do you believe in the existence of a God? If the candidate hesitates, his admission is deferred until he can bring his mind to deny this fundamental doctrine.

2. Faith in an essential and living Deity is the origin, the fundamental cause of our present miserable social state.

3. As long as mankind hold to the hope of heaven, if it be only by the tenure of a thread, they cannot expect happiness on the earth.

4. Christianity, and the state of things it induces, are the eating canker-worms of society.

5. God has need of man, but man has no need of God.'

Blasphemous songs are chanted in many German cities. Such are some of the sentiments which, from the German schools of atheism, are circulating in our land and poisoning the minds of the rising generation. Such being the nature of the Social elements which many believe are about to convert the world, we can decide whether the true lover of our race can joyfully anticipate the introduction of their new era."
—Blackwood's Magazine.

And now what has been accomplished in our own land of boasted light and liberty? Is it not a solemn truth that for the cursed lust of gain there are millions of human beings as deeply sunk in hopeless brutality, wretchedness and misery, as any other part of the world. It is not my object at this time to enter into an expose of American Slavery, as Wesley has said, the "vilest that ever saw the sun." But I do beg the privilege of presenting the following article, showing the barbarism of slavery under the preaching of the gospel:—

"SLAVERY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—Correspondence of the Evening Post.—Charleston, Saturday, Nov. 1, 1856.—I find every thing here quite new to me. Slavery exists here in its worst form. This morning I visited the workhouse, where a young, delicate female slave, not over seventeen years, nearly white, had been whipped till the blood ran down to her heels; then her bleeding back was bathed in brine, and she sent back to her mistress to resume her duties as a house servant.

In passing up from the Exchange, and in sight of the Episcopal Church, I met one of those vile slave traders, with a look on his brazen face as plainly meaning 'infernal' as if it had been written on his forehead in letters of fire, holding a conference with a clergyman about the purchase of the parson's slaves. Upon inquiry, I found the 'divine' had a mother and three children, and his wish was to sell one of the children—a fine little girl, about eight years old—to this monster, who had taken a fancy to the mother, and would only buy the child upon condition that the mother should be included in the bargain. How they settled I could not ascertain, but it appeared very evident that, bad as the slave trader appeared to my northern eyes, he was a good man compared with the 'parson.'

Who can realize the sight of this slave-mother in the parson's kitchen, as she beheld her holy master bringing in this slave monster to feel of her limbs, look at her teeth, and ask her every indelicate question in the presence of her own children, and there stand with the parson and bargain for her and for one of her children. Look at this mother, with her three screaming children hanging upon her, and she with her eyes turned up to heaven, and saying, Is there a God?

If you don't find this letter too radical for your paper, I will give you some account of a pious planter, who rode to church in his carriage, and, in order to secure his coachman while he was performing his devotions, took a chain from his carriage, locked one end around the neck of his slave and the other end to his carriage wheel.

Last Sunday afternoon I saw a slave woman, almost white, with features the most delicate, with an iron band around her neck, from which one long iron prong turned up and another down, so that she could only move or turn her head in the most measured step, without these prongs tearing the flesh and bringing blood. This poor creature was looking at the church, and, what is more melancholy, rented tadies passed her without being moved at the brutal sight. Every slaveholding clergyman, in a moral view, actually keeps a brothel in his own house or on his plantation. CLARKSON."

Truly such wickedness is great, and the God of the oppressed will soon visit those hard-hearted tyrants with a becoming retribution.

"MODEL OF SOUTHERN MORALS.—We find an exhibition thus advertised in the New Orleans [illegible]:—

'Jackass [illegible] and Bull Fight at Gretna.—The public [illegible] will come off [illegible] on SUNDAY, the 15th inst., at four o'clock, P. M., between a wild Attakapas bull and [illegible] bull dogs; also, a fight between a jackass and some dogs. Admission 30 cents. Persons bringing dogs to fight will be admitted free. Ten dollars reward will be paid to the owner of the dog that whips the bull.'"

The prospect of the Rev. Dr's. great consummation of his anticipated "Sabbath of mankind," is in reality hopeless.

In summing up this gloomy picture of the condition of the world after eighteen hundred long years of God's long suffering and mercy, we present some statistics on the subject:—

"PROTESTANT AND PAPAL CRIME.—The Boston Traveller, on good authority, publishes the following important statistics, suggestive enough to the reflecting mind: 'In England, four persons for a million on the average are committed for murders per year. In Ireland there are nineteen to the million. In Belgium, a Catholic country, there are eighteen murders to the million. In France there are thirty-one. Passing into Austria we find thirty-six. In Bavaria, also Catholic, sixty-eight to the million; or, if homicides are struck out, there will be thirty. Going into Italy, where Catholic influence is the strongest of any country on earth, and taking first the kingdom of Sardinia, we find twenty murders to the million. In the Venetian and Milanese provinces there is the enormous result of forty-five to the million. In Tuscany forty-two, though that land is claimed as a kind of earthly paradise; and in the Papal States not less than one hundred murders for the million of people. There are ninety in Sicily; and in Naples the result is more appalling still, where public documents show there are two hundred murders per year to the million of people.'"

"FACTS TO THINK ABOUT.—There are in the world about 800,000,000 of souls. Of these Christianity is professed by

Roman Catholics	10,000,000
Protestants	70,000,000
Greek Church	50,000,000
	200,000,000

2. There are who never heard the Gospel—

Jews, blinded by unbelief	5,000,000
Mahomedans, deluded by the false prophet	140,000,000
Pagans, sunk in idolatry and superstition	450,000,000

3. There are only amongst these 600,000,000, about 1400 Protestant ministers, independent of native catechists and school masters, and including those of America, Great Britain and the Continent of Europe, or one missionary to every 428,571 persons.

4. The entire sum of money raised by the churches of Great Britain for missionary purposes is about £350,000, and by those of America £150,000, making together £500 000; a sum only equal to the annual gifts of idolators at Kale's temple at Calcutta.

5. If every Sabbath scholar in Great Britain would collect only one penny per week for christian missions, it would raise £433,333 6s. 8d. per year, which, divided amongst the different Missionary Societies, would enable them to print twice as many books, establish twice as many schools, support twice as many missionaries, and occupy twice as many stations.

6. Of the heathen world, 30,000,000 die every year; 82,000 die every day; 3,417 die every hour; 56 die every minute. At this rate, 36,860,000,000 have died during the Christian era.

Reader, what influence should these facts have upon your mind? Let them lead to devout prayer and holy effort for the speedy conversion of the world."—London paper.

"A recent classification of the inhabitants of the world in regard to religion, gives the following results:—Christians, 286,000,000; Jews, 5,500,000; Mahometans, 116,000,000; Idolaters, 484,000,000. The idolaters are thus classified: Buddhists, 245,000,000; Brahmanists, 133,000,000; Pagans, 106,000,000."

We have now concluded our testimony on this sorrowful subject, and in view of the above facts, and the immense amount of suffering of necessity connected with the degraded condition of so many hundred millions of human beings, join in the prayer of God's ancient servant (Ps. 7: 9—"Oh, let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end!"

This earth is now like a great vat overflowing with iniquity. In the late war between France and Austria, the so-called Holy Bishops invoked the blessing of God upon the arms of the French, that they might be successful in killing their Austrian enemies. The Austrian Bishops in turn did the same. Thus the same class of religionists Romanists, set apart by the Pope, were praying to God for aid to kill their own brethren. But in reality what difference is there between such Paganism in those countries and the present condition of things in our own?

The Protestant ministers at the South are praying to Almighty God for vengeance on the North; and in turn the North is doing the same. O what a sad, sad condition the nations of the earth are in to meet the soon coming Judge! All decided to maintain their corrupt and cruel institutions. "Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision, for the day of the Lord is near." War, war is sounding on every breeze, and a preparation for the last final onslaught that appals every sensitive heart. Engines of destruction are now ready to hurl their bolts with the most deadly, furious and infernal precision. O God! protect thy people now! The harvest is ripe—iniquity is abounding—the wickedness overflowing, and soon the vision of the holy Seer will be consummated. He that is mighty to save will come traveling in the greatness of his strength, speaking in righteousness, mighty to save. "Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine fat? I have trodden the wine press alone, and of the people there was none with me; for I will tread them in mine anger and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment: for the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the day of my redeemed is come."

The present distress of nations, and the universal perplexity, is but the projection of the shadow, and it will become more intense as we near the awful and dread reality of the destruction of the wicked and fiery doom of this fated world. Sinner! backslider! formalist! flee, ere the bursting storm comes down!

Decision of Character;

OR, FIRM FAITH IN GOD AND HIS REVEALED PURPOSES.

We are living in an age when we need to be admonished; for the characteristics of unbelief and wickedness are equal to the days of Noah and of Lot, as Jesus said it would be just before he comes. Then, the thoughts and imaginations of man's heart were evil and that continually. Men could believe everything; but to exercise faith in God was what was lacking;—just the same now. Hence the important inquiry propounded by our Lord—"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" There is plenty of theory, and a profession of faith; but how few are willing to believe God as he has spoken; and without faith in what God has spoken it is impossible to please him. A mere lip profession of faith will not do; but a faith that works by love and purifies the heart,—

"A faith that shines more bright and clear
When tempests rage without."

There is a great lack of decision of character in the present age. And this may apply to not a few who have started as virgins to meet the Bridegroom, with the lighted lamp in their hands. A fixed principle of the heart, a firm, unshaken confidence in God, a never-giving-up spirit have characterized the children of God in all past ages;—men who endured affliction, whose faith was tested, like Abraham when called to offer up Isaac; Job, when severely afflicted, and suffered the loss of his goods and cattle, and became a reproach among his friends, and when his own wife wanted him to curse God, maintained his faith unmoved. He grasped the precious promises of the Messiah, and looked forward to the time when he would come and stand upon the earth, and see him with his own eyes. Daniel is another example of faith,—and the three Hebrew worthies, who would not fall down to worship graven images, but submitted to the wicked king's decree, and were cast into the furnace, with faith unwavering that the God whom they served was able to deliver them. There was decision of character, and firm faith, such as is needed in these days of idol worship. Pages might be filled in referring to a host of ancient worthies, of whom the world was not worthy, who chose rather to wander about in sheep skins and goat skins, and put up in caves and dens of the earth, rather than deny the God of Israel. If brought to the test, how many could endure to have their faith thus tried in these last days? How many have started with the lamp of life in their hand, and a little persecution for the word's sake, and a tarrying of the Bridegroom a few years longer than they expected, has caused them to lay by their lamp, and now they are walking in darkness; the sure word of prophecy furnishes them no light. There was a lack of decision of character and faith in God and his revealed purposes.

To have a foundation that we can build upon, which will be secure against all the storms and floods that may beat against the building. we need to dig deep, and be sure we have, for the corner, the precious stone—the tried stone. See Eph. 2: 19–22. If this was the sure foundation for the Ephesian church to build upon, then let the church in these last days take heed and examine themselves, and see that they are built upon the same foundation,—"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid." James says,—"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves. For if any man be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass; for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his doing."—James 1: 22–25. The world is filled with do-nothing christians; but we must work while the day lasts, if we expect to receive wages that will please us, and have a faith that will save us.

It seems to me that if all who profess to have faith in the speedy return of our Lord to this earth, would take heed to what James says, the light of prophecy would shine upon their pathway with such brightness, that Zion's light and glory (when I say Zion, I don't mean the church, but literal Zion in Jerusalem) would beam up before their minds, so as to cut them loose from this world, and cause them to be doers of the word and not hearers only. There is wealth enough among those who profess to be looking for the return of our Lord,—if they all would manifest their faith to the world in doing, as well as saying,—to carry on this war in which we have enlisted more successfully than now. Those who would gladly proclaim this "good news" to perishing man, would not have to lay by and go to work with their hands; and those means of light and knowledge—the Crisis, Harbinger, &c., would not be so straightened to keep alive, paying their weekly visits to your homes, if there was that decision of character, and firm faith in God and his revealed purposes, as this blessed hope which we profess demands of us.

The storm is gathering that will sweep over this world very soon. Dear reader, do you know that your anchor, hope, is cast within the vail, where our great High Priest has entered? A very brief period, and he will come out to bless his waiting congregation. I believe the jubilee trump will sound by '66. The nations are getting angry. Soon the angels will be told to thrust in the sickle, to reap the harvest of the earth. We are in the time of decision, when men are deciding for war with carnal weapons, or with the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. The latter is my choice, —to watch and stand ready.

God our Helper: or, "A Hole in the Wall."—Ezek. 8.

It seems there was a time when the professed people of God had deeply transgressed, but they had taken care to so closely intrench themselves as to be invulnerable for a time. They had built up an impregnable wall to screen themselves from the view of mortals, behind which they committed the most flagrant crimes. And it was not a few unruly laymen who had done this thing, but it was the officials and leading men in the church that were thus guilty. But so secure were they, that if the "remnant humble" were impressed with fearful forebodings and misgivings relative to the purity of the church, they could only sigh and cry in secret; their hands were tied. But God hears the prayer of two or three that mourn for the desolations of Zion. When he has sufficiently tested their faith, he aims one blow—makes an aperture in this wall large enough for his servants to commence upon, then commands one of his lion-like, eagle eyed prophets to improve the opportunity and dig—follow the work right up he had commenced for him. So he picks and digs away (slow work) until he makes a place large enough to go through and see what is in the enclosure; and behold! the seventy elders of Israel, with other officials, were worshiping and offering incense to the lowest order of beasts, and reptiles, and idols pictured on the walls! while in another corner twenty-five men were worshiping the sun! Israel's daughters also were there to swell the catalogue of idolaters, for which God promises to visit them with fury and indignation!

But what is the cause of this gross backsliding and outrageous sacrilege? First, they grew so cold as not to recognize the providence of God. Affairs moved on in a slow, monotonous round, and they did not think God altered any thing for his children's prayers, and finally they did not think God had any thing to do with our little affairs—did not notice them at all. Verse 12. They no doubt maintained that nature had her fixed laws, and all would move on the same whether they bowed the knee and offered incense to God, or to apes, lizards and peacocks! When God's professed children get so far from the mark as to say that the only object of prayer is to get ourselves into a devotional frame—that God never intended to change any thing for our prayers—every thing in reality will be the same as though we had not prayed, I think they have taken one long step towards the enclosure of atheistic and idolatrous Israel. According to the ideas of such, if any feel they lack wisdom, they will receive just as much not to ask, as though they obeyed the divine injunction to "ask of God" under such circumstances.

What was the use of the apostle citing us to Elijah as an example for us to pattern? The rain would have been given and withheld just the same for all the prophet's prayers,—they affected nothing only to bring the prophet into a devotional frame. I wonder if Hezekiah's prayer amounted to anything more than bringing him into a devotional frame when he prayed for his life, and "the Lord heard his prayer," and directed Isaiah to return and tell him God would add fifteen years to his life? But to give a tenth of the examples of this kind would swell this beyond the limits of "short articles," thus I forbear; but every Bible student knows such examples are multitudinous in the sacred oracles; and why so many, unless placed there as safeguards against these atheistical notions?

But one of the most important features this Scripture presents to me is, that God will have his people work—work hard! dig! and when insurmountable obstructions fill duty's path, "pray," believing he will knock a hole through large enough for us to dig our way through, and that we should allow no discouragement to possess our mind because we are found in the minority. What if almost all Israel are transgressing? the "remnant" may confidently expect their God will make a place for them to labor so long as they possess a a spirit of godly industry, and are courageous enough to "cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins."

"Through ignorance ye did it."

A great deal of the opposition that the faithful minister meets with in preaching the truths of the Bible in places where they are comparatively few, arises from ignorance. Seldom do we find among the opposers of truth those who have been educated and nursed in liberal teachings;—I mean the violent, rude, and bitter opponents of the truth. Occasionally, however, some are found engaged in this work, who set themselves up as "teachers" and leaders; who, when they find that their craft is in danger, raise the cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" I have been found worthy to receive the condemnation and hate of some few such beings.

Feeling called to "sound forth the word of the Lord" in these "regions of darkness," I tried to speak in what I thought to be a school-house (which however proved to be a Methodist meeting-house), on two occasions lately, with evident success. I also gave appointments for meetings ahead. Our Methodist friends had a prayer-meeting during the week, which I felt it was my duty to attend. I did so, and enjoyed myself as well as I could. The preacher made it his especial work to talk about the immortal soul, deathless spirit, &c., which he said was clearly taught in the Bible; and quoted Gen. 2: 7, to prove it! which was the only scripture he could find to sustain himself. I had preached from that same text a few evenings before, and proved man's unity and mortality from it, and showed conclusively that the immortality of the soul had no support from that scripture. He had to manifest his ignorance by quoting it to uphold his dogma, and of course failed. I felt very much disposed to answer him, but was allowed no opportunity. I after thought of the "Dr., his quarto volume, and the skunk," and "let him alone."

Our friend brought the meeting to a close, remarking that he did not enjoy as much of the love of God as formerly; then turning his face to the opposite side to where I was seated, he courageously remarked that "Mr. Smith could not preach in that place any more; that they could not have his doctrines taught there." I had understood that it was a school-house, and so thought I had equal right to preach there. I was informed that I was mistaken; that it was a Methodist church. I remarked that if that was true, I did not wish to intrude on their rights, and of course, would not preach there without their consent; but if they thought to crush me thus and prevent me from speaking, they were sadly mistaken, for preach I WOULD; the people must and shall hear. This last message is too important to be laid aside so easily. After meeting, some of the men began to shout and jump about, seemingly delighted that we were thus cast out, and reviled and insulted, and called me Brother Paul,—glorious name! I wish I had the spirit of Paul! Were it not for the sake of a few who say they want to hear us through, we should feel like shaking the dust off our feet as a testimony against them. I rejoice in being counted worthy to suffer this little for Christ. They have done is ignorantly. Father, forgive them.

☞ A taste of Christ always leaves behind a longing for more, and a desire that others may enjoy: "Taste and see that the Lord is good."

For the Crisis.

"By Grace are ye Saved." Eph. 2: 5, 8.

To this proposition of infinite love, christian brethren, we all give our assent. The question I humbly propose to consider is, To what extent does the Word of God apply this doctrine? A right understanding of this is essential to our giving our Father in heaven the glory due unto his holy name. To his unmerited favor we all ascribe the "unspeakable gift" of his beloved Son, and the influences of his Spirit. With grateful praise we trace this grace in the ample provision made "for the sins of the whole world" (1 John 2: 2), and in the free invitation to all men to come and partake of the inestimable blessing. "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. 22: 17. We admit the justice of the condemnation to eternal death, of all who refuse the offer of wondrous love! We know the fact, that some accept the gracious invitation and others refuse. Do we, or do we not, trace the grace of God here? Is it the gracious influence of the Holy Spirit of God which inclines us to come to Jesus Christ, or do we come rather than others because of our own superior virtue? If we say that the Spirit strives with all men, we know that it does not so strive with all men as to induce them all to come. It must therefore be ascribed to the superior grace of God, or to the superior virtue of the man, that one improves the strivings of the Spirit rather than another. The command to all men to repent and believe the gospel, implies an ability to come if we will. The question is, why are some willing rather than others?

"The faithful Witness" of the truth gives us the answer. "No man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father."—John 6: 65. "No man can come to me, except the Father, which hath sent me, draw him."—John 6: 44. He teaches us, indeed, that this inability is not an inability of natural faculty or power, but a moral inability or disinclination of the carnal mind; so that we are without excuse. "YE WILL NOT come to me that ye might have life."—John 5: 40. The inspired apostles taught the same doctrine.—"It is God that worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure."—Phil. 2: 13. None but a Universalist can apply this to all men. Of Lydia it is recorded, "whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul."—Acts 16: 14. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all (the) things are of God," etc.—2 Cor. 5: 17, 18. "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth," etc.—James 1: 18. He certainly does not beget all men thus. All men are not the regenerated children of God. In this respect "hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy."—Rom. 9: 18. "It is not of him that willeth (i. e. of his own virtue) . . . but of God that showeth mercy."—ver. 16.

This dependence of depraved and guilty man on the renewing grace of God, my brethren, is plainly revealed in both Testaments. Moses told the rebellious Israelites, "The Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day."—Deut. 29: 4. Subsequently, the gracious promise was given, "A new spirit will I put within you; and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and CAUSE YOU to walk in my statutes," etc.—Ezk. 36: 26, 27.

What is this, christian brethren, but a predestination to holiness, and consequent salvation? Can we reasonably avoid the conclusion, that we walk in God's statutes, rather than others, because he has written his law on our hearts, as he has not on the hearts of others? Have we not repented of our sins, rather than others, because He who is exalted "to give repentance" as well as "remission of sins" (Acts 5: 31), has inclined our hearts to this holy exercise? Repentance and faith are indeed our own acts; but they are the exercises of the new heart which God gives to whom he will. Therefore, we must unite with the apostle in saying, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." If we admit that "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God" (Rom. 3: 23), and are "worthy of death," must we not also admit, that God has a perfect right to prepare any number of the human race he pleases, as "vessels of mercy" "unto glory," and leave the rest to perish in their voluntary rejection of the free and full salvation of the Gospel?

Preachers.

What are the characteristics of a preacher? What are his duties? Do preachers have trials? Is it not a pleasant calling? To be a preacher of the gospel of Christ, is to occupy a responsible position. As ambassadors from the court of heaven, they bear important messages to a rebellious world, and directions to the loyal subjects of the King. Being representatives of the kingdom of heaven, they should be examples to the people. As "stewards of the mysteries of God," they should be faithful in declaring the word of God unadulterated with the traditions of men. They are responsible to God, not to men, for what they preach. They should reprove and "exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine." They should "study to show" themselves approved of God, workmen that need not "be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." "Not self-willed," not greedy of "filthy lucre," sober, of good behavior, apt to teach. They should have a good report of them that are without. "In all things" they should be "a pattern of good works." "In doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity, sound speech that cannot be condemned, that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you." These are some of the requirements of a preacher, enjoined by the word of God, and one that walks by this rule will have an influence among the people for good.

A preacher that does not feel the responsibility of his position, may preach much truth, but will do but little good, unless he learn to bridle his tongue out of the pulpit. God requires much of a preacher, but I have sometimes thought the people required more. It is easy and very natural to mark out duties for others, and sometimes very pleasant, especially when we can make it the duty of others to perform that which tends to our comfort and happiness, without any regard to their desires. The people, many times, expect more of a preacher than is required—even more than is possible for him to perform; and then complain that he neglects duty. I frequently hear good christians tell what a preacher ought to do, and how he should live; and think within myself, a preacher that would come up to the mark should possess an uncommon degree of patience and willingness to sacrifice his own feelings and comfort to gratify the people. The standard raised by the people requires the preacher to be a perfect model of christianity, according to their views of what constitutes a christian in the minister; for he must be more of a christian than themselves. He must be cheerful and wear a pleasant face,—be glad to see the people at all times. It may happen that he has some trial on his mind; he may be weary with excessive labor; family sick; short of funds; it matters not, he must appear pleasant and cheerful. He must visit the people from house to house, and be able to make himself agreeable, and say a great many good things, answer many questions, hear all about some neighborhood quarrel, solve all the mysteries of his faith, and the faith of others. He must attend meeting, take the lead, do the praying and preaching—and it must be meat in due season; and that is, to preach just what they happen to like best. He must be willing to leave home and travel through the country and preach nearly every evening, visit every family, or some will feel slighted, and complain that the preacher is partial; and some that I know of make it a rule not to give the preacher anything unless he calls to visit them.

The people require that the preacher should be able to interest them; and to do that, he must study. They require all of his time in the day; hence he must study nights, while the people take their rest. He must be very economical in his expenses; must not drive a good horse; not dress as well as many that profess to follow the Bible. His family must contrive to live very cheap, &c. After the preacher is worn out and unable to preach, he must put his children out; his wife must take in work, and must go without many comforts that the people enjoy for whom he labored. He must not express any anxiety about a living; that would be backsliding. I have thought, that a preacher was somewhat like an old horse; while he can work and go at the bidding of the people, they are willing he should have enough to keep him alive; but after he is worn out in service, they turn him out as an old broken down horse, to pick his way the best he can.

Is it a pleasant calling? Yes. It is pleasant to serve the Master, to suffer with Christ. It is pleasant to preach the truth to people that are willing to do as well as to hear. It is pleasant to enjoy a good meeting with the good. It is pleasant to meet brethren that are brethren indeed. It is a pleasant work to be able to do something towards saving lost men. It is pleasant to have the testimony that your ways please God; but, not quite so pleasant to be deprived of the society at home; to [illegible], the cold storms, thinly clad. Not so pleasant to need food and raiment and no means to purchase. Not so pleasant to go to the calling of every one, or hear a [illegible] of fault finding. Not so pleasant to wear out in labor for others, and then [illegible]

Conference Report.

Again we have been permitted to meet in Conference. Our numbers were not so large as heretofore, nevertheless we had an interesting time. Because of bad roads, and the press of business, which at this time is very great, many of our brethren were detained at home. Help is scarce by reason of many going to the war, and the farmers are compelled to depend on their own hands to harvest their corn—thousands of acres yet standing ungathered. Our dear Bro. Spencer was prevented by sickness from meeting with us, much to our regret. From Wednesday until Sunday, the brethren came straggling in, like soldiers after a hard-fought field, and though many remained to take care of the stuff (rather more than we thought was necessary), yet God blessed us, praise his holy Name! Some came from a distance, leaving farms, shops, &c., and all to meet with those of like precious faith who are looking for the coming of Jesus unto eternal life.

Thursday eve., our meeting commenced with remarks from Bro. Clark. Other brethren participated, and we felt that it was not in vain that we had met together. Tuesday eve., sermon by the writer, showing that the coming of Christ would be literal, and the objections urged against our knowing anything about the time of his coming are not real, at which a sectarian preacher took great offence; but the Lord will reward him according to his works. Saturday morning, held a session of Conference. Minutes were read and accepted. Reports were heard from the churches.

Bro. Clark, from Amboy, said the cause is prospering there. Since the last conference two have been baptized and five joined the church. Bro. Wm. McCullock, from Bureau Co., a branch of the Amboy church, said prospects were encouraging, good meetings and good congregations,—an interest to sustain regular meetings. H. G. McCullock said the church at Shabbona are at peace and striving for the kingdom of God. Eight were baptized at the last conference, and quite a number have since joined the church. At Earlville the brethren are awake—some are taking a new interest there. Palo, Ogle Co. Bro. Royce said he wished there were more there that loved the Lord—a good many are interested. Deer Park. Bro. Arthur said the interest here is rather low; the cause has been wounded in the house of its friends; a few have nailed their colors to the mast head, and will face the storm. Bro. Man, of Ottawa, said, having been gone from the place, he was not prepared to say much about the cause there. A few still love the truth. Bro. Jewett, from Long Point, said they had a church of about forty or fifty members—interest to hear great; prospects encouraging. Bro. Calkins is laboring in this section of country. Has more calls than he can fill.

Bro. Royce, of Palo, Ogle Co., was here recommended to the churches as a laborer in word and doctrine. A letter from Bro. Thos. Smith, of Vandalia, Fayette Co., was read, in which he proposed uniting with the Conference, and being ordained; but owing to our small representation, it was thought best, after a better acquaintance by letter, or through the Crisis by brethren East, to ordain him, as he wishes to be soon, and at our next meeting receive him into the Conference.

Owing to hard times and bad going, we thought it best to postpone our next quarterly meeting until our Annual Conference, which we intend shall be a general gathering of the scattered flock. Accordingly we adjourned, to meet again at Amboy, Lee Co., the last Wednesday in May, 1862.

In the afternoon we listened to remarks by Bro. King, of Knox Co., on the necessity of being led by the Spirit. This brother came seventy miles to present himself to the Conference to be ordained. Bringing strong testimony in regard to his character, his request was complied with. He is now a school teacher; was educated at Oberlin College, Ohio. In the evening, Bro. Wm. McCullock preached on the signs of the times.

Sunday morning, Bro. King was ordained. Bro. Wm. McCullock and Bro. Calkins officiated, Bro. Calkins giving the charge, after which a sermon was preached by the writer from Paul's charge to Timothy,—"Preach the word"—to which an intelligent congregation listened with attention. Eve., sermon by Bro. Wm. McCullock, on the time of rewards and punishments.

Monday morning we parted with the children. All had been done that could be to make our stay in Deer Park pleasant and profitable. Thank God for that meeting. New friends were found,—the union between the churches strengthened. The cause is onward in this section of the west. God is sending laborers into the field. There are now eight preachers connected with the conference, and we hope many more will be if the Master tarries a little while. I have baptized and assisted in baptising twenty since our first conference. Quite a number have been reclaimed, and many interested in the great truths of the Bible, as the result of our labors and conference meetings.

To all let me say, be of good cheer, the day breaketh—the Master cometh to dry your tears, to banish your sorrows, to give you life and immortality. Then there will be everlasting rest for the weary. O sinner! what will be your portion then? Fly! oh fly to Jesus! Now the arm of justice is uplifted, but mercy stays the blow; yet not forever. Escape for thy life through Christ the living way.

A Happy New Year.

We most heartily wish all our readers "a happy new year" in the Lord. Would that we could take you all by the hand and speak the words with our own lips. We long for the day to come when we shall greet you all in the everlasting kingdom. Well, it is evident we are not to wait long before the glad day will arrive. Praise the Lord for the blessed prospect now before us. While the men of the world tremble with fear "for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," the child of the Lord is confirmed and strengthened in his heart-cheering expectation of soon seeing the one who died to save him.

The year just passed has been filled with many startling events, but we may expect greater ones before we can wish our dear friends another "happy new year." If Jesus does not come, many who read these lines will be sleeping in death before twelve months are past, and loved ones will be left to weep around your grave, as you may have done in the year just closed. Vacant seats are in many desolated homes, where, one year ago, sat a venerable sire, a lovely companion, a beautiful child, whose voice is heard no more to say, "I wish you a happy new year." The cold, wintry winds moan around their graves, while the mourner's tear speaks in gentle tones, they are not forgotten. But thank the Lord, the day is at hand when we can greet them again with no painful fears of another separation. Let us, who are now alive, firmly resolve, in the strength of the Lord, that we will live better the remainder of our lives than we have ever done in the past. Let us avoid all unkind words in our families and elsewhere, keep all evil imaginations from our minds, speak evil of no man, have no evil surmisings, use no vain words, avoid all jesting, waste no time, improve every opportunity for doing good; in short, keep "unspotted from the world," and thus be prepared for the great events which are about to burst upon a wicked world. Now is the time to watch. He who sleeps perils his hope of eternal life.—G.

Conference at Poultney.

Our conference at Poultney has been one of deep profit and interest. It commenced Wednesday evening, Dec. 18th, and continued through the week and over the Lord's day. Brn. S. G. Mathewson, Matthew Batchelor, Ira Morgan, J. Parry, and J. Austin were present to assist in preaching the word. A goodly number of brethren and sisters came in from Castleton, Low Hampton, Sandy Hill, Hebron, Mt. Holly and Bristol, who rendered efficient aid in the meetings, by means of their testimonies, prayers and songs.

A large number of those from other towns had been members of other churches, and several of them had for years occupied official relations in the various denominations with which they had been connected. We were particularly struck with one peculiar feature of their testimony, in which they all harmonized; to wit, that they never loved so well, felt such strong confidence in it, loved God so fervently, nor stood so firmly in the christian's hope, before they believed in the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, as they have since. Now, all looks plain and harmonius, where it was formerly darkness and obscurity. Before receiving these truths they were troubled with doubts, and fears, which were often a source of unhappiness, causing gloomy hours, and trembling hopes. But now, they felt not a "shadow of a doubt," consequently, the future appeared all light. They expressed their astonishment that they should have been blinded so long, when the truth on these points was so simple and plain. It seemed a wonder to them, as it does to us, that everybody did not see it.

The brethren and sisters at Poultney were much cheered and strengthened while listening to these hearty testimonies from those who had more experience. It was just what they needed to assist them in meeting the tide of opposition, which many of them have to endure. There is a noble company of christians at Poultney, who are pressing for the kingdom. They are expecting to be favored with the pastoral labors of Bro. H. F. Carpenter, to commence early in the coming year. This church is grounded in the great truths of the Bible, and able to give an intelligent reason of their hope. They love the appearing of Jesus, and are hoping for his speedy coming.

Our conference closed up very pleasantly around the communion table. Some sixty or seventy sat down to commemorate the sufferings of the Lord. We felt it good to be there. Some who had met with us on such occasions are now quietly sleeping in Jesus, unconscious of the bloody strife which is raging upon our planet. To them, the storm is all past. Their sorrows are ended. Soon they will awake in bright glory. We felt determined, in the strength of the Lord, to be ready to meet them in the morning of the resurrection.

Our meeting was so profitable to those present, they have concluded to have them quarterly in this section. The next one is to be at Sandy Hill, some time in February, the Lord willing. Much good is anticipated from these quarterly gatherings. In these last days we need all the help we can obtain. The perils increase every hour, but the Lord is the hope of his people. He will conduct them safely through the last struggle. Let us all trust in him without any reserve.—G.

Foolish Virgins.

There are few passages destined to be more painfully realized than that scripture that portrays the final destiny of the class of christians denominated "foolish virgins," in the 25th of St. Matthew's gospel. Of high profession, and once of Pisgah's-top enjoyment, and of still higher hopes, they are next worldly, earthly, and perhaps sensual; then comes indifference, and finally moral insensibility. To such a person all moral standards are found in themselves; if not in a godly life, they are in their knowledge, and not far from being realized in their lives, themselves being judges; and yet, according to their own confession—while they are always assured they are as good as the next, they have to confess they fail of complying fully with the requirements of the gospel. They nevertheless are of that class who once took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom; and still they do not renounce their former opinions; pride of opinion forbids they should "give up"; they never will give up; they have joined the class that went forth to meet the Bridegroom, and with them they will be found in the day of judgment. The moral qualities requisite for steadfastness, they possess in a superior degree. With these praiseworthy qualities, it is not surprising that they often exhibit great wisdom in engineering the common cause; and yet the wisdom exhibited is earthly; but little of the mind of the Spirit seems to appertain to them; it is not so specially God's will as their own they seek to carry out. Some fall into open sins; and others not openly criminated are full of spiritual lawlessness, being covetous, evil surmisers, full of envy, slanderers, and haters of mankind. While others again, with the acquirement of a superior civilization (commonly called education), are courteous, but self-willed and proud. And yet others there are who, while exhibiting but few of the blemishes enumerated, are full of spiritual pride. They delight in nothing so much as to prate against all sects and everybody of "a corrupt faith," or who do not yield unqualified assent to their own infallible teachings: they love controversy, and think gain in this matter is godliness. They are the "defenders of the faith." In fine, they are Pharisees; never smiting upon their breasts, unless to be seen of men, and always making manifest, "I am more holy than others."

But while these are features characterizing the unfaithful of all ages, and so necessarily comprehending those of the last generation of men, there are peculiar and unmistakable marks characterizing the foolish virgins of Matthew 25. Among these we may mention as specially prominent, first, their indisposition to communicate the truth. Their "lamps have gone out." Though with those who are the light of the world, they are not of them. They have ceased to communicate and fasten home, by a devoted christian life, the searching and saving truths of the gospel; and specially of that portion which relates to the coming of the Bridegroom. The good things of a self-denying life, are to them "among the things that were." They see the signs of the Lord's speedy advent, but though rapidly accumulating, like storm-clouds on the horizon, they see them only as were seen "men as trees walking," all unconscious of what are the real facts signified by them. They are weary; they slumber; they sleep. Nor are they ever to be awakened until the Bridegroom comes, when in vain they cry, "open unto us." O God, save us from their folly!

Another, and equally unmistakable characteristic is, the want of spiritual light and comfort. Make what they will to be signified by "oil in their vessels," no fair interpretation can make it mean other than what is uniformly meant by the same expression when similarly used throughout the Scriptures, namely, the Holy Ghost. It is the Spirit witnessing "with our spirit" (Rom. 8 16); the ever-abiding Comforter. "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us" (ib. 5: 5.) It is the immediate source and fountain of all spiritual joy. And few things are more true, or more alarming, than are the following facts:

1st. The common confession that there is a great, a painful lack of spiritual enjoyment. Men who have once tasted the good things of the kingdom of God, voluntarily say that, while they think they have increased in divine knowledge, they have lacked the spiritual joy they once had. The confession is tantamount to saying that, while unconscious perhaps of the reasons, the joy and the love, which cannot be realised but by the Holy Ghost, is wanting. Painful confession—but how common!

2d. Of all the apostacies and departures from the faith, few have been more grievous than that witnessed among the present generation of men, in the denial of the Holy Ghost. Men deny the personality of Satan, and then perhaps, of the Holy Ghost; and finally, and legitimately, they deny all spiritual existence, and land in the regions of a cold, blank materialism, where the finite thinks to comprehend the infinite, and man, boasting of his knowledge, thinks to find out God to perfection—and that he is like unto one of us. They have "a form of godliness, denying the power thereof. From such turn away."

To these might be added other characteristics; but 'tis enough. We know our position in the prophetic chart. God help us to know ourselves! —M.

Faith made popular.—To add to the perils of the last days—at least so far as they affect ourselves as a people—the distinguishing features of our faith have assumed a popular aspect, that, to a certain extent, supersedes the necessity of bearing a cross that was once inseparable with the confession of faith in the speedy coming of Christ. The "undefinable impression abroad upon all spirits of a coming crisis," forbids that any sober-minded or thoughtful person should speak lightly of an event which no human being knows will not come, and which so many learned and God-fearing men are assured will come shortly.

This is no new phase of Christianity. Christ was once speedily changed from the position of the humble and almost unknown and despised Nazarene, to that of a triumphant Lord entering Jerusalem amid the shouts and cheers of thousands. Christianity to-day, limited perhaps to a hundred and twenty disciples in an upper chamber, to-morrow has added in the same city three thousand souls, and the day following two thousand more. But let us remember with trembling of heart, that this was only preparatory to being scattered abroad and persecuted everywhere. The facts contemplated should serve to humble us, and lead us to prayer and watchfulness lest while we think we stand, we fall; dreaming we have already achieved the victory, and so be overwhelmed and destroyed by the enemy. "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets."—M.

What the Demons say.

Direct demoniacal teaching is now very common, and is passing quite current among men. This is the time when thousands and millions are "giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." But few seem to be aware of the extent of their powerful influence. They are undermining the whole foundation of popular christianity. They have already so far succeeded, that if those holding more or less of their sentiments were expelled from the fashionable churches of the day, they would become only an ecclesiastical wreck. We have evidently arrived at the period foretold by Paul, when we must "turn away," and rally around the standard of truth. This sad result has been accomplished through a belief in the immortality of the soul. When men see the plain Bible doctrine that "a dead man" is unconscious, and consequently can make no communications, they are securely guarded against the great anti-christian system of Spiritualism, Swedenborgianism, Shakerism and Catholicism. It seems strange that so many, who have once seen the light and enjoyed the blessings of Christianity, should be led astray by the monstrous delusion of Spiritualism. But the Lord foresaw it, foretold it, and it has come to pass, thus proving the truth of the Bible, and also that we are "in the last days."

The following are some of the sayings of the demons, as believed by their millions of followers. When speaking of the spirit of man, one says:—

"The spirit, as a principle, is ever perfect—no more so to-day than it will be thousands of years in the future; no more so thousands of years in the past, than it is to-day. When we speak of spirit, we mean that part that is the God."

In the Spiritual conference at Clinton Hall, Oct. 22d, 1861, one of the speakers, Mrs. Syme, when referring to the spirit of man, said, as reported in the Banner of Light, that it is

"The only God that can be known, or that we have any occasion to know. In this deity, the Trinity becomes a scientific truth; for he consists of an intellectual front-head—a back-head, the seat of his affectional nature—and the coronal region, which is his spiritual part. This constitutes the God within man. . . . I have discovered that man is Lord within himself. We are ourselves all the God we need."

It will be seen that this is in harmony with what Satan taught our first parents in the garden of Eden, about six thousand years ago,—"Ye shall be as gods,"—only that he has persuaded them now that they are gods. This is one of the sure signs of the anti-christ, for he is to deny "the Father and the Son." This is just what Spiritualism is doing, but the Papists acknowledged both.

At the Boston Spiritual Conference, Nov. 29, 1861, the question was agitated, "What and where is God?" In answer to this inquiry, Mr. Jacob Edson is reported to have said—

"If we look for God in Nature, wherever we look we see him; wherever [illegible] we find him; and we learn that in whatever we do we obey him, and wherever we are we are in him. . . . Every person, everything that has existence is one with God . . . In this view of God, he is everywhere."

Dr. Gardner remarked, "We may call the vast material universe the body of God." It will be noticed that this is Pantheism; but no more so, than the popular teaching of the day, which defines God as a being, "whose circumference is everywhere and centre nowhere."—G.

Napoleon III.

The present Emperor of France is the man of wonder to all the world. It appears evident that the part he has yet to play in the closing scene of earth's drama is an important one. We think the evidence is very strong which shows him to be, with his associates, the eighth head of the beast of Rev. 17. As certainly as this is true, we are near the great day of the Lord; for when the eighth head appears, it is the last one and is to go to perdition with the "woman," which represents the ecclesiastical power on "the seven hills" at Rome. We think we may safely say, we are living in the last generation of the christian dispensation, and very near its close. Old men can now expect to live till Jesus comes. What a "blessed hope" is ours. How cheering amid the Sodom-like scenes that surround us. Let every believer stand firmly for the right till the Deliverer comes.

An exchange paper, when speaking of Napoleon III says:—

"This enigma sits at the heart of his puzzle again, and nobody on this side of the Atlantic can tell what to make of him. We hear it said that he has been formally petitioned by a committee of the National Legislature to extend recognition to the Southern Confederacy, and thus end the war on this continent; and there are well informed persons who really think he is about to do so, at whatever cost to our own pride or interests. But we may count with certainty on one thing in connection with such a step; he will hardly dare to take it without the aid and alliance of England. Thus assured and strengthened, he will probably feel that he could make so bold a move on the chess-board of national politics, with impunity. Our newspapers reason it out—and they do it unanswerably, too, just as they did the certain defeat of the rebels at the Bull Run engagement—that neither England nor France can afford to provoke the United States Government to open hostilities by measures of this kind, since they cannot do without our grain during the coming winter, nor can they afford to lose their profitable trade with the North.

But, for all this, it would surprise us but little to find that we were placed in just such a fix by the combined action of England and France, at a not indefinite time in the future. They think they know their own interest best, of course; and if they prefer taking one risk to enduring another, it will clearly be for them to settle their own account.

Much depends, just at this time, on the nod of Napoleon. We can now see what vast power one man may come to have, by the mere force of circumstances, and himself a circumstance among the rest, over the destinies of the civilised world. What Napoleon may conclude upon, is going to have a great influence upon our national future, both as it regards our stability and our progress. Not that Napoleon's direct influence on us will ever be much, but he has the power of playing out such deeds in the game of national chances, as shall give shape and direction to our affairs for generations to come. We can but watch and wait, at any rate."

The Regiment of Spiritualists.

We have thrown out a few hints on the "Spiritualist regiment" which is being formed and is to be commanded by Spiritualists, who are under the direction of the spirits. The following from the Banner of Light, a well-known Spiritualist paper, will give the reader some idea of the movement. The Editor says:—

"We have been able to glean a few facts in relation to this corps, which we give our readers. We learn that the regiment will be commanded by a well-known Spiritualist and medium, whose thoughts are often communicated through the columns of the Banner. He is the grandson of two of the most heroic patriots and officers of the revolutionary army; he is both a college and military graduate, and has served in all capacities up to a field-officer. The Lieutenant Colonel is a Spiritualist, [illegible] Massachusetts man, who has commanded one of the divisions of the Massachusetts militia. The Major is a hero of the German and Hungarian wars, and a gentleman of refined manners and collegiate education. The Adjutants, Captains and Lieutenants are mostly Spiritualists. Some of them are powerful physical mediums, all gentlemen of military experience, good intelligence and courteous bearing. The Surgeon and Chaplain compare favorably with any in the service. The Chaplain, Mr. [illegible], is well-known to all old Spiritualists. [illegible] Clark, of [illegible], whose [illegible] [illegible] commission and seeks a company entirely made up from the Spiritualist ranks. He is one of our subscribers; and he is a practical man, a thorough Spiritualist, and good medium—a farmer by profession, though adapted to lay hold of whatever may seem most necessary for the time. We have no doubt but this regiment of mediums or spiritual batteries, unintentionally to itself, may become one of the most marked objects of the campaign. We think it belongs to the Spiritualists to take up this subject with energy. . . . It is from and through Spiritualism that the light must come, whose brightness shall serve as the morning star that is to herald the dawn of the day of universal freedom. A beautiful design for a banner will be furnished by the unseen world, if a company of ladies or gentlemen will furnish the means to obtain the material and pay a moderate sum to an artist for painting it. It would not surprise us at all to find growing out of this movement a brigade of determined men who have no cause to fear death, and who will be commanded by some mind that would receive inspirations calculated to accomplish a more decisive work than any yet in the field seem capable of accomplishing."

Bro. Howell.

We learn from Sr. Howell that our dear Bro. Howell is slowly traveling to the grave, where he will enjoy a peaceful rest till Jesus comes. The following extract from a private letter from Sr. Howell, will show that Bro. H. is near the close of life's toilsome journey:—G.

"Dear Bro. Grant:—My husband [illegible] failing, but his courage is good. He seems to think he may get better, notwithstanding his feet are both swelling. His mind is calm and prayerful; feels his unworthiness, but trusts in God. . . . I feel, Bro. Grant, that the cup I must soon drink of, will be a bitter one. How can I drink it? O that I may be willing to suffer God's will as well as to do it. This is a poor, dark world. I am glad Jesus is coming. I mean to devote my life more than ever to the service of God. I feel weaned from earth. Every earthly hope is about to be cut off."

Theology of the Present Day.

At the Old South chapel a few days since, a man arose and said he had for a number of years past been studying for the ministry, and this was his last year in college; but he felt his country called him to take up arms in its defence, and he had enlisted, happy to fight for liberty and for his Master also. Another one said that those who fell in this conflict were in every sense martyrs as much as those who suffered death for Christ.

"Thessalonica; or, the Model Church."—The author takes St. Paul's commendation of the ancient Church of Thessalonica as a text to reprove what he considers the mistakes and short comings of churches of the present day. He follows out with skill and force the details of the Apostle's approval of this church, and compares it with the action of modern organizations.—Boston Advertiser.

Human Ghostology.—No. 1.

1.—Origin of the soul.

Since it is claimed that every man has an invisible ghost within, existing as a distinct entity, often styled soul or spirit, it may not be improper to inquire into the origin of this imaginary gentleman, whom, we are told, is immortal, and continues to live after the external man dies; for if it is true that man is inhabited by such an unseen entity, it must be obvious that it has an origin. Concerning this matter, one of the following positions must be conceded:—

First: It is transmitted, or,— Secondly: It is created at birth, or,—
Thirdly: It had a pre-existence.

Which of the above three positions will the supporters of ghostology prefer? They must necessarily take one of the three, for another position cannot exist. Either of the three would involve them in trouble.

1st. If the soul is transmitted, it is divisible; and if divisible, it is destructible; hence, not immortal!! When the claim is made that the soul is transmitted, the claim to its immortality is cut off.

2nd. If the soul is created at birth, Jehovah must be daily and hourly employed in creating souls, not only for legal children, but even for illegitimates; thus would God be charged with directly sanctioning adultery. What blasphemy! Moreover, it is claimed that children are born into the world at the rate of eighty-two thousand per day; and it is usually admitted that over half of the human race will finally be damned; hence, if souls are created at birth, God daily creates over forty thousand souls for hell!!! Will it be said that perhaps God did not foresee this result when he engaged in the enterprise? Well, waiving the question of his foreknowledge, I candidly inquire, would he persist in this work, after a protracted experience, with the awful result staring him constantly in the face? What! God daily creating thousands of immortal entities, to be damned—knowing even from a long trial that they will be damned—incapable of dying, and eternally suffering? Who dare thus slander Jehovah? Can any living man believe that God is daily creating undying entities, both legitimate and illegitimate children, as fast as they are born, knowing that the majority of them will endlessly writhe in hopeless misery?

3d. If the pre-existence of the soul, as an entity, is true, God must keep a vast reservoir of souls, or ghostly entities, to imprison in tenements of clay. Why not permit them then to remain in that bright realm, instead of imprisoning them where they will get stained with sin, and the majority of them at last plunge into dark damnation? If souls have a pre-existence, our souls must be very old; for if this doctrine is true, they were all made before the creation of Adam, or else God has created a quantity at a time! If our souls were pre-existing intelligences, why do we not remember our former existence? If we have lived for ages in realms of felicity, strange indeed that we cannot recall to mind some of the pleasing and happy scenes of our past history; and stranger still that God should drive us away from that bright realm to this dark and sinful region. Again: this would lay the foundation of the doctrine of transmigration, as they are said to return again to the same reservoir, after being released from their imprisonment, (if good,) and therefore might be imprisoned again in another tenement! Which position is correct? I boldly take the position that the soul (not in a sense of ghostly entity,) is transmitted: "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls." Exk. 1: 5. If transmitted, it is divisible; if divisible, it is destructible; therefore not immortal.

Obituary Notices.

Died, Dec. 23d, 1861, in Castleton, Vt., of diphtheria, HENRY GRAHAM, son of John Graham, aged nine years.

Henry was a thoughtful and pious boy. He was preserved from the sinful ways of most young persons in these times of youthful degeneracy. When it became evident he must die, he received the intelligence with calmness and resignation. He said he would like to live if it were the Lord's will; "but, said he, "it may be that I might sin again if I should live, and I better go now. I am reconciled and ready." And so he died happy in his Savior's love.

Before his death, he talked much with his father. At one time he referred to the passage in Job, "If a man die, shall he live again?" His father explained this with the light of the New Testament, which gave him much joy, as he would soon come up in the resurrection at the coming of the Savior. He selected from the Lyre the hymns he wanted sung at his funeral. One was—

"It is the hour of Time's farewell,
And soon with Jesus we shall dwell."

The other—

"My home is in heaven, my rest is not here."

I attended the funeral with Dr. Smith. Bro. Graham is greatly afflicted, as, in addition to the death of this son, two more of his children lie at the point of death. But he and his family are greatly supported by the "blessed hope" in this dark hour of sickness and death. May the Lord be gracious and spare his remaining children. J. V. H.

Died, in Danielsonville, Ct., Dec. 18th, of brain fever, ALLIE M., daughter of Charles and Ann Eliza Bennett, aged five years.

The cup of affliction has been pressed very closely to the lips of this dear family for the last thirteen months. Charlie and Allie, then living, the joy and promise of parental hearts, now lie in death's embrace, while for the last eight months the father has suffered much from protracted illness, which threatens even yet his life. But One who is closer than a brother—One who never, never leaves—One who would comfort all that mourn, has been near them to succor and support; and looking into the fiery furnace through which they now are passing, He seems to say, "I have chosen them in the furnace of affliction." Cheered by this hope, well may they say,

"Give joy or grief, give ease or pain,
Take life or friends away;
But let me find them all again
In that eternal day." R. F. C.

Danielsonville, Ct., Dec. 23d, '61.

Died, in Corina, Me., Nov. 4, 1861, ORLANDO, son of Samuel Polley, aged 17 years and four months.

Sermon by Eld. John Billings, from Gal. 3: 26.

Bro. Pollen has also lost a grandson, aged five years and eleven months.

Again be has been afflicted by the loss of his daughter CYNTHIA, who died Dec. 9th, aged 19 years and eleven months.

Bro. Polly has been a preacher of the gospel something like twenty years, and a few years past a decided believer in the sleep of the dead and soon coming of the Lord. Bro. and Sr. Polly have much to comfort them in this hour of affliction, as both of his children gave good evidence of their acceptance with God. So they are comforted with the blessed hope of Jesus' coming to raise the dead. Sermon by the writer from Isa. 40: 6–8.

ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Died, near Edinboro, Erie Co., Penn., Nov. 21st, of disease of the brain, at the residence of his grandparents, Adin Wait, EZRA N. WAIT, only son of Levi Wait, aged eleven months and twenty-three days.

His mother died of consumption when he was about three months old. He was a lovely child, and dearly loved by them all; but they, together with his bereaved father, three little sisters and other friends, must bid adieu to little Ezra.

Bro. J. Goodwin, for the edification and consolation of the friends, spoke from the words, "Jesus died and arose again from the dead, that he might be Lord both of the dead and the living. C. C. WAIT.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Aug. 31st, 1861, DAVID S. BLOOD, of Houghtonville, Vt., aged 35 years.

He has left a wife and two children to mourn his loss. He died in the belief of no eternal life only through Christ.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Niagara we have advices from Liverpool to Dec. 14th, and Queenstown the 15th.

ENGLAND.

The British war vessel Cadmus had arrived off St. Thomas, to protect vessels against another Trent affair.

The attitude of and preparations by England show no change.

English ship owners were adopting a system for their outward bound vessels to communicate to passing English ships that there was a prospect of war with the United States. They also resolved to form a society for mutual assurance against war risks.

Orders have been issued for the hasty manufacture of 2000 pack saddles and a proportionate number of ambulance wagons and carts, to be sent to Canada.

Gen. Scott's sudden return home was the theme of much speculation. It is generally reported that he had some sort of a mission from the French Government to the Washington Cabinet. The London Herald's Paris correspondent says he had a long interview with M. Thouvenal, the French Foreign Minister, before his departure. The general impression in the financial circles of London was that he carried out a momentous communication from the French Government.

It is estimated that about 12,000 troops are to be sent to Canada, who will be ready to take the field immediately on landing.

The command in chief of the forces in Canada will remain in the hands of Sir Fenwick Williams.

No additional orders were issued on the 13th for regiments to be held in readiness. No cavalry or horse artillery will go to Canada before Spring. Preparations are represented as on a scale which would have astonished people before the Crimean war.

FRANCE.

The monthly statement of the Bank of France shows an increase of cash in hand of nearly forty million francs.

It is stated that Prince Napoleon continued to argue against the recognition of the Southern Confederacy, and that be was instrumental in causing Gen. Scott's departure for Washington.

ITALY.

The eruption of Vesuvius continued. Houses were falling in Torre del Greco and the village was in imminent danger of destruction by lava. All communication between places in the vicinity of the mountain had been interrupted. Earthquakes were numerous, and in the Bay of Naples the sea had reached 50 metres.

The Dublin Meeting.

The London Times represents the anti-war meeting in Dublin as densely crowded and enthusiastic, but as a "democratic affair." O'Donoghue, M. P., presided. In the course of his remarks he said:

"It seems to me, fellow-countrymen, that a crisis in the history of the world is approaching, and that we are about to witness, perhaps to participate in (loud cheers,) events which shall determine the fate of nations, and serve as landmarks to future ages. It is, then, our duty at such a crisis, since England is resolved to go to war with the Northern States of America—if she can—it is clearly our duty to decide what course we shall take. (cheers.) This is our duty, provided we do not feel bound to do as England pleases (shouts of 'Never!') irrespective of our own interests, sympathies and national prejudices. If, however, we do not feel entitled to take an independent course—if we are bound to do as England pleases. (cries of 'no, no!') well, I say, if we do—suppose we do feel bound, in that case we have no business here; for the intentions of England are as plain as the sun at noon day.

England is aware of the unfortunate state of things in America, and imagines that she would have no great difficulty in crushing the Northern States. This may not be so easily done. (Shouts of 'Bravo!' waving of hats and tremendous cheering.) Nevertheless, England is impressed with the notion of her superior strength. Now, I am perfectly certain that the people, if, as it is sometimes said, Ireland is really nothing more than a part of England ('No, no!')—if, as it is sometimes said, that Irishmen are in fact Englishmen in every respect (cries of 'Never!') except the accident of birth, then I suppose we will in that case follow the example of London, Liverpool, Manchester and Birmingham, and cry, 'War, war! Down with the stripes and stars!' (Shouts of 'Never!' and loud cheers for 'The Yankees.')

Then I suppose I am right in supposing that this is not an indignation meeting (cheers); that we are not met here like abject sycophants to echo the sounds of English wrath, and that we are met here as Irishmen to consult for the safety of Ireland. (Yells and groans.) Now, I am perfectly certain that the great majority of Irishmen will object to contribute either men or money for the purpose of enabling England to make war with the Northern States. (Enthusiastic cheering.) At the same time I am perfectly confident that the very contrary will be said in addresses emanating from corporations (hisses,) Poor Law guardians, town commissioners, and other sources, which almost invariably misrepresent our opinions."

The other speeches were in the same strain.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Slidell and Mason to be Surrendered.

Washington, Dec. 28. The Administration has decided to release Slidell and Mason. Mr. Seward and Lord Lyons were in conference this morning in regard to the manner in which the rebel Commissioners should be given up.

The decision of the President in the Trent affair, as announced in the dispatch of Secretary Seward, has the approval of every member of the Cabinet. The Intellegencer, in an article apparently semi-official, says:

"Whatever may be the disappointment of any at the result to which the Administration has come in settling a question constitutionally devolved upon the Executive branch of the government, we are sure all will applaud the firmness and sincerity in which the Administration, resisting a natural tendency suppressed by the conceited drift of public opinion in our own country, has resolved to do what it believes to be right in the premises, and it surely should give cause to all who may be disposed to challenge the propriety of the resolution to which the administration has come, when they note that a contrary decision could leave us in opposition not only to the views of Great Britain, but also to those which the Government of France has expressed respecting the principles of public law involved in this transaction.

The Intelligencer says in conclusion: "Whatever, therefore, may be said by any in the way of exception to the extreme terms of the demand made by the British in the case of the Trent, it is at least just to admit that the case has been so adjusted by our government as to subserve, we hope, the great cause of neutral rights against the assumptions heretofore asserted by England, but now repudiated by that power in common with France and the United States.

The law of nations, as traditionally interpreted by our Government, has received a new sanction though at the cost, it may be, of some national sensibilities waked into disproportionate activity by the temporary exacerbations of our civil feuds. The latter, let us remember, are but for a day. The law of nations is for all time."

DEPARTURE OF MASON AND SLIDELL.

We are informed that orders have been received from Lord Lyons at Washington, by the commander of the Royal Mail steamer Niagara, which arrived at Boston on Saturday last, the 28th inst., to prepare for an instant return to Europe with Messrs. Mason and Slidell as special passengers. The steamer will sail direct for Liverpool, and it is probable that her coal will be got on board by Tuesday, 31st, on which day she will take her departure.—Boston Journal.

New York, Dec. 27. A letter from Port Royal reports the occupation of Fenwick Island by our troops, extending our lines to South Edisto river, thirty-five miles from Charleston.

Gen. Scott remains here. He sent letters to Secretary Seward last night.

St Louis, Dec. 27 The following is a resume of the present military operations in Missouri, obtained from a reliable source. Within the last two weeks the Union army has captured 2500 rebels, including about 70 commissioned officers, 1200 horses and mules, 1100 stand of arms, 2 tons of powder, 100 wagons, and an immense amount of commissary stores and camp equipage. A large foundry at Lexington used by the rebels for casting cannon, shot and shells, most of the rebel craft on the Missouri, including ferry boats, have been destroyed or captured. A pretty clean sweep has been made of the whole country between the Missouri and Osage rivers, and Gen. Price, cut off from all supplies and recruits from North Missouri, is in full retreat for Arkansas with his army, having passed through Springfield on Monday last. Our loss in accomplishing these important results did not exceed one hundred killed and wounded.

Palmyra, Mo., 29th. Yesterday General Prentiss, with 450 men, encountered and dispersed 900 rebels under Col. Dorsey at Mount Zion, Boone county, killing and wounding 150, and capturing 35 prisoners, 95 horses, and 105 guns. Our loss was only 8 killed and 11 wounded.

The rebels burned another train on the North Missouri Railroad yesterday, and they say they intend to burn all the cars on the road, so as to prevent its being used.

Quincy, Ill., 28th. The bridges over the Fabins and North rivers, on the Palmyra Railroad, were set on fire by the rebels last night and destroyed.

Washington, Dec. 28. The settlement of the Trent affair affords much gratification among all conservative and prominent Union-loving men. Whatever may have been their previous opinions on the subject, they regard the adjustment as removing a serious impediment in the prosecution of hostilities against the insurgents, and as depriving the enemy of the strength which they would have derived from a war between the United States and Great Britain, and possibly with France. There is a generally expressed acquiescence in the course of the government, while the dispatches of Secretary Seward are viewed in the light of the highest statesmanlike ability.

On Tuesday, 24th, an order went from the Ordnance Department to three of the largest cannon founders in the country, viz., one in Pittsburg, one at West Point, and Alger's in Boston, to manufacture to their utmost capacity 10-inch columbiads for the next twelve months. Their present make would in that time yield eighteen hundred guns. Contracts for immense quantities of guns of small ordnance, arms and shot and shell, have been made this week.

Fortress Monroe, Dec. 23. A flag of truce brings Norfolk papers of Monday. They contain a dispatch from Nashville announcing that 9000 Federal troops had crossed Green river and were marching upon Hopkinsville, where Gen. Clark had 3500 rebels and was waiting reinforcements from Clarksville.

Advices from Bowling Green say that 17,000 Federals crossed Green river on Friday.

It was supposed that Bowling Green would be advanced upon from three sides simultaneously by 60,000 Federals, and that a decisive battle would be fought.

A dispatch from Savannah says that seven vessels of the stone fleet were sunk in Charleston channel on Friday.

New York, 30th. The Times despatch has the following:—From a gentleman who has just returned from Richmond we learn the following interesting facts: The rebels have great confidence that they would defeat the Union troops in a fair field, and that it is impossible for them to be conquered. They declare, rather than come again into the Union, the South would become a province of England.

The New York banks suspended specie payments this morning. They decided to do so at a late hour Saturday night. The final vote was 25 to 15 for suspension.

The World's Washington despatch says that the manner in which Mason and Slidell are to be given up has been left to Lord Lyons, who will doubtless have it done in the manner least offensive to this Government. They will probably be put on board the steamer America, which sails from New York next Wednesday, and which will, it is understood, be required to stop at Boston.

Philadelphia, 30th, Our banks have suspended, in consequence of the suspension in New York.

NOTES ON THE REBELLION.—Thurlow Weed writes from Europe to the Albany Journal that George L. Schuyler, the agent of the U. S. Government, has obtained from the government arsenals in Austria and Saxony over one hundred thousand rifles, equal to any in the world. These arms are now on their way to America.

The difficulty of providing forage for so large an army as that of the Potomac, is said to be increasing daily, notwithstanding the immense stores at Washington. The whole country this side of Fairfax Court House, says a Washington letter in the N. Y. Express, has been nearly exhausted already, in addition to the enormous supplies furnished by the Quartermaster General from the North. Still the cry is "for more." How will it be, then, when the army is advanced twenty miles further into the bowels of Virginia, where the Confederates have already cropped every kind of herbage so close as to leave hardly enough, per acre, to afford a good browse for a goat? Napoleon's army in Russia was destroyed, not by the frosts of winter, but primarily by the loss of his horses, and consequently, of transportation, through want of forage,

It is stated that at least three hundred incompetent officers of the army of the Potomac have resigned since the 1st of September.—Boston Journal.

AN EARTHQUAKE AT ARLINGTON HIGHTS.—On Sunday night, about one o'clock, several of the soldiers in Camp Leslie, Arlington Hights, were startled by a terrific noise, as if a whole regiment of cavalry were charging through the camp at full speed. The ground trembled and the whole camp was aroused. It proved to be an earthquake; its usual rumbling sound being aided by the frantic pawing and jumping of every horse in the camp. Many of the horses broke loose, and all were severely shocked; some of them fell to the ground, and altogether there was the wildest confusion ever yet seen in camp life.—N. Y. Commercial.

— A letter written from Naples says that marks of growing prosperity meet the traveler at every step throughout Italy, and that gold was never so plenty there as now.

CANADIAN SYMPATHY.—The following extract from a business letter which we have received yesterday from a town in Canada, shows that there is an undercurrent of sympathy with this Republic, notwithstanding the belligerent tone of the Bobadils of the press:—Boston Journal.

"———, C. E., Dec. 20.

In times of excitement like the present, when all nations are watching the progress of your movements with the deepest anxiety, it becomes every individual to keep himself as well informed as the times will admit. Believing, as I do, that every true Canadian sympathizes with you in your struggle for national existence, I herewith inclose ten dollars, for which you will please to send eleven copies of the Weekly Journal.

Great excitement prevails here on account of the course England has taken. I truly believe that if England should join the South, you could rely on fifty thousand men who would join the Northern army. I sincerely hope that success will attend honest Abe's government."

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at ONCE the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than ANY TRACT SOCIETY in the COUNTRY, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in TRACTS, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

To Correspondents.

W. Nichols, the work referred to is very scarce. Do not know where it can be found. It was "published by a society for promoting christian knowledge and the practice of virtue, by the distribution of books." It is an English work.—G.

Bro. T. W. Smith, have the work on Symbols, but not the other. Should be very glad to receive it.—G.

H. Fellows, you mention but $2.00 in your letter, which contained $4.00. We have credited you $2.00 and $2 00 to J. M. Philipps.

J. L. H., we continue the Crisis as proposed. We are pleased with the articles.

S. D. Daniels—All right.

Bro. Jas. E. Durham, the Greek Testament and Lexicon, including postage, is $1.50.

Martha Christie, we have no Sabbath School Books prepared.

W. L. Parsons, Rutland, Vt., should have been credited to No. 352, instead of No. 377.

J. C. King, have cr. you to 352.

Can any one inform me where the American Oil can be obtained? It is wanted for a lady who has a cancer. Bro. Jonathan Wilson let us have part of a bottle, which seems to be doing good. Address E. M. Spears, Greenfield, Mass.

Geo. W. Brown's P. O. address is Providence, R. I.

W. C. Peck, Bro. Wm. Sheldon's P. O. address is Merrimack, Sauk Co., Wis.

Bethesda.

"I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool."—John 5: 7.

Long had he waited (and perchance learned patience
In sorrow's school;)
The "season" at which angel-pinions rippled
Bethesda's pool.

And when at length the wondrous scene is witnessed,
With tear-dimmed eyes;
Alas! "another steppeth down before" him
And gains the prize.

But still he lingers, gazing on that fountain,
So dark and still—
There's balm of health in its mysterious "moving"—
Cure for each ill.

Oft and again 'neath angel feet they yielded—
Those waters cool;
And yet his tottering limbs refused to bear him
Into the pool.

But while despair was weaving her dark mantle
Around his soul,
The Galilean, passing by, beheld him,
And made him whole!

Methinks I too have wept beside that fountain,
Opened for sin,
Forgetful that e'en then One, longing, waited
To help me in.

Until comes stealing, like delicious music,
My spirit o'er,—
"Wouldst be made whole?" I recogn'ze my Savior,
And weep no more!

Warner, N. H. L. R. K. Bishop.

For the Crisis.

"Awake, thou that Sleepest!"

Brother, Sister in Christ, scattered over this dreary earth, has the long, dark night of watching caused thee to be weary and slumber at thy post, while darkness has been hovering over the land, and shut out for a season, as it were, from your visions, the sunlight of God's glory, for a trial of your faith, like Israel of old? Has thy heart fainted within thee, and been pressed down beneath a load of sorrow, or of hope deferred? Hast thou given up all for lost, saying in thine heart, God has forsaken his people? Or in this time of temptation, which has come upon the whole earth, hast thou been overcome by sin and unbelief? Has thy love grown cold, and do the signs of the near approach of the Master strike a dread upon thine heart, and chill thy very soul? O, then, these words are for thee,—awake, thou that sleepest! Thy life is in danger; the war trumpet is sounding through the land, the great day of the battle of God Almighty is at hand, and you, his sentinels, are sleeping at your posts, while the evening is all around you, and you willingly yielding yourselves up prisoners to the rebel prince. If he does not destroy thee immediately, will it save thee to be liberated on a parole of honor, no more to fight against the prince of darkness? Nay, verily. Thou hast enlisted for life. The law has been read to thee; thou hast sworn allegiance to the King of kings. Rebel against his government, and you die. Sleep at your post, and you peril your life. Desert, and when the war-cry is sounded, if found within the enemy's lines, thy doom is sealed forever. O, then, awake and sound the alarm, for the enemy is upon you with all his forces. Arouse thy fellow soldiers and cry mightily for help, for thy leader is near to help thee. His faithful sentinels are all protected, wherever they are stationed. O then look about thee; watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; and if he finds thee sleeping, will it be well with thee? Many of thy fellow soldiers are lost; some have fallen asleep, while others have given themselves up to the enemy, and to save reproach have ceased to fight against him, and are now found in his employ; and what says the Word? "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Life, then, is promised thee, "eternal life," when the victory is gained,—and victory is sure, though long deferred.

Our King is a conquering King. Principalities and powers must give way before him. His army is being gathered from the four corners of the earth, and though there are many lonely watchers like thyself on the outposts, they shall be gathered in a little while, if faithful, and called to pass a grand review. The long dark night is almost passed, the light breaks o'er yonder [illegible] "the war-cry of the nations is but the Ping in of the day when the sun of [illegible] shall "arise with healing in his wings." O, then, awake! shake off thy drowsy feelings; slumber not, at the peril of thy soul; stand at thy post; fight valiantly in thy Master's cause. Souls are perishing all around thee, and wilt thou be idle?

"Oh watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

Thy Master's eye is upon thee; he pities thy weakness, but punishes disobedience, and yet forgives the impenitent sinner.

But sayest thou in thy heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming." I have looked, and watched, and prayed for his coming these many years, yet 'all things continue as they were from the beginning'"? Ah! thy very thoughts condemn thee. Did not thy Master say, that when the servant should thus say in his heart, that he was nigh even at the doors? and are not all the signs being fulfilled? Has not the cry of peace and safety been sounding through the land? Was there ever a time when there was so little faith in the earth? Is not the love of many waxing cold? and are not men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," while the nations have become angry? Are these signs not enough to convince thee that the last day is at hand? If not, I fear that thou wilt sleep on until the last great trumpet sounds to awaken thee "to shame and everlasting contempt."

Christian, thou that hast stood long and faithfully at thy post, light is beaming for thee. Long and tedious hath been thy watch upon the tower, but Jesus has stood by thee. Thy watch is almost ended, and soon wilt thou be relieved. The hosts of hell have long tried to overcome thee and find thee sleeping at thy post; but thank God, who will give thee victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. O, may God send out his light and truth, that the faithful may be comforted, and the slumbering awakened; that the whole church may have on "the whole armor of God," fighting manfully in his cause.

Maine State Mission.

With this record I close the labors of the first quarter of our State mission, and with facts more interesting and encouraging than in any past communication, inasmuch as I can relate the revival of the Lord's work and the conversion of sinners to Christ.

On Sunday, Nov. 17th, I supplied the desk of Bro. R. R. York, Yarmouth, being at home, and was permitted to baptize three young converts, among whom was my little daughter Eliza, in the 14th year of her age. I thought of the days I first visited Yarmouth, by the request of Bro. York, in the year 1846, and when he was alone in the faith of the near advent of Jesus Christ, and when he and I wept over the unbelief and hardness of this people. O what a change now! Here is a happy little band of brethren and sisters looking for the Lord; many hearts to sympathize with us, and worship the coming Lord and Redeemer together; while others are being converted and added to the church. And here, where I had crossed the stream so often in sadness, I now was permitted to baptize three souls into Christ, and my own dear daughter among them. How mysterious and far beyond our calculations and foresight are the ways of Providence! In the afternoon we enjoyed the communion of the Lord's Supper, Bro. York and myself officiating at the head of the feast, while we also gave the right hand of fellowship to those who joined the little body of believers. The Lord be praised for the day of salvation and privilege among this people, and with our beloved brother York, who has labored indefatigably to build up the cause of his coming Savior in this place so many years.

Monday evening, Nov. 18th, I preached at Cumberland to a good and attentive audience; and on Friday evening following, and over the Sabbath, filled an appointment by request of the brethren in the same place. Our meetings were solemn, and I trust not in vain. The 21st, Thanksgiving, being at home, I attended with Bro. York the First Cong. church, and heard the pastor preach a faithful discourse from the following text: "He that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death."—Ex. 21: 16. With but few exceptions I could subscribe to most that was said. After the service I accompanied Bro. York to his home, where, together with my companion, we enjoyed a Thanksgiving dinner around the hospitable board of our brother and sister in Christ. In the evening many of the brethren and sisters came in, and we conversed of higher and nobler themes than many parties of the day, and closed the interview with the united voice of praise, and united hearts in prayer.

Nov. 29th, I commenced a series of meetings in North Raymond, where three years ago I labored in a revival with Bro. Jesse Partridge, when the Lord greatly blessed the people, converting many souls to himself. The fruits of that revival and work of grace remain to this day. I put up at Bro. Thurlow's, who was at that time converted to God, together with his nearest neighbor, who were before their conversion living at variance and "hateful and hating one another," but now, having been reconciled by the blood of the cross, are living peaceable and happy lives. O what will the grace of God do? What will it not do for the children of men? Bro. Thurlow remarked at our morning prayer, "Three years ago you were here at the establishing of our family altar, and it has remained to this day." How happy was this reminiscence of the past; and what a satisfaction to see the work of grace continue through years and scenes of trial and backsliding.

On Saturday evening a prominent citizen of the town, much esteemed and well known for his moral and upright and stable character, arose for prayers at the close of our service, which had been unusually solemn. On the next day—Lord's day morning, at 9 o'clock, I visited him at his residence. I found him still earnestly inquiring—"What shall I do to be saved?" After conversing with him, pointing out the way to Christ by faith, obedience, and prayer, he consented to pray for himself and join me in an earnest cry for the salvation of his soul. We bowed before the Lord; his companion, an unconverted lady but not without feeling, refusing as yet to do so, remained in the room. At the close of my prayer, the afflicted soul cried out for mercy, and in his prayer said—"O Lord! thou knowest that this is the first time these proud knees have ever bowed before thee." He confessed his sins and asked forgiveness, and subsequently found great peace, and is now exhorting his unconverted neighbors and friends to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus. His wife immediately left the room in tears as we arose from our knees. I saw her before leaving, and pointed her to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." On Monday evening she arose voluntarily without request, and asked for the prayers of christians. On this evening, the last of my stay in Raymond, I tarried the night at the residence of these new believers in Christ. On arriving at the house, I found this lady already enjoying a measure of peace, remarking that she "would not again pass through such agony as she had endured for the three days past for anything; but now she felt some little peace." The next morning found these friends both in the enjoyment of hope; and we, having read a portion of God's word, all bowed around the mercy-seat, and each prayed, and then and there erected another family altar in this town, after three years had passed away.

On Sabbath afternoon I was sent for by the wife of Bro. Morrell, the keeper of the Poor Farm, to come and pray for her. I found her in deep godly sorrow for sin, and in tears seeking to know what she should do to be saved. Instructing her in the way of life the best I could, she consented to pray for herself, and with her companion we all kneeled down and called upon the name of the Lord, and she found mercy in Jesus, and now is joyful in hope. Tuesday evening following I preached to a small audience on Maybury Hill, tarrying the night with Bro. Maybury and sharing his kind hospitality. I would that the Lord would revive his work again in this region. It is barren and cold; the people are unalarmed on their way to hell! Who shall be the instrument of awakening them from their slumbers before the day of God?

Dec. 4th I commenced a series of meetings at South Casco, in the neighborhood of Bro. Peter Staples, with whom I put up and tarried most of the time I remained in the region. However, all the friends were kind and hospitable. The Lord reward them for their labor of love. Bro. Staples and his family have much claim upon my gratitude, and we were mutually blest in the christian interview we enjoyed. Our meetings in Casco increased daily in interest and numbers. I found the people cold and disheartened, and left them greatly revived. As in Raymond, and as is my custom, I visited from house to house, praying with and exhorting the people to seek after God, and distributing tracts among them. There occur many incidents in such visits of the most interesting character which it would be a pleasure to record, but we shall not be able to do so. They are treasured up in our memory, and I know in the "Book of God's remembrance," to be reviewed in the day of reckoning. I found several unconverted persons of both sexes during my visits deeply interested for themselves. They would weep and confess themselves lost and in need of a Savior, as I conversed with them; and I hope some of them will find, if they have not already found, peace in believing. One soul was blest and confessed the fact before the people on the last evening of our meeting Others promised that they would seek the Lord at once.

On Monday evening, Dec. 9th, we appointed a prayer meeting at the residence of Bro. Peter Staples, wishing to set the brethren and sisters unitedly to work before we left, and to commence prayer meetings in the different sections of their town for the revival of God's work. Though the roads were bad, muddy and wet, yet we had a large, old-fashioned room full of souls, and a solemn and interesting meeting. Another was appointed for Wednesday evening, and I trust such has been the increased interest, that others will follow, and many souls be revived and converted and saved as the result of this effort in Casco. Saturday evening, Dec. 7th, I held a meeting in Raymond village, a distance of about four miles, which was fully attended, and the people listened to the words of life attentively, and some expressed a desire for my return at some future day to preach unto them the things of the kingdom of God.

Tuesday, Dec. 10th, I returned by way of North Raymond and learned that the good work was going on blessedly; many had been quickened, some sinners converted, and others were inquiring. A prayer meeting was held in the evening at a private house occupied by a poor family, and in an out of the way place to accommodate those in that neighborhood, and yet a good number were present, and two on this evening desired prayers, and one poor soul cried aloud for mercy. I learned that Bro. James Albert Libbey was to preach the next evening, and that they were anticipating a rich feast and a glorious meeting. Eld. True Jordan has been laboring the last summer in this section to good acceptance, and was with the people on the preceding Sabbath. The Lord carry on this blessed work of revival in all that region, and may his truth and salvation prevail.

I am this day at home, but designing to leave for the Mission field again to-morrow. This work calls me much abroad, and yet I am willing to forego the enjoyment and endearments of family and home for

"The love of the Lord, and to seek for the lost."

Brethren and sisters, pray that my labors as your missionary may be more abundantly blessed of God. O. R. Fassett.

Selected for the Crisis.

Milton's Prayer of Patience.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smit'en by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to Thee!

All merciful One!
When men are furthest, then art thou most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize Thy purpose, clearly shown—
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone!

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine!
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine!

Selections.

The Spider and its Victim.

On a hot summer day, a gentleman sat down to think over a subject on which his mind was greatly troubled. He was wondering, how it was that so many of his acquaintance had yielded to temptation, and been destroyed. He was wondering how the great Tempter could so soon get them entangled in his nets, and never let them loose again till they were ruined.

While he was thinking over the subject, he saw a worm moving softly along in the footpath. He moved quietly, and without any fear. "Now," said the gentleman to himself, "that poor worm can go safely, though it has no reason to guide it. There lies in wait no destroyer to entangle it, while our young men, with reason and conscience, are destoyed by scores?" Just then he saw a spider cross the path about a foot in front of the worm. She did not appear to be thinking of the worm, nor the worm of her. When she got quite across the path she stopped, and stood still. The worm kept on, but soon was brought to a stand by a small cord, too small for our eyes to see, which the spider had spun as she rushed before him. Finding himself stopped, the worm turned to go back. The instant he turned back, back darted the spider, spinning a new cord behind her. The poor worm was now brought up a second time, and twisted and turned every way to escape. He seemed now to suspect some mischief, for he ran this way and that way, and every time he turned the spider darted around him weaving another rope. There gradually was no space left for him, except in the direction of the hole of the spider. That way was left open, but on all other sides, by darting across or around, the space was gradually growing less. It was noticed, too, that every time the worm turned towards the hole of the spider, he was instantly hemmed in, so that he could not get back quite so far as before. So his very agony continually brought him nearer the place of death. It took a full hour to do all this, and by that time the worm was brought close to the hole of his destroyer. He now seemed to feel that he was helpless, and if he could have screamed, he doubtless would have done so. And now the spider eyed him a moment, as if enjoying his terror, and laughing at her own skill, and then darted on him, and struck him with her fangs. Instantly the life began to flow out. Again she struck him, and the poor thing rolled over in agony and died. Mrs. Spider now hitched one of her little ropes to her victim and drew him into her hole, where she feasted at her leisure, perhaps counting over the number of poor victims whom she had destroyed in the same way before.

When I see a boy who goes with bad company, and who listens to their profane and licentious conversation, I think of the spider and her victim.

When I see a boy breaking the Sabbath by going off to fish, to swim, or to play;

When I see one disregarding his father and mother, and doing what he knows will grieve them;

When I see one occasionally going to the oyster cellar, and to the drinking saloon, in company;

When I see one going to the theatre, where nothing good, but all evil, is displayed;

When I have reason to suspect that he takes money from his father or his employer, which is none of his, but which he hopes to replace—

Why, I always think of the spider and her victim, and mourn that the great Destroyer is weaving his meshes about every such boy, and is drawing him towards his own awful home! The dead are there.—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

Choose a Great Object.

The object of life's achievement depends very much on the work that a man takes hold of. Wilberforce used to say of Sir Walter Scott's fine romances, that they always put him in mind of a giant cracking nuts. I saw at Omer's an illustrated manuscript which was the result of thirty years of patient labor. Alexander conquered the world and Paul evangelized it in less time than that. Many a man has taken as much time to fashion a curious toy as it would have taken him to build a house or ship. Let us not work upon toys, or, labor long and hard as we will, we shall have nothing but toys to show at last as the result of our life's work. For no man's work can be higher than his aim or longer than his plan. The greatest object, incomparably, to which human wit and energy can be directed, and on which this frail and short life can be expended, is to serve God and to save men. Whether we look at the inherent dignity of the object, or the vastness and durability of its results, or the magnificence of its rewards, it surpasses any other human enterprise infinitely more than St. Peter's at Rome surpasses the cob-house built by a child.

And what is peculiarly encouraging here is, that this mightiest of human or created works is within the reach of the weakest and the meanest of laborers. Though you have not the skill or the strength to execute anything which shall bring you riches, position, or fame among your fellow-men, yet you may win a crown, a sceptre, a throne, a kingdom, among the last and imperishable things that are not seen and are eternal. For "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh might glory in his presence." And Jesus says, "If any man will serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall my servant be."—Tract Journal.

A Touching Scene.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl, with blue eyes and fair hair, poorly but neatly clad, was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under the charge of vagrancy.

"Does any one claim you?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah! my good sir," said she, "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are dead—I have only my brother James. The Court must send you to the House of Correction."

"Here I am, sister—here I am! do not fear;" cried a childish voice from the other end of the court, and at the same instant a little boy with a lively countenance started forth from amid the crowd, and stood before the Judge.

"Who are you?" said he.

"James Rome, the brother of this little girl."

"Your age?"

"Thirteen."

"And what do you want?"

"I come to claim my Lucille."

"But have you the means of providing for her"

"Yesterday I had not, but now I have. Don't be afraid, Lucille."

"Oh, how good you are, James!"

"Well, let us see, my boy," said the magistrate. "The court is disposed to do all it can for your sister. But you must give us some explanation."

"About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my poor mother died of a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great trouble. Then I said to myself, "I will be an artist, and when I know a good trade I will support my sister." I went apprentice to a brush-maker. Every day I used to carry her half of my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in my bed while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. One day she begged on the Boulevard, and was taken up. When I heard that, I said to myself: "Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better."

"I soon found a place, where I am lodged, fed, and clothed, and have twenty francs a month. I have also found a good woman, who, for these twenty francs, will take care of Lucille, and teach her needle-work. I claim my sister.

"My boy," said the Judge, "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow."

"Never mind, Lucille, said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then turning to the magistrate, he said, "I may kiss her, may I not, sir?"

He threw himself into the arms of his sister, and both wept tears of affection.

Yielding to the Majority.

The following account of the venerated Dr. Kendrick's conduct when voted down by his brethren, is from the pen of the late James Edmunds, a man who displayed similar characteristics to those he so well describes and praises in Kendrick. An important lesson may be learned from it:

"Dr. Kendrick was indefatigable in advocating what he deemed to be right; but he always respected the voice of the majority of his brethren, when a decision was arrived at after full discussion and prayer for Divine guidance. His favorite policy had been to have the Hamilton Seminary a sacred retreat, where pious young men, far from the influence of the ungodly, might prosecute their studies unmolested. But after the course of study had been extended to a full collegiate term, the question of admitting others than candidates for the ministry came to be entertained. The Doctor opposed it with all his powers. A debate ensued, when the final question was brought before the Board. For the first time I found myself opposed to him, and that on a course of policy which he deemed vital. We debated with great earnestness till after midnight. He stood alone, but struggled like a giant against us all; from his manner one would suppose he would have left in despair, and given up the institution to its fate if out-voted. The vote was taken. He alone voted in the negative. He arose and said, "Brethren, I have used every means in my power to prevent this; but after hearing all my arguments, you have decided contrary to my judgment. I shall now cordially do all in my power to make this new policy succeed. I fear it will not; but you shall have my hearty co-operation in giving it a fair trial."—New York Chronicle.

Simplicity of Dress.—Female loveliness never appears to so good advantage as when set off with simplicity of dress. No artist ever decks his angels with towering feathers and grand jewelry; and our dear human angels, if they would make good their title to that name, should carefully avoid ornaments, which properly belong to Indian squaws and African princess. These tinselries may serve to give effect on the stage or upon a ball-room floor, but in daily life there is no substitute for simplicity. A vulgar taste is not to be disguised by gold or diamonds.

ITEMS.

To Remove Clinkers from Stoves.—Some kinds of coal are liable to form clinkers which adhere to the fire-brick lining of stoves, grates and furnaces, and become a source of great annoyance, as they cannot be removed by usual means without breaking the fire-brick. Persons who are thus annoyed will be glad to know that by putting a few oyster shells in the fire close to the clinkers, the latter will become so loose as to be readily removed without breaking the lining.—Scientific American.

Keeping Grapes.—We are in the habit of keeping grapes for common use during the winter, in the following manner: Take clean cheese boxes, pick off the bunches of grapes carefully, and pack them in dry grape leaves. Keep the boxes in a dry, cool place, being careful to not let them freeze. We generally have grapes till May.—Cor. of Field Notes.

Yeast.—Those who are not in the neighborhood of bakers, and cannot procure the fermentation called yeast, may make a better substitute as follows: Boil one pound of flour, quarter of a pound of brown sugar, and a little salt, in two gallons of water for an hour. When milk warm, bottle and cork it close. It will be ready for use in twenty-four hours.

Animal Temperature.—In man the temperature of the blood is 98 degrees; in sheep, 102 degrees; in ducks, 107 degrees. During the chills of ague, the heat of man's blood falls to 96 degrees and 94 degrees, while at the height of fever it rises to 102 degrees, and even to 105 degrees.—Her. of Prog.

"Church in a Spit-Box."—Henry Ward Beecher says of tobacco: "If there ever was a weed whose roots went down till they drew sap from below, that is it. A snuffing, smoking, chewing, spitting minister, ought to have a church in a spit-box. He is not fit to stand in ordinary congregations, nor to live in ordinary families."

☞ In 1740 Charles VI., Emperor of Austria, died "of an indigestion of mushrooms, which caused to him an apoplexy; and that dish of mushrooms changed the destiny of Europe.—Secret History of the Court of France.

To remove Iron Rust.—Take a little good cream of tartar and tie it up with the spotted part. When you put the article in to boil, be careful not to stir it till it boils, and it will disappear if the tartar is good.

Youth's Department.

Three Happy Children.

A GLIMPSE AT A CONTENTED FAMILY.

I saw a child's paradise last summer. It happened in this way. I was rambling in a retired neighborhood, not very remarkable for beauty of scenery or tasteful dwellings. The farm-houses were neatly painted, and the barns had an air of well-to-do plenty, but the scantiness of ornamental trees and shrubbery was somewhat singular. However, in a back street or lane, I came upon a house almost hidden behind hedges, evergreens, climbing honeysuckles, and fruit trees. It was unpretending, of a quiet color, but its expression (every house has an expression) was cheerful. Feeling tired, I said to myself, "What a good time they must have eating cherries here! I would like to stroll on and rest in this green spot."

Just then, a large, black dog sprang out, and startled me very much.

"He won't hurt you, he never bites"—and there, holding him by the tail, stood a spirited boy, perhaps five years old. His bright, brown eyes were softened by lashes so long and black that they shaded his cheeks, and made his face handsome without regular features.

"Nep barks at peddlers, but he never hurts ladies," said the boy, gallantly.

Desirous of an interview, I asked, "Could you give me a glass of water? I am thirsty."

"Wid the greatest pledure—shall I bring it here, or will you come into the house wid me? Mamma isn't at home, but Katie is."

I inquired: "And who is Katie?"

He looked surprised, as if I ought to know.

Why, Katie is my sister; she's older than I am, and can ride on horseback—most nine years old."

"Are you and Katie the only children?"

"No, indeed! We have a little brother, but he hasn't got to be a boy yet—he wears dresses."

The child's innocent politeness was so enticing that I accompanied him into the house. Here I was disappointed. I expected to see a dainty, white-muslin curtained interior, with pretty hanging baskets and crochet tidies, etc. Nothing of the kind—but as much contempt of the ornamental within as there was profusion without. A well-worn oil-cloth upon the hall floor; no carpet on the stairs and in the parlor—not an article claiming to elegance, except, perhaps, the piano, at which Katie sat practicing.

Katie did not in the least resemble her brother. She had that kind of hair that is "gold in the sun and brown in the shade," and those changeful gray eyes which, without claiming to be the most beautiful, are the most expressive. I must own her nose was en peu retroussé, but her mouth was bewitchingly dimpled, and kept pace in expression with those thoughtful eyes. She was shy to awkwardness, and evidently glad to run and bring the glass of water, leaving the boy to entertain me.

Having drunk, I reluctantly arose to go—sorry I had no excuse to remain longer. My little beau said:

"Why! you haven't seen the baby—come up into the nursery, and I'll show him to you."

He took me by the hand with such an irresistible manner that I accompanied him, Katie leading the way with a pleasant look, but saying nothing.

As the nursery door opened, I seemed to be peeping into a fairy paradise. Looking to the East, it had evidently been chosen as the most cheerful room in the house. Little shelves and brackets were in every side and corner, covered with the bright accumulations of many Christmas and birthdays.

Upon a fleecy mat sat a child nearly two years old, with eyes as blue as robin's eggs, and in great glee over a turtle in a basin of water. The turtle was not larger than a quarter of a dollar, but its lively motions filled the child with ecstasy as he shouted "urtle! urtle!" The nurse, a comely young woman, sat sewing. Occasionally she caught a fly and threw it into the basin. The tiny turtle would seize it, biting off first the head, then the body, and lastly the wings. This was a cruelty which I could not relish, but the enthusiasm of baby was extraordinary. He shook his yellow hair and clapped his fat hands, squealing with delight. From the baby and his extemporaneous aquarium my eyes wandered about this room.

"Would you like to see me saw?" asked my young master of ceremonies. No sooner said than done! Open flew a closet door—out came a little saw-horse, a real saw, and a real stick of wood, which he vigorously converted into short pieces, that he said were "just the size grandma likes for kindling her fire." Then he proceeded to show me other attractions of the nursery. There was a globe of gold-fish perpetually at play—a tame cricket, that sang every evening in the closet; a large chrysalis, that was daily expecting to emerge a gay butterfly some clippings of the leaf-cutter bee; book-shelves, where Mother Goose held a subordinate place;—but what struck me with astonishment were the walls of the room. They were covered, not with whitewash, nor paint, nor fresco; but from floor to ceiling were pasted engravings! The effect of the black and white was so startling and peculiar, for a moment I thought of some crazy man's fancy; but soon I discovered "method in the madness." Around the base of the room, within range of yearling vision, was a menagerie of all kinds of animals. Baby, following the direction of my eyes, ran pointing with his sharp forefinger, saying, "See! see!" at the horses, cows, and goats. His brother called me to a toad-fish, a sea-snake, and all kinds of ships, boats, and steamers. Katie, forgetting her shyness, pointed out Sancho Panza fighting the wind-mills. She introduced me to John Knox, preaching before Mary, Queen of Scots, and, in a few enthusiastic words, touched off that grand old man's character, and her eyes grew black as she pointed out the shadowy temple of fame in Cole's Voyage of Life.

Every door was wreathed with bright flowers, every window was bordered with colored pictures of pleasant scenes in the life of our Savior.

Among all those pictures (and I suppose there were six hundred, large and small) I saw no battle-piece, no scalping Indian, no witch of Endor, no rude stage-dancer, no vulgar caricature—nothing that could suggest frightful dreams, or tell those young minds of aught but peace and purity, pleasure and beauty, in the world.

"What a capital idea for combining cultivation with amusement for these children!" I thought; and I asked, "who made these walls so pretty?"

"Papa brought home the pictures and mamma pasted them up. Last winter papa thought he must go to the city to live, and he was going to sell this place, but we cried so about leaving our nursery and all pictures, papa gave it up."

Happy children! undazzled by the toys, dress, and artificial novelties of New York city, you have the pure taste to choose your gingham aprons and your country home—a home where your welfare is evidently the first consideration!

Happy children! with your birds and flowers, insects, books, and pictures, you are not studying nature at second-hand, but with your own clear eyes; and I believe Agassiz himself could learn some natural history from your acute observation.

Happy children! may you grow up as virtuous as you are innocent, as active as you are intelligent, as benevolent as you will be cultivated.

Sweet sister and brothers, sheltered there from vexation and temptation! I felt when I passed out of the gate as if I left you in the Happy Valley of Rasselas.

Bethesda.

"Whosoever then first, after the troubling of the water stepped in, was made whole."—John 5: 4.

Long had he waited (with pure learned patience
In sorrow's school),
That "season" at which angel-pinions rippled
Bethesda's pool.

And when at length the wondrous scene is witnessed,
With tear-dimmed eyes;
Alas! "another steppeth down before" him
And gains the prize.

But still he lingers, gazing on that fountain,
So dark and still—
There's balm of health in its mysterious "moving"—
Cure for each ill.

Gain and again death-angel feet they yielded—
Those waters cool;
And yet his tottering limbs refused to bear him
Into the pool.

But while despair was weaving her dark mantle
Around his soul,
The Galilean, passing by, beheld him,
And made him whole!

Methinks I too have wept beside that fountain,
Opened for sin,
Forgetful that e'en then One, longing, waited
To help me in.

Until comes stealing, like delicious music,
My spirit o'er,—
"Wouldst be made whole?" I recogn'ze my Savior,
And weep no more!

"Awake, thou that Sleepest!"

Brother, Sister in Christ, scattered over this dreary earth, has the long, dark night of watching caused thee to be weary and slumber at thy post, while darkness has been hovering over the land, and shut out for a season, as it were, from your visions, the sunlight of God's glory, for a trial of your faith, like Israel of old? Has thy heart fainted within thee, and been pressed down beneath a load of sorrow, or of hope deferred? Hast thou given up all for lost, saying in thine heart, God has forsaken his people? Or in this time of temptation, which has come upon the whole earth, hast thou been overcome by sin and unbelief? Has thy love grown cold, and do the signs of the near approach of the Master strike a dread upon thine heart, and chill thy very soul? O, then, these words are for thee,—awake, thou that sleepest! Thy life is in danger; the war trumpet is sounding through the land, the great day of the battle of God Almighty is at hand, and you, his sentinels, are sleeping at your posts, while the evening is all around you, and you willingly yielding yourselves up prisoners to the rebel prince. If he does not destroy thee immediately, will it save thee to be liberated on a parole of honor, no more to fight against the prince of darkness? Nay, verily. Thou hast enlisted for life. The law has been read to thee; thou hast sworn allegiance to the King of kings. Rebel against his government, and you die. Sleep at your post, and you peril your life. Desert, and when the war-cry is sounded, if found within the enemy's lines, thy doom is sealed forever. O, then, awake and sound the alarm, for the enemy is upon you with all his forces. Arouse thy fellow soldiers and cry mightily for help, for thy leader is near to help thee. His faithful sentinels are all protected, wherever they are stationed. O then look about thee; watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; and if he finds thee sleeping, will it be well with thee? Many of thy fellow soldiers are lost; some have fallen asleep, while others have given themselves up to the enemy, and, to save reproach have ceased to fight against him, and are now found in his employ; and what says the Word? "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Life, then, is promised thee, "eternal life," when the victory is gained,—and victory is sure, though long deferred.

Our King is a conquering King. Principalities and powers must give way before him. His army is being gathered from the four corners of the earth, and though there are many lonely watchers like thyself on the outposts, they shall be gathered in a little while, if faithful, and called to pass a grand review. The long dark night is far passed, the light breaks o'er yonder hills; the war-cry of the nations is but the [illegible] of the day when the sun of righteousness shall "arise with healing in his wings." O, then, awake! shake off thy drowsy feelings; slumber not, at the peril of thy soul; stand at thy post; fight valiantly in thy Master's cause. Souls are perishing all around thee, and wilt thou be idle?

"Oh watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

Thy Master's eye is upon thee; he pities thy weakness, but punishes disobedience, and yet forgives the impenitent sinner.

But sayest thou in thy heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming." I have looked, and watched, and prayed for his coming these many years, yet 'all things continue as they were from the beginning'"? Ah! thy very thoughts condemn thee. Did not thy Master say, that when the servant should thus say in his heart, that he was nigh even at the doors? and are not all the signs being fulfilled? Has not the cry of peace and safety been sounding through the land? Was there ever a time when there was so little faith in the earth? Is not the love of many waxing cold? and are not men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," while the nations have become angry? Are these signs not enough to convince thee that the last day is at hand? If not, I fear that thou wilt sleep on until the last great trumpet sounds to awaken thee "to shame and everlasting contempt."

Christian, thou that hast stood long and faithfully at thy post, light is beaming for thee. Long and tedious hath been thy watch upon the tower, but Jesus has stood by thee. Thy watch is almost ended, and soon wilt thou be relieved. The hosts of hell have long tried to overcome thee and find thee sleeping at thy post; but thank God, who will give thee victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. O, may God send out his light and truth, that the faithful may be comforted, and the slumbering awakened; that the whole church may have on "the whole armor of God," fighting manfully in his cause.

Maine State Mission.

With this record I close the labors of the first quarter of our State mission, and with facts more interesting and encouraging than in any past communication, inasmuch as I can relate the revival of the Lord's work and the conversion of sinners to Christ.

On Sunday, Nov. 17th, I supplied the desk of Bro. R. R. York, Yarmouth, being at home, and was permitted to baptize three young converts, among whom was my little daughter Eliza, in the 14th year of her age. I thought of the days I first visited Yarmouth, by the request of Bro. York, in the year 1846, and when he was alone in the faith of the near advent of Jesus Christ, and when he and I wept over the unbelief and hardness of this people. O what a change now! Here is a happy little band of brethren and sisters looking for the Lord; many hearts to sympathize with us, and worship the coming Lord and Redeemer together; while others are being converted and added to the church. And here, where I had crossed the stream so often in sadness, I now was permitted to baptize three souls into Christ, and my own dear daughter among them. How mysterious and far beyond our calculations and foresight are the ways of Providence! In the afternoon we enjoyed the communion of the Lord's Supper, Bro. York and myself officiating at the head of the feast, while we also gave the right hand of fellowship to those who joined the little body of believers. The Lord be praised for the day of salvation and privilege among this people, and with our beloved brother York, who has labored indefatigably to build up the cause of his coming Savior in this place so many years.

Monday evening, Nov. 18th, I preached at Cumberland to a good and attentive audience; and on Friday evening following, and over the Sabbath, filled an appointment by request of the brethren in the same place. Our meetings were solemn, and I trust not in vain. The 21st, Thanksgiving, being at home, I attended with Bro. York the First Cong. church, and heard the pastor preach a faithful discourse from the following text: "He that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death."—Ex. 21: 16. With but few exceptions I could subscribe to most that was said. After the service I accompanied Bro. York to his home, where, together with my companion, we enjoyed a Thanksgiving dinner around the hospitable board of our brother and sister in Christ. In the evening many of the brethren and sisters came in, and we conversed of higher and nobler themes than many parties of the day, and closed the interview with the united voice of praise, and united hearts in prayer.

Nov. 29th, I commenced a series of meetings in North Raymond, where three years ago I labored in a revival with Bro. Jesse Partridge, when the Lord greatly blessed the people, converting many souls to himself. The fruits of that revival and work of grace remain to this day. I put up at Bro. Thurlow's, who was at that time converted to God, together with his nearest neighbor, who were before their conversion living at variance and "hateful and hating one another," but now, having been reconciled by the blood of the cross, are living peaceable and happy lives. O what will the grace of God do? What will it not do for the children of men? Bro. Thurlow remarked at our morning prayer, "Three years ago you were here at the establishing of our family altar, and it has remained to this day." How happy was this reminiscence of the past; and what a satisfaction to see the work of grace continue through years and scenes of trial and backsliding.

On Saturday evening a prominent citizen of the town, much esteemed and well known for his moral and upright and stable character, arose for prayers at the close of our service, which had been unusually solemn. On the next day—Lord's day morning, at 9 o'clock, I visited him at his residence. I found him still anxiously inquiring—"What shall I do to be saved?" After conversing with him, pointing out the way to Christ by faith, obedience, and prayer, he consented to pray for himself and join me in an earnest cry for the salvation of his soul. We bowed before the Lord; his companion, an [illegible] without feeling, refusing as yet to do so, remained in the room. At the close of my prayer, the afflicted soul cried out for mercy, and in his prayer said—"O Lord! thou knowest that this is the first time these proud knees have ever bowed before thee." He confessed his sins and asked forgiveness, and subsequently found great peace, and is now exhorting his unconverted neighbors and friends to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus. His wife immediately left the room in tears as we arose from our knees. I saw her before leaving, and pointed her to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." On Monday evening she arose voluntarily without request, and asked for the prayers of christians. On, this evening, the last of my stay in Raymond, I tarried the night at the residence of these new believers in Christ. On arriving at the house, I found this lady already enjoying a measure of peace, remarking that she "would not again pass through such agony as she had endured for the three days past for anything; but now she felt some little peace." The next morning found these friends both in the enjoyment of hope; and we, having read a portion of God's word, all bowed around the mercy-seat, and each prayed, and then and there erected another family altar in this town, after three years had passed away.

On Sabbath afternoon I was sent for by the wife of Bro. Morrell, the keeper of the Poor Farm, to come and pray for her. I found her in deep godly sorrow for sin, and in tears seeking to know what she should do to be saved. Instructing her in the way of life the best I could, she consented to pray for herself, and with her companion we all kneeled down and called upon the name of the Lord, and she found mercy in Jesus, and now is joyful in hope. Tuesday evening following I preached to a small audience on Maybury Hill, tarrying the night with Bro. Maybury and sharing his kind hospitality. I would that the Lord would revive his work again in this region. It is barren and cold; the people are unalarmed on their way to hell! Who shall be the instrument of awakening them from their slumbers before the day of God?

Dec. 4th I commenced a series of meetings at South Casco, in the neighborhood of Bro. Peter Staples, with whom I put up and tarried most of the time I remained in the region. However, all the friends were kind and hospitable. The Lord reward them for their labor of love. Bro. Staples and his family have much claim upon my gratitude, and we were mutually blest in the christian interview we enjoyed. Our meetings in Casco increased daily in interest and numbers. I found the people cold and disheartened, and left them greatly revived. As in Raymond, and as is my custom, I visited from house to house, praying with and exhorting the people to seek after God, and distributing tracts among them. There occur many incidents in such visits of the most interesting character which it would be a pleasure to record, but we shall not be able to do so. They are treasured up in our memory, and I know in the "Book of God's remembrance," to be reviewed in the day of reckoning. I found several unconverted persons of both sexes during my visits deeply interested for themselves. They would weep and confess themselves lost and in need of a Savior, as I conversed with them; and I hope some of them will find, if they have not already found, peace in believing. One soul was blest and confessed the fact before the people on the last evening of our meeting. Others promised that they would seek the Lord at once.

On Monday evening, Dec. 9th, we appointed a prayer meeting at the residence of Bro. Peter Staples, wishing to set the brethren and sisters unitedly to work before we left, and to commence prayer meetings in the different sections of their town for the revival of God's work. Though the roads were bad, muddy and wet, yet we had a large, old-fashioned room full of souls, and a solemn and interesting meeting. Another was appointed for Wednesday evening, and I trust such has been the increased interest, that others will follow, and many souls be revived and converted and saved as the result of this effort in Casco. Saturday evening, Dec. 7th, I held a meeting in Raymond village, a distance of about four miles, which was fully attended, and the people listened to the words of life attentively, and some expressed a desire for my return at some future day to preach unto them the things of the kingdom of God.

Tuesday, Dec. 10th, I returned by way of North Raymond and learned that the good work was going on blessedly; many had been quickened, some sinners converted, and others were inquiring. A prayer meeting was held in the evening at a private house occupied by a poor family, and in an out of the way place to accommodate those in that neighborhood, and yet a good number were present, and two on this evening desired prayers, and one poor soul cried aloud for mercy. I learned that Bro. James Albert Libbey was to preach the next evening, and that they were anticipating a rich feast and a glorious meeting. Eld. Trus Jordan has been laboring the last summer in this section to good acceptance, and was with the people on the preceding Sabbath. The Lord carry on this blessed work of revival in all that region, and may his truth and salvation prevail.

I am this day at home, but designing to leave for the Mission field again to-morrow. This work calls me much abroad, and yet I am willing to forego the enjoyment and endearments of family and home for
"The love of the Lord, and to seek for the lost."
Brethren and sisters, pray that my labors as your missionary may be more abundantly blessed of God. O. R. Fassett.

Selected for the Crisis.

Milton's Prayer of Patience.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to Thee!

All merciful One!
When men are farthest, then art thou most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize Thy purpose, clearly shown—
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone!

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine!
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine!

The Spider and its Victim.

On a hot summer day, a gentleman sat down to think over a subject on which his mind was greatly troubled. He was wondering, how it was that so many of his acquaintance had yielded to temptation, and been destroyed. He was wondering how the great Tempter could so soon get them entangled in his nets, and never let them loose again till they were ruined.

While he was thinking over the subject, he saw a worm moving softly along in the footpath. He moved quietly, and without any fear. "Now," said the gentleman to himself, "that poor worm can go safely, though it has no reason to guide it. There lies in wait no destroyer to entangle it, while our young men, with reason and conscience, are destroyed by scores?" Just then he saw a spider cross the path about a foot in front of the worm. She did not appear to be thinking of the worm, nor the worm of her. When she got quite across the path she stopped, and stood still. The worm kept on, but soon was brought to a stand by a small cord, too small for our eyes to see, which the spider had spun as she rushed before him. Finding himself stopped, the worm turned to go back. The instant he turned back, back darted the spider, spinning a new cord behind her. The poor worm was now brought up a second time, and twisted and turned every way to escape. He seemed now to suspect some mischief, for he ran this way and that way, and every time he turned the spider darted around him weaving another rope. There gradually was no space left for him, except in the direction of the hole of the spider. That way was left open, but on all other sides, by darting across or around, the space was gradually growing less. It was noticed, too, that every time the worm turned towards the hole of the spider, he was instantly hemmed in, so that he could not get back quite so far as before. So his very agony continually brought him nearer the place of death. It took a full hour to do all this, and by that time the worm was brought close to the hole of his destroyer. He now seemed to feel that he was helpless, and if he could have screamed, he doubtless would have done so. And now the spider eyed him a moment, as if enjoying his terror, and laughing at her own skill, and then darted on him, and struck him with her fangs. Instantly the life began to flow out. Again she struck him, and the poor thing rolled over in agony and died. Mrs. Spider now hitched one of her little ropes to her victim and drew him into her hole, where she feasted at her leisure, perhaps counting over the number of poor victims whom she had destroyed in the same way before.

When I see a boy who goes with bad company, and who listens to their profane and licentious conversation, I think of the spider and her victim.

When I see a boy breaking the Sabbath by going off to fish, to swim, or to play;

When I see one disregarding his father and mother, and doing what he knows will grieve them;

When I see one occasionally going to the oyster cellar, and to the drinking saloon, in company;

When I see one going to the theatre, where nothing good, but all evil, is displayed;

When I have reason to suspect that he takes money from his father or his employer, which is none of his, but which he hopes to replace—

Why, I always think of the spider and her victim, and mourn that the great Destroyer is weaving his meshes about every such boy, and is drawing him towards his own awful home! The dead are there.—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

Choose a Great Object.

The object of life's achievement depends very much on the work that a man takes hold of. Wilberforce used to say of Sir Walter Scott's fine romances, that they always put him in mind of a giant cracking nuts. I saw at Omer's an illustrated manuscript which was the result of thirty years of patient labor. Alexander conquered the world and Paul evangelized it in less time than that. Many a man has taken as much time to fashion a curious toy as it would have taken him to build a house or ship. Let us not work upon toys, or, labor long and hard as we will, we shall have nothing but toys to show at last as the result of our life's work. For no man's work can be higher than his aim or longer than his plan. The greatest object, incomparably, to which human wit and energy can be directed, and on which this frail and short life can be expended, is to serve God and to save men. Whether we look at the inherent dignity of the object, or the vastness and durability of its results, or the magnificence of its rewards, it surpasses any other human enterprise infinitely more than St. Peter's at Rome surpasses the cob-house built by a child.

And what is peculiarly encouraging here is, that this mightiest of human or created works is within the reach of the weakest and the meanest of laborers. Though you have not the skill or the strength to execute anything which shall bring you riches, position, or fame among your fellow-men, yet you may win a crown, a sceptre, a throne, a kingdom, among the last and imperishable things that are not seen and are eternal. For "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh might glory in his presence." And Jesus says, "If any man will serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall my servant be."—Tract Journal.

A Touching Scene.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl, with blue eyes and fair hair, poorly but neatly clad, was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under the charge of vagrancy.

"Does any one claim you?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah! my good sir," said she, "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are dead—I have only my brother James. The Court must send you to the House of Correction."

"Here I am, sister—here I am! do not fear;" cried a childish voice from the other end of the court, and at the same instant a little boy with a lively countenance started forth from amid the crowd, and stood before the Judge.

"Who are you?" said he.

"James Rome, the brother of this little girl."

"Your age?"

"Thirteen."

"And what do you want?"

"I come to claim my Lucille."

"But have you the means of providing for her?"

"Yesterday I had not, but now I have. Don't be afraid, Lucille."

"Oh, how good you are, James!"

"Well, let us see, my boy," said the magistrate. "The court is disposed to do all it can for your sister. But you must give us some explanation."

"About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my poor mother died of a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great trouble. Then I said to myself, 'I will be an artist, and when I know a good trade I will support my sister.' I went apprentice to a brush-maker. Every day I used to carry her half of my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in my bed while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. One day she begged on the Boulevard, and was taken up. When I heard that, I said to myself: 'Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better.'

"I soon found a place, where I am lodged, fed, and clothed, and have twenty francs a month. I have also found a good woman, who, for these twenty francs, will take care of Lucille, and teach her needlework. I claim my sister."

"My boy," said the Judge, "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow."

"Never mind, Lucille," said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then turning to the magistrate, he said, "I may kiss her, may I not, sir?"

He threw himself into the arms of his sister, and both wept tears of affection.

Yielding to the Majority.

The following account of the venerated Dr. Kendrick's conduct when voted down by his brethren, is from the pen of the late James Edmunds, a man who displayed similar characteristics to those he so well describes and praises in Kendrick. An important lesson may be learned from it:

"Dr. Kendrick was indefatigable in advocating what he deemed to be right; but he always respected the voice of the majority of his brethren, when a decision was arrived at after full discussion and prayer for Divine guidance. His favorite policy had been to have the Hamilton Seminary a sacred retreat, where pious young men, far from the influence of the ungodly, might prosecute their studies unmolested. But after the course of study had been extended to a full collegiate term, the question of admitting others than candidates for the ministry came to be entertained. The Doctor opposed it with all his powers. A debate ensued, when the final question was brought before the Board. For the first time I found myself opposed to him, and that on a course of policy which he deemed vital. We debated with great earnestness till after midnight. He stood alone, but struggled like a giant against us all; from his manner one would suppose he would have left in despair, and given up the institution to its fate if out-voted. The vote was taken. He alone voted in the negative. He arose and said, "Brethren, I have used every means in my power to prevent this; but after hearing all my arguments, you have decided contrary to my judgment. I shall now cordially do all in my power to make this new policy succeed. I fear it will not; but you shall have my hearty co-operation in giving it a fair trial."—New York Chronicle.

Simplicity of Dress.—Female loveliness never appears to so good advantage as when set off with simplicity of dress. No artist ever decks his angels with towering feathers and grand jewelry; and our dear human angels, if they would make good their title to that name, should carefully avoid ornaments, which properly belong to Indian squaws and African princess. These tinselries may serve to give effect on the stage or upon a ball-room floor, but in daily life there is no substitute for simplicity. A vulgar taste is not to be disguised by gold or diamonds.

ITEMS.

To Remove Clinkers from Stoves.—Some kinds of coal are liable to form clinkers which adhere to the fire-brick lining of stoves, grates and furnaces, and become a source of great annoyance, as they cannot be removed by usual means without breaking the fire-brick. Persons who are thus annoyed will be glad to know that by putting a few oyster shells in the fire close to the clinkers, the latter will become so loose as to be readily removed without breaking the lining.—Scientific American.

Keeping Grapes.—We are in the habit of keeping grapes for common use during the winter, in the following manner: Take clean cheese boxes, pick off the bunches of grapes carefully, and pack them in dry grape leaves. Keep the boxes in a dry, cool place, being careful to not let them freeze. We generally have grapes till May.—Cor. of Field Notes.

Yeast.—Those who are not in the neighborhood of bakers, and cannot procure the fermentation called yeast, may make a better substitute as follows: Boil one pound of flour, quarter of a pound of brown sugar, and a little salt, in two gallons of water for an hour. When milk warm, bottle and cork it close. It will be ready for use in twenty-four hours.

Animal Temperature.—In man the temperature of the blood is 98 degrees; in sheep, 102 degrees; in ducks, 107 degrees. During the cattle of ague, the heat of man's blood falls to 96 degrees and 94 degrees, while at the height of fever it rises to 102 degrees, and even to 105 degrees.—Her. of Prog.

"Church in a Spit-Box."—Henry Ward Beecher says of tobacco: "If there ever was a weed whose roots went down till they drew sap from below, that is it. A snuffing, smoking, chewing, spitting minister, ought to have a church in a spit-box. He is not fit to stand in ordinary congregations, nor to live in ordinary families."

☞ In 1740 Charles VI., Emperor of Austria, died "of an indigestion of mushrooms, which caused to him an apoplexy; and that dish of mushrooms changed the destiny of Europe.—Secret History of the Court of France.

To remove Iron Rust.—Take a little good cream of tartar and tie it up with the spotted part. When you put the article in to boil, be careful not to stir it till it boils, and it will disappear if the tartar is good.

Youth's Department.

Three Happy Children.

A GLIMPSE AT A CONTENTED FAMILY.

I saw a child's paradise last summer. It happened in this way. I was rambling in a retired neighborhood, not very remarkable for beauty of scenery or tasteful dwellings. The farm-houses were neatly painted, and the barns had an air of well-to-do plenty, but the scantiness of ornamental trees and shrubbery was somewhat singular. However, in a back street or lane, I came upon a house almost hidden behind hedges, evergreens, climbing honeysuckles, and fruit trees. It was unpretending, of a quiet color, but its expression (every house has an expression) was cheerful. Feeling tired, I said to myself, "What a good time they must have eating cherries here! I would like to stroll on and rest in this green spot."

Just then, a large, black dog sprang out, and startled me very much.

"He won't hurt you, he never bites"—and there, holding him by the tail, stood a spirited boy, perhaps five years old. His bright, brown eyes were softened by lashes so long and black that they shaded his cheeks, and made his face handsome without regular features.

"Nep barks at peddlers, but he never hurts ladies," said the boy, gallantly.

Desirous of an interview, I asked, "Could you give me a glass of water? I am thirsty."

"Wid the greatest pledure—shall I bring it here, or will you come into the house wid me? Mamma isn't at home, but Katie is."

I inquired: "And who is Katie?"

He looked surprised, as if I ought to know.

Why, Katie is my sister; she's older than I am, and can ride on horseback—most nine years old."

"Are you and Katie the only children?"

"No, indeed! We have a little brother, but he hasn't got to be a boy yet—he wears dresses."

The child's innocent politeness was so enticing that I accompanied him into the house. Here I was disappointed. I expected to see a dainty, white-muslin curtained interior, with pretty hanging baskets and crochet tidies, etc. Nothing of the kind—but as much contempt of the ornamental within as there was profusion without. A well-worn oil-cloth upon the hall floor; no carpet on the stairs and in the parlor—not an article claiming to elegance, except, perhaps, the piano, at which Katie sat practicing.

Katie did not in the least resemble her brother. She had that kind of hair that is "gold in the sun and brown in the shade," and those changeful gray eyes which, without claiming to be the most beautiful, are the most expressive. I must own her nose was en pen retroussé, but her mouth was bewitchingly dimpled, and kept pace in expression with those changeful eyes. She was shy to awkwardness, and evidently glad to run and bring the glass of water, leaving the boy to entertain me.

Having drank, I reluctantly arose to go—sorry I had no excuse to remain longer. My little host said:

"Why! you haven't seen the baby—come up into the nursery, and I'll show him to you."

He took me by the hand with such an irresistible manner that I accompanied him, Katie leading the way with a pleasant look, but saying nothing.

As the nursery door opened, I seemed to be peeping into a fairy paradise. Looking to the East, it had evidently been chosen as the most cheerful room in the house. Little shelves and brackets were in every side and corner, covered with the bright accumulations of many Christmases and birthdays.

Upon a fleecy mat sat a child nearly two years old, with eyes as blue as robin's eggs, and in great glee over a turtle in a basin of water. The turtle was not larger than a quarter of a dollar, but its lively motions filled the child with ecstasy as he shouted "urtle! urtle!" The nurse, a comely young woman, sat sewing. Occasionally she caught a fly and threw it into the basin. The tiny turtle would seize it, biting off first the head, then the body, and lastly the wings. This was a cruelty which I could not relish, but the enthusiasm of baby was extraordinary. He shook his yellow hair and clapped his fat hands, squealing with delight. From the baby and his extemporaneous aquarium my eyes wandered about this room.

"Would you like to see me saw?" asked my young master of ceremonies. No sooner said than done! Open flew a closet door—out came a little saw-horse, a real saw and a real stick of wood, which he vigorously converted into short pieces, that he said were "just the size grandma likes for kindling her fire." Then he proceeded to show me other attractions of the nursery. There was a globe of gold-fish perpetually at play—a tame cricket, that sang every evening in the closet; a large chrysalis, that was daily expecting to emerge a gay butterfly; some clippings of the leaf-cutter bee; book-shelves, where Mother Goose held a subordinate place;—but what struck me with astonishment were the walls of the room. They were covered, not with whitewash, nor paint, nor fresco; but from floor to ceiling were pasted engravings! The effect of the black and white was so startling and peculiar, for a moment I thought of some crazy man's fancy; but soon I discovered "method in the madness." Around the base of the room, within range of yearling vision, was a menagerie of all kinds of animals. Baby, following the direction of my eyes, ran pointing with his sharp forefinger, saying, "See!—see!" at the horses, cows, and goats. His brother called me to a toad-fish, a sea-snake, and all kinds of ships, boats, and steamers. Katie, forgetting her shyness, pointed out Sancho Panza fighting the wind-mills. She introduced me to John Knox, preaching before Mary, Queen of Scots, and, in a low, enthusiastic words, touched off that grand old man's character, and her eyes grew black as she pointed out the shadowy temple of fame in Cole's Voyage of Life."

Every door was wreathed with bright flowers, every window was bordered with colored pictures of pleasant scenes in the life of our Savior.

Among all those pictures (and I suppose there were six hundred, large and small) I saw no battle-piece, no scalping Indian, no witch of Endor, no rude stage-dancer, no vulgar caricature—nothing that could suggest frightful dreams, or tell those young minds of aught but peace and purity, pleasure and beauty, in the world.

"What a capital idea for combining cultivation with amusement for these children!" I thought; and I asked, "who made these walls so pretty?"

"Papa brought home the pictures and mamma pasted them up. Last winter papa thought he must go to the city to live, and he was going to sell this place, but we cried so about leaving our nursery and all pictures, papa gave it up."

Happy children! undazzled by the toys, dress, and artificial novelties of New York city, you have the pure taste to choose your gingham aprons and your country home—a home where your welfare is evidently the first consideration!

Happy children! with your birds and flowers, insects, books, and pictures, you are not studying nature at second-hand, but with your own clear eyes; and I believe Agassiz himself could learn some natural history from your acute observation.

Happy children! may you grow up as virtuous as you are innocent, as active as you are intelligent, as benevolent as you will be cultivated.

Sweet sister and brothers, sheltered there from vexation and temptation! I felt when I passed out of the gate as if I left you in the Happy Valley of Rasselas.

Bethesda.

"I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool."—John 5: 7.

Long had he waited (and perchance learned patience
In sorrow's school;)
That "season" at which angel-pinions rippled
Bethesda's pool.

And when at length the wondrous scene is witnessed,
With tear-dimmed eyes;
Alas! "another steppeth down before" him
And gains the prize.

But still he lingers, gazing on that fountain,
So dark and still—
There's balm of health in its mysterious "moving"—
Cure for each ill.

Oft and again 'neath angel feet they yielded—
Those waters cool;
And yet his tottering limbs refused to bear him
Into the pool.

But while despair was weaving her dark mantle
Around his soul,
The Galilean, passing by, beheld him,
And made him whole!

Methinks I too have wept beside that fountain,
Opened for sin,
Forgetful that e'en then One, longing, waited
To help me in.

Until comes stealing, like delicious music,
My spirit o'er,—
"Wouldst be made whole?" I recogn'ze my Savior,
And weep no more!

For the Crisis.

"Awake, thou that Sleepest!"

Brother, Sister in Christ, scattered over this dreary earth, has the long, dark night of watching caused thee to be weary and slumber at thy post, while darkness has been hovering over the land, and shut out for a season, as it were, from your visions, the sunlight of God's glory, for a trial of your faith, like Israel of old? Has thy heart fainted within thee, and been pressed down beneath a load of sorrow, or of hope deferred? Hast thou given up all for lost, saying in thine heart, God has forsaken his people? Or in this time of temptation, which has come upon the whole earth, hast thou been overcome by sin and unbelief? Has thy love grown cold, and do the signs of the near approach of the Master strike a dread upon thine heart, and chill thy very soul? O, then, these words are for thee,—awake, thou that sleepest! Thy life is in danger; the war trumpet is sounding through the land, the great day of the battle of God Almighty is at hand, and you, his sentinels, are sleeping at your posts, while the evening is all around you, and you willingly yielding yourselves up prisoners to the rebel prince. If he does not destroy thee immediately, will it save thee to be liberated on a parole of honor, no more to fight against the prince of darkness? Nay, verily. Thou hast enlisted for life. The law has been read to thee; thou hast sworn allegiance to the King of kings. Rebel against his government, and you die. Sleep at your post, and you peril your life. Desert, and when the war-cry is sounded, if found within the enemy's lines, thy doom is sealed forever. O, then, awake and sound the alarm, for the enemy is upon you with all his forces. Arouse thy fellow soldiers and cry mightily for help, for thy leader is near to help thee. His faithful sentinels are all protected, wherever they are stationed. O then look about thee; watch, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; and if he finds thee sleeping, will it be well with thee? Many of thy fellow soldiers are lost; some have fallen asleep, while others have given themselves up to the enemy, and to save reproach have ceased to fight against him, and are now found in his employ; and what says the Word? "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." Life, then, is promised thee, "eternal life," when the victory is gained,—and victory is sure, though long deferred.

Our King is a conquering King. Principalities and powers must give way before him. His army is being gathered from the four corners of the earth, and though there are many lonely watchers like thyself on the outposts, they shall be gathered in a little while, if faithful, and called to pass a grand review. The long dark night is at passed, the light breaks o'er yonder "the war-cry of the nations is but the Ping in of the day when the sun of Righteousness shall "arise with healing in his wings." O, then, awake! shake off thy drowsy feelings; slumber not, at the peril of thy soul; stand at thy post; fight valiantly in thy Master's cause. Souls are perishing all around thee, and wilt thou be idle?

"Oh watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

Thy Master's eye is upon thee; he pities thy weakness, but punishes disobedience, and yet forgives the impenitent sinner.

But sayest thou in thy heart, "My Lord delayeth his coming." I have looked, and watched, and prayed for his coming these many years, yet 'all things continue as they were from the beginning'"? Ah! thy very thoughts condemn thee. Did not thy Master say, that when the servant should thus say in his heart, that he was nigh even at the doors? and are not all the signs being fulfilled? Has not the cry of peace and safety been sounding through the land? Was there ever a time when there was so little faith in the earth? Is not the love of many waxing cold? and are not "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth," while the nations have become angry? Are these signs not enough to convince thee that the last day is at hand? If not, I fear that thou wilt sleep on until the last great trumpet sounds to awaken thee "to shame and everlasting contempt."

Christian, thou that hast stood long and faithfully at thy post, light is beaming for thee. Long and tedious hath been thy watch upon the tower, but Jesus has stood by thee. Thy watch is almost ended, and soon wilt thou be relieved. The hosts of hell have long tried to overcome thee and find thee sleeping at thy post; but thank God, who will give thee victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. O, may God send out his light and truth, that the faithful may be comforted, and the slumbering awakened; that the whole church may have on "the whole armor of God," fighting manfully in his cause.

Maine State Mission.

With this record I close the labors of the first quarter of our State mission, and with facts more interesting and encouraging than in any past communication, inasmuch as I can relate the revival of the Lord's work and the conversion of sinners to Christ.

On Sunday, Nov. 17th, I supplied the desk of Bro. R. R. York, Yarmouth, being at home, and was permitted to baptize three young converts, among whom was my little daughter Eliza, in the 14th year of her age. I thought of the days I first visited Yarmouth, by the request of Bro. York, in the year 1846, and when he was alone in the faith of the near advent of Jesus Christ, and when he and I wept over the unbelief and hardness of this people. O what a change now! Here is a happy little band of brethren and sisters looking for the Lord; many hearts to sympathize with us, and worship the coming Lord and Redeemer together; while others are being converted and added to the church. And here, where I had crossed the stream so often in sadness, I now was permitted to baptize three souls into Christ, and my own dear daughter among them. How mysterious and far beyond our calculations and foresight are the ways of Providence! In the afternoon we enjoyed the communion of the Lord's Supper, Bro. York and myself officiating at the head of the feast, while we also gave the right hand of fellowship to those who joined the little body of believers. The Lord be praised for the day of salvation and privilege among this people, and with our beloved brother York, who has labored indefatigably to build up the cause of his coming Savior in this place so many years.

Monday evening, Nov. 18th, I preached at Cumberland to a good and attentive audience; and on Friday evening following, and over the Sabbath, filled an appointment by request of the brethren in the same place. Our meetings were solemn, and I trust not in vain. The 21st, Thanksgiving, being at home, I attended with Bro. York the First Cong. church, and heard the pastor preach a faithful discourse from the following text: "He that stealeth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death."—Ex. 21: 16. With but few exceptions I could subscribe to most that was said. After the service I accompanied Bro. York to his home, where, together with my companion, we enjoyed a Thanksgiving dinner around the hospitable board of our brother and sister in Christ. In the evening many of the brethren and sisters came in, and we conversed of higher and nobler themes than many parties of the day, and closed the interview with the united voice of praise, and united hearts in prayer.

Nov. 29th, I commenced a series of meetings in North Raymond, where three years ago I labored in a revival with Bro. Jesse Partridge, when the Lord greatly blessed the people, converting many souls to himself. The fruits of that revival and work of grace remain to this day. I put up at Bro. Thurlow's, who was at that time converted to God, together with his nearest neighbor, who were before their conversion living at variance and "hateful and hating one another," but now, having been reconciled by the blood of the cross, are living peaceable and happy lives. O what will the grace of God do? What will it not do for the children of men? Bro. Thurlow remarked at our morning prayer, "Three years ago you were here at the establishing of our family altar, and it has remained to this day." How happy was this reminiscence of the past; and what a satisfaction to see the work of grace continue through years and scenes of trial and backsliding.

On Saturday evening a prominent citizen of the town, much esteemed and well known for his moral and upright and stable character, arose for prayers at the close of our service, which had been unusually solemn. On the next day—Lord's day morning, at 9 o'clock, I visited him at his residence. I found him still earnestly inquiring—"What shall I do to be saved?" After conversing with him, pointing out the way to Christ by faith, obedience, and prayer, he consented to pray for himself and join me in an earnest cry for the salvation of his soul. We bowed before the Lord; his companion, an unconverted lady but not without feeling, refusing as yet to do so, remained in the room. At the close of my prayer, the afflicted soul cried out for mercy, and in his prayer said—"O Lord! thou knowest that this is the first time these proud knees have ever bowed before thee." He confessed his sins and asked forgiveness, and subsequently found great peace, and is now exhorting his unconverted neighbors and friends to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus. His wife immediately left the room in tears as we arose from our knees. I saw her before leaving, and pointed her to "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." On Monday evening she arose voluntarily without request, and asked for the prayers of christians. On, this evening, the last of my stay in Raymond, I tarried the night at the residence of these new believers in Christ. On arriving at the house, I found this lady already enjoying a measure of peace, remarking that she "would not again pass through such agony as she had endured for the three days past for anything; but now she felt some little peace." The next morning found these friends both in the enjoyment of hope; and we, having read a portion of God's word, all bowed around the mercy-seat, and each prayed, and then and there erected another family altar in this town, after three years had passed away.

On Sabbath afternoon I was sent for by the wife of Bro. Morrell, the keeper of the Poor Farm, to come and pray for her. I found her in deep godly sorrow for sin, and in tears seeking to know what she should do to be saved. Instructing her in the way of life the best I could, she consented to pray for herself, and with her companion we all kneeled down and called upon the name of the Lord, and she found mercy in Jesus, and now is joyful in hope. Tuesday evening following I preached to a small audience on Maybury Hill, tarrying the night with Bro. Maybury and sharing his kind hospitality. I would that the Lord would revive his work again in this region. It is barren and cold; the people are unalarmed on their way to hell! Who shall be the instrument of awakening them from their slumbers before the day of God?

Dec. 4th I commenced a series of meetings at South Casco, in the neighborhood of Bro. Peter Staples, with whom I put up and tarried most of the time I remained in the region. However, all the friends were kind and hospitable. The Lord reward them for their labor of love. Bro. Staples and his family have much claim upon my gratitude, and we were mutually blest in the christian interview we enjoyed. Our meetings in Casco increased daily in interest and numbers. I found the people cold and disheartened, and left them greatly revived. As in Raymond, and as is my custom, I visited from house to house, praying with and exhorting the people to seek after God, and distributing tracts among them. There occur many incidents in such visits of the most interesting character which it would be a pleasure to record, but we shall not be able to do so. They are treasured up in our memory, and I know in the "Book of God's remembrance," to be reviewed in the day of reckoning. I found several unconverted persons of both sexes during my visits deeply interested for themselves. They would weep and confess themselves lost and in need of a Savior, as I conversed with them; and I hope some of them will find, if they have not already found, peace in believing. One soul was blest and confessed the fact before the people on the last evening of our meeting. Others promised that they would seek the Lord at once.

On Monday evening, Dec. 9th, we appointed a prayer meeting at the residence of Bro. Peter Staples, wishing to set the brethren and sisters unitedly to work before we left, and to commence prayer meetings in the different sections of their town for the revival of God's work. Though the roads were bad, muddy and wet, yet we had a large, old-fashioned room full of souls, and a solemn and interesting meeting. Another was appointed for Wednesday evening, and I trust such has been the increased interest, that others will follow, and many souls be revived and converted and saved as the result of this effort in Casco. Saturday evening, Dec. 7th, I held a meeting in Raymond village, a distance of about four miles, which was fully attended, and the people listened to the words of life attentively, and some expressed a desire for my return at some future day to preach unto them the things of the kingdom of God.

Tuesday, Dec. 10th, I returned by way of North Raymond and learned that the good work was going on blessedly; many had been quickened, some sinners converted, and others were inquiring. A prayer meeting was held in the evening at a private house occupied by a poor family, and in an out of the way place to accommodate those in that neighborhood, and yet a good number were present, and two on this evening desired prayers, and one poor soul cried aloud for mercy. I learned that Bro. James Albert Libbey was to preach the next evening, and that they were anticipating a rich feast and a glorious meeting. Eld. True Jordan has been laboring the last summer in this section to good acceptance, and was with the people on the preceding Sabbath. The Lord carry on this blessed work of revival in all that region, and may his truth and salvation prevail.

I am this day at home, but designing to leave for the Mission field again to-morrow. This work calls me much abroad, and yet I am willing to forego the enjoyment and endearments of family and home for

"The love of the Lord, and to seek for the lost."

Brethren and sisters, pray that my labors as your missionary may be more abundantly blessed of God. O. R. Fassett.

Milton's Prayer of Patience.

I am old and blind!
Men point at me as smitten by God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted of my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see—
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to Thee!

All merciful One!
When men are farthest, then art thou most near;
When friends pass by, my weaknesses to shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

Thy glorious face
Is leaning towards me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knee
I recognize Thy purpose, clearly shown—
My vision Thou hast dimmed that I may see
Thyself—Thyself alone!

I have naught to fear;
This darkness is the shadow of Thy wing;
Beneath it I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling, where foot of mortal ne'er hath been,
Wrapped in that radiance from the sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go;
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angel lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
That earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime,
My being fills with rapture; waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit; strains sublime
Break over me unsought.

Give me now my lyre!
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine!
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine!

The Spider and its Victim.

On a hot summer day, a gentleman sat down to think over a subject on which his mind was greatly troubled. He was wondering, how it was that so many of his acquaintance had yielded to temptation, and been destroyed. He was wondering how the great Tempter could so soon get them entangled in his nets, and never let them loose again till they were ruined.

While he was thinking over the subject, he saw a worm moving softly along in the footpath. He moved quietly, and without any fear. "Now," said the gentleman to himself, "that poor worm can go safely, though it has no reason to guide it. There lies in wait no destroyer to entangle it, while our young men, with reason and conscience, are destoyed by scores?" Just then he saw a spider cross the path about a foot in front of the worm. She did not appear to be thinking of the worm, nor the worm of her. When she got quite across the path she stopped, and stood still. The worm kept on, but soon was brought to a stand by a small cord, too small for our eyes to see, which the spider had spun as she rushed before him. Finding himself stopped, the worm turned to go back. The instant he turned back, back darted the spider, spinning a new cord behind her. The poor worm was now brought up a second time, and twisted and turned every way to escape. He seemed now to suspect some mischief, for he ran this way and that way, and every time he turned the spider darted around him weaving another rope. There gradually was no space left for him, except in the direction of the hole of the spider. That way was left open, but on all other sides, by darting across or around, the space was gradually growing less. It was noticed, too, that every time the worm turned towards the hole of the spider, he was instantly hemmed in, so that he could not get back quite so far as before. So his very agony continually brought him nearer the place of death. It took a full hour to do all this, and by that time the worm was brought close to the hole of his destroyer. He now seemed to feel that he was helpless, and if he could have screamed, he doubtless would have done so. And now the spider eyed him a moment, as if enjoying his terror, and laughing at her own skill, and then darted on him, and struck him with her fangs. Instantly the life began to flow out. Again she struck him, and the poor thing rolled over in agony and died. Mrs. Spider now hitched one of her little ropes to her victim and drew him into her hole, where she feasted at her leisure, perhaps counting over the number of poor victims whom she had destroyed in the same way before.

When I see a boy who goes with bad company, and who listens to their profane and licentious conversation, I think of the spider and her victim.

When I see a boy breaking the Sabbath by going off to fish, to swim, or to play;

When I see one disregarding his father and mother, and doing what he knows will grieve them;

When I see one occasionally going to the oyster cellar, and to the drinking saloon, in company;

When I see one going to the theatre, where nothing good, but all evil, is displayed;

When I have reason to suspect that he takes money from his father or his employer, which is none of his, but which he hopes to replace—

Why, I always think of the spider and her victim, and mourn that the great Destroyer is weaving his meshes about every such boy, and is drawing him towards his own awful home! The dead are there.—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

Choose a Great Object.

The object of life's achievement depends very much on the work that a man takes hold of. Wilberforce used to say of Sir Walter Scott's fine romances, that they always put him in mind of a giant cracking nuts. I saw at Omer's an illustrated manuscript which was the result of thirty years of patient labor. Alexander conquered the world and Paul evangelized it in less time than that. Many a man has taken as much time to fashion a curious toy as it would have taken him to build a house or ship. Let us not work upon toys, or, labor long and hard as we will, we shall have nothing but toys to show at last as the result of our life's work. For no man's work can be higher than his aim or longer than his plan. The greatest object, incomparably, to which human wit and energy can be directed, and on which this frail and short life can be expended, is to serve God and to save men. Whether we look at the inherent dignity of the object, or the vastness and durability of its results, or the magnificence of its rewards, it surpasses any other human enterprise infinitely more than St. Peter's at Rome surpasses the cob-house built by a child.

And what is peculiarly encouraging here is, that this mightiest of human or created works is within the reach of the weakest and the meanest of laborers. Though you have not the skill or the strength to execute anything which shall bring you riches, position, or fame among your fellow-men, yet you may win a crown, a sceptre, a throne, a kingdom, among the last and imperishable things that are not seen and are eternal. For "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are; that no flesh might glory in his presence." And Jesus says, "If any man will serve me, let him follow me, and where I am, there shall my servant be."—Tract Journal.

A Touching Scene.

A French paper says that Lucille Rome, a pretty girl, with blue eyes and fair hair, poorly but neatly clad, was brought before the Sixth Court of Correction, under the charge of vagrancy.

"Does any one claim you?" asked the magistrate.

"Ah! my good sir," said she, "I have no longer friends; my father and mother are dead—I have only my brother James. The Court must send you to the House of Correction."

"Here I am, sister—here I am! do not fear;" cried a childish voice from the other end of the court, and at the same instant a little boy with a lively countenance started forth from amid the crowd, and stood before the Judge.

"Who are you?" said he.

"James Rome, the brother of this little girl."

"Your age?"

"Thirteen."

"And what do you want?"

"I come to claim my Lucille."

"But have you the means of providing for her?"

"Yesterday I had not, but now I have. Don't be afraid, Lucille."

"Oh, how good you are, James!"

"About a fortnight ago," continued the boy, "my poor mother died of a bad cough, for it was very cold at home. We were in great trouble. Then I said to myself, 'I will be an artist, and when I know a good trade I will support my sister.' I went apprentice to a brush-maker. Every day I used to carry her half of my dinner, and at night I took her secretly to my room, and she slept in my bed while I slept on the floor. But it appears she had not enough to eat. One day she begged on the Boulevard, and was taken up. When I heard that, I said to myself: 'Come, my boy, things cannot last so; you must find something better.'

"I soon found a place, where I am lodged, fed, and clothed, and have twenty francs a month. I have also found a good woman, who, for these twenty francs, will take care of Lucille, and teach her needlework. I claim my sister."

"My boy," said the Judge, "your conduct is very honorable. However, your sister cannot be set at liberty till to-morrow."

"Never mind, Lucille," said the boy, "I will come and fetch you early to-morrow." Then turning to the magistrate, he said, "I may kiss her, may I not, sir?"

He threw himself into the arms of his sister, and both wept tears of affection.

Yielding to the Majority.

The following account of the venerated Dr. Kendrick's conduct when voted down by his brethren, is from the pen of the late James Edmunds, a man who displayed similar characteristics to those he so well describes and praises in Kendrick. An important lesson may be learned from it:

"Dr. Kendrick was indefatigable in advocating what he deemed to be right; but he always respected the voice of the majority of his brethren, when a decision was arrived at after full discussion and prayer for Divine guidance. His favorite policy had been to have the Hamilton Seminary a sacred retreat, where pious young men, far from the influence of the ungodly, might prosecute their studies unmolested. But after the course of study had been extended to a full collegiate term, the question of admitting others than candidates for the ministry came to be entertained. The Doctor opposed it with all his powers. A debate ensued, when the final question was brought before the Board. For the first time I found myself opposed to him, and that on a course of policy which he deemed vital. We debated with great earnestness till after midnight. He stood alone, but struggled like a giant against us all; from his manner one would suppose he would have left in despair, and given up the institution to its fate if out-voted. The vote was taken. He alone voted in the negative. He arose and said, 'Brethren, I have used every means in my power to prevent this; but after hearing all my arguments, you have decided contrary to my judgment. I shall now cordially do all in my power to make this new policy succeed. I fear it will not; but you shall have my hearty co-operation in giving it a fair trial.'"—New York Chronicle.

Simplicity of Dress.—Female loveliness never appears to so good advantage as when set off with simplicity of dress. No artist ever decks his angels with towering feathers and grand jewelry; and our dear human angels, if they would make good their title to that name, should carefully avoid ornaments, which properly belong to Indian squaws and African princess. These tinselries may serve to give effect on the stage or upon a ball-room floor, but in daily life there is no substitute for simplicity. A vulgar taste is not to be disguised by gold or diamonds.

ITEMS.

To Remove Clinkers from Stoves.—Some kinds of coal are liable to form clinkers which adhere to the fire-brick lining of stoves, grates and furnaces, and become a source of great annoyance, as they cannot be removed by usual means without breaking the fire-brick. Persons who are thus annoyed will be glad to know that by putting a few oyster shells in the fire close to the clinkers, the latter will become so loose as to be readily removed without breaking the lining.—Scientific American.

Keeping Grapes.—We are in the habit of keeping grapes for common use during the winter, in the following manner: Take clean cheese boxes, pick off the bunches of grapes carefully, and pack them in dry grape leaves. Keep the boxes in a dry, cool place, being careful to not let them freeze. We generally have grapes till May.—Cor. of Field Notes.

Yeast.—Those who are not in the neighborhood of bakers, and cannot procure the fermentation called yeast, may make a better substitute as follows: Boil one pound of flour, quarter of a pound of brown sugar, and a little salt, in two gallons of water for an hour. When milk warm, bottle and cork it close. It will be ready for use in twenty-four hours.

Animal Temperature.—In man the temperature of the blood is 98 degrees; in sheep, 102 degrees; in ducks, 107 degrees. During the cold of ague, the heat of man's blood falls to 96 degrees and 94 degrees, while at the height of fever it rises to 102 degrees, and even to 105 degrees.—Her. of Prog.

"Church in a Spit-Box."—Henry Ward Beecher says of tobacco: "If there ever was a weed whose roots went down till they drew sap from below, that is it. A snuffing, smoking, chewing, spitting minister, ought to have a church in a spit-box. He is not fit to stand in ordinary congregations, nor to live in ordinary families."

☞ In 1740 Charles VI., Emperor of Austria, died "of an indigestion of mushrooms, which caused to him an apoplexy; and that dish of mushrooms changed the destiny of Europe.—Secret History of the Court of France.

To remove Iron Rust.—Take a little good cream of tartar and tie it up with the spotted part. When you put the article in to boil, be careful not to stir it till it boils, and it will disappear if the tartar is good.

Youth's Department.

Three Happy Children.

A GLIMPSE AT A CONTENTED FAMILY.

I saw a child's paradise last summer. It happened in this way. I was rambling in a retired neighborhood, not very remarkable for beauty of scenery or tasteful dwellings. The farm-houses were neatly painted, and the barns had an air of well-to-do plenty, but the scantiness of ornamental trees and shrubbery was somewhat singular. However, in a back street or lane, I came upon a house almost hidden behind hedges, evergreens, climbing honeysuckles, and fruit trees. It was unpretending, of a quiet color, but its expression (every house has an expression) was cheerful. Feeling tired, I said to myself, "What a good time they must have eating cherries here! I would like to stroll on and rest in this green spot."

Just then, a large, black dog sprung out, and startled me very much.

"He won't hurt you, he never bites"—and there, holding him by the tail, stood a spirited boy, perhaps five years old. His bright, brown eyes were softened by lashes so long and black that they shaded his cheeks, and made his face handsome without regular features.

"Nep barks at peddlers, but he never hurts ladies," said the boy, gallantly.

Desirous of an interview, I asked, "Could you give me a glass of water? I am thirsty."

"Wid the greatest pledure—shall I bring it here, or will you come into the house wid me? Mamma isn't at home, but Katie is."

I inquired: "And who is Katie?"

He looked surprised, as if I ought to know.

Why, Katie is my sister; she's older than I am, and can ride on horseback—most nine years old."

"Are you and Katie the only children?"

"No, indeed! We have a little brother, but he hasn't got to be a boy yet—he wears dresses."

The child's innocent politeness was so enticing that I accompanied him into the house. Here I was disappointed. I expected to see a dainty, white-muslin curtained interior, with pretty hanging baskets and crochet tidies, etc. Nothing of the kind—but as much contempt of the ornamental within as there was profusion without. A well-worn oil-cloth upon the hall floor; no carpet on the stairs and in the parlor—not an article claiming to elegance, except, perhaps, the piano, at which Katie sat practicing.

Katie did not in the least resemble her brother. She had that kind of hair that is "gold in the sun and brown in the shade," and those changeful gray eyes which, without claiming to be the most beautiful, are the most expressive. I must own her nose was en peu retroussé, but her mouth was bewitchingly dimpled, and kept pace in expression with those thoughtful eyes. She was shy to awkwardness, and evidently glad to run and bring the glass of water, leaving the boy to entertain me.

Having drunk, I reluctantly arose to go—sorry I had no excuse to remain longer. My little beau said:

"Why! you haven't seen the baby—come up into the nursery, and I'll show him to you."

He took me by the hand with such an irresistible manner that I accompanied him, Katie leading the way with a pleasant look, but saying nothing.

As the nursery door opened, I seemed to be peeping into a fairy paradise. Looking to the East, it had evidently been chosen as the most cheerful room in the house. Little shelves and brackets were in every side and corner, covered with the bright accumulations of many Christmases and birthdays.

Upon a fleecy mat sat a child nearly two years old, with eyes as blue as robin's eggs, and in great glee over a turtle in a basin of water. The turtle was not larger than a quarter of a dollar, but its lively motions filled the child with ecstacy as he shouted "urtle! urtle!" The nurse, a comely young woman, sat sewing. Occasionally she caught a fly and threw it into the basin. The tiny turtle would seize it, biting off first the head, then the body, and lastly the wings. This was a cruelty which I could not relish, but the enthusiasm of baby was extraordinary. He shook his yellow hair and clapped his fat hands, squealing with delight. From the baby and his extemporaneous aquarium my eyes wandered about this room.

"Would you like to see me saw?" asked my young master of ceremonies. No sooner said than done! Open flew a closet door—out came a little saw-horse, a real saw and a real stick of wood, which he vigorously converted into short pieces, that he said were "just the size grandma likes for kindling her fire." Then he proceeded to show me other attractions of the nursery. There was a globe of gold-fish perpetually at play—a tame cricket, that sang every evening in the closet; a large chrysalis, that was daily expecting to emerge a gay butterfly some clippings of the leaf-cutter bee; book-shelves, where Mother Goose held a subordinate place;—but what struck me with astonishment were the walls of the room. They were covered, not with whitewash, nor paint, nor fresco; but from floor to ceiling were pasted engravings! The effect of the black and white was so startling and peculiar, for a moment I thought of some crazy man's fancy; but soon I discovered "method in the madness." Around the base of the room, within range of yearling vision, was a menagerie of all kinds of animals. Baby, following the direction of my eyes, ran pointing with his sharp forefinger, saying, "See! see!" to the horses, cows, and goats. His brother called me to a toad-fish, a sea-snake, and all kinds of ships, boats, and steamers. Katie, forgetting her shyness, pointed out Sancho Panza fighting the wind-mills. She introduced me to John Knox, preaching before Mary, Queen of Scots, and, in a few enthusiastic words, touched off that grand old man's character, and her eyes grew black as she pointed out the shadowy temple of fame in Cole's Voyage of Life."

Every door was wreathed with bright flowers, every window was bordered with colored pictures of pleasant scenes in the life of our Savior.

Among all those pictures (and I suppose there were six hundred, large and small) I saw no battle-piece, no scalping Indian, no witch of Endor, no rude stage-dancer, no vulgar caricature—nothing that could suggest frightful dreams, or tell those young minds of aught but peace and purity, pleasure and beauty, in the world.

"What a capital idea for combining cultivation with amusement for these children!" I thought; and I asked, "who made these walls so pretty?"

"Papa brought home the pictures and mamma pasted them up. Last winter papa thought he must go to the city to live, and he was going to sell this place, but we cried so about leaving our nursery and all pictures, papa gave it up."

Happy children! undazzled by the toys, dress and artificial novelties of New York city, you have the pure taste to choose your gingham aprons and your country home—a home where your welfare is evidently the first consideration!

Happy children! with your birds and flowers, insects, books, and pictures, you are not studying nature at second-hand, but with your own clear eyes; and I believe Agassiz himself could learn some natural history from your acute observation.

Happy children! may you grow up as virtuous as you are innocent, as active as you are intelligent, as benevolent as you will be cultivated.

Sweet sister and brothers, sheltered there from vexation and temptation! I felt when I passed out of the gate as if I left you in the Happy Valley of Rasselas.

I've heard of a Land.

BY S. S. BREWER.

I've heard of a land of purest delight,
Where the mild zephyrs play and the sky e'er is bright,
Of glory-gilt mountains, and people that sing
The sweetest of praises to Jesus their King.

I've heard of a land where the mild sun is beaming,
Where its soft golden light is eternally streaming,
Where the clear crystal rills, o'er pebbled gems flowing,
Meander through banks of sweet flowrets growing.

I've heard of a land without sorrow or sighing,
Where tears never flow for the sick or the dying,
Where the blood-ransomed hosts are eternally singing,
And harmony reigns in pure melody ringing.

I've heard of a land where, on mount and vale growing,
The undying plants their fragrance are throwing,
On palm-bearing victors, whose praises are hight'ning,
And the weight of their glory forever is bright'ning.

I've heard of a land—the immortal saints straying
'Neath clear sun-lit skies, the golden beams playing.—
Where sweep their glad harps, in ecstacies telling
Their praise to Emmanuel in full chorus swelling.

Land of my home! thank God, we are nearing;
Signs of redemption are daily appearing;
Hasten the hour that brings us translation!
O! wake up thy saints and give them salvation.

The Popular Error.

BY J. HEMENWAY.

If we may judge of a tree by its fruit, we are justified in the conclusion that the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is false, and ought to be abolished from every religious system in the land. It has become the foundation of an erroneous interpretation of the Scriptures, which has given rise to many of the false doctrines that divide and distract the christian world. Although it is not taught in the Bible, yet it is the idol doctrine of popular theology, before which all must bow or be excommunicated as heritics. It involves the present system of popular theology to that extent, that to question it is to question nearly the whole system, and be considered an enemy to the christian religion. The doctrine is reverenced for its age, and as a tradition from the fathers; but the time has come when the hoary headed sinner should be called in question for his evil deeds. He claims to have a pedigree from a divine family, but we have his genealogy which gives him his birth among the heathen philosophers; and he has the reputation of being at one time the supporter of a Pagan god; at another, the inventor of the Catholic purgatory, and a place of eternal torment; and finally, he is trying to introduce himself into respectable society as a reformer, and is the ringleader of a sect called Spiritualists, every where known as opposers to the christianity of the Bible.

The doctrine of the immortality of the soul has become a theological rock, upon which terms in the English language are tortured until made to confess the popular error. If found too extensive in meaning, they are shortened to the required sense; and if too limited, are stretched upon the rack until made to confess that the soul is immortal;—and thus the Bible is made to speak in favor of any doctrine that may arise from a belief in the popular error.

The evils that naturally arise from a false premise may be considered logical truths, provided the premise is accepted as a truth that needs no proof; hence we find erroneous doctrines advocated in sincerity and with a zeal that is worthy of a better cause. The immortality of the soul is assumed to be true, and all terms used in the Bible that conflict with the doctrine must be wrested from their proper meaning and made to conform to the premise assumed. If the soul is immortal then it cannot die, and, as a natural consequence, the term death, in its primary sense, is too strong; and thus every term in the Bible that denotes the end of the wicked must [illegible] the theological [illegible] of the prophets and apostles, in [illegible] ing to make them testify in favor of the popular error. The evils that naturally arise from this error are many. For example—"The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Thou shalt surely die," etc. This testimony from Paul, James, Ezekiel, and Moses, must be interpreted in this wise,—The wages of sin is eternal life in torment; or, the wages of sin is separation from the favor of God, or moral death. Either of the above interpretations will answer to sustain the popular error; hence, sometimes one is given and then the other, as will best answer the purpose on the occasion. The term death is too strong for the doctrine of the immortality of the soul; hence death does not mean death when applied to the soul, but means just the opposite. If this is a lawful use of language, then the Bible is an unmeaning jargon. If we adopt the doctrine of the immortality of the soul as true, then we are obliged to adopt the theological meaning of the terms death, destruction, perish; and that is to understand the prophets and apostles to mean just the opposite of what they say.

Language is not only wrested from its proper meaning and made to harmonize with the great error, but false doctrines grow out of the evil as natural results. If the soul is immortal, then it cannot die; hence, when the immortal part leaves the body, it must have a place to live. One evil produces another. Thus, the term hell is made to represent a place (and no one has told us where the place is) where the souls of the damned live in riot and blasphemy to all eternity, rebels against God's government; and God must suffer the evil, from the fact that he made them immortal, and is under the necessity of dividing his universe, and giving a large portion of it to the devils and the souls of the damned. He may abhor the evil, and thunder his judgments against it, but still he must eternally suffer it to continue. This makes evil stronger than good, and man more mighty than God. If it now grieves the Almighty to have men sin, then he must be grieved to all eternity. Justice may demand its pay for the debt of sin, but while the payment is being made the sinner is contracting a new debt, by continuing in sin, with no power to change, consequently sin outstrips justice in the race, and keeps an eternal debt on hand. Not only an imaginary hell must be created to harmonise the popular error with reason and Bible, but there must be a heaven created for the souls of the good, therefore the advocates of the false doctrine talk, sing and pray about a heaven for the righteous beyond the bounds of time and space; and where that is none can tell. The popular dogma has then the honor of wresting language, and making the apostles guilty of telling that which is not true; of detracting the power of God; also inventing a place of torment, and a heaven for the righteous beyond the bounds of space and time. It also does away with the necessity of a resurrection and judgment, and finally makes void the word of God that declares that the righteous shall inherit the earth and dwell therein forever.

If we adopt God's word as a rule of faith in all things, the evils are avoided, and we are free from the responsibility of saying that God does not mean what he says. Let the terms death, perish, and destruction, have their primary meaning, and there is no necessity for creating in our imagination a hell or heaven where God has not placed them. We can then read the Bible with delight, and rejoice in the hope of a resurrection of the dead, and the restitution of the earth to its former beauty, and the hope of eternal life in the paradise of God under the whole heaven. We can rejoice and praise God that death and him that has the power of death, that is, the devil, with all his rebellious subjects, will come to an end, and no more find a place in the universe of God to rebel against a righteous government. Let the King's banner be unfurled to the breeze—every soldier at his post, and make a charge upon the strong-hold of Satan—THE POPULAR ERROR—making no compromise with evil, and victory will turn on the side of Zion.

What Seest Thou?

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to answer the above in the fear of the Lord. I see that the leading Advent doctrines are Bible truths. I see that the wise and foolish are slumbering together, destitute of the power to be godly, without which, even the highest attainments in faith, knowledge, and self-denial are all in vain. I see that the present condition of the church without exception, is as given in your editorial of the 18th inst. I see that as Lot left Sodom, and as the christians left Jerusalem, so the elect must leave [illegible] church, or be overwhelmed in her ruin.

For the Crisis.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER ONE.

It has been one of the most perplexing themes the christian has been called upon to study and decide, whether the Lord God has appointed and given special instructions to all the various systems of government among men; whether he actually gives countenance to them, and requires obedience and co-operation on the part of christians to all the ordinances and laws of human government; whether there is not so wide a difference between the revealed character and declared principles of God's law and commands to men, and the known and published character of the various governments among men, and the laws to guide them, as to show they do not belong to, and did not originate from, the same source. The Bible in various parts speaks of governments, rulers, laws, subjects, obedience and disobedience. But the point to settle is, how far does God require christians to go in obeying the mandates of men? or, how much of God's law is incorporated in, or in harmony with, the enactments of human government? Or, do the principal elements of God's will and purposes underlie all the governments of men? Very different conclusions have been reached by various classes of thinkers on this important subject, and these conclusions have shaped the course and formed the religious basis of action for millions, in opposite directions. We wish to present a few thoughts on the subject, regardless of the positions of others, and give a Bible reason for them.

Early in the history of this world, God gave law to govern its inhabitants. How elaborate were the commands and prohibitions, how lengthy the code, we do not fully learn, only as stated in the first three chapters of Genesis. The principle of God's control is clearly shown in Gen. 1: 28, and 2: 16, 17, where he blessed the first pair, and gave them dominion over all living creatures. The Lord had a right to command and to pass sentence. His law was violated, (his sentence was executed.) But it is evident that the Lord still held man amenable to him, requiring obedience to his law and its various precepts. Generations came and passed. Abel is mentioned as living in union with God. Enoch also "walked with God." "Noah was a just man, perfect in his generations, and Noah walked with God." But with the multitudes of men was disobedience. "The earth also was corrupted before God, and the earth was filled with violence." So God by the flood destroyed these generations of men, excepting Noah and his family. Why was this? Because they did not obey the law of the Lord. Soon Noah and his family occupy an earth cleansed from the sins of the race. And God established his covenant with him and his seed, and with every living thing, and "gave the sign of his covenant," or law—"the bow in the cloud." Gen. 9. Here was law given with promise.

But as the families of Noah multiplied they began to disbelieve God's promise, and to disobey his law. They set up for themselves, "in the land of Shinar," to build "a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven." They refused to go abroad and "fill the earth," as God had commanded. They also feared another flood, and sought to prepare for it. God confounded them, broke up their plans, making them submit to his command, "scattering them abroad thence upon the face of all the earth." They were no longer in the covenant of God, nor obedient to his instructions. They now went abroad to establish cities, governments, kingdoms, and laws for themselves, and to choose rulers over them. Next, we read of Pharaohs, kings, and princes. Secession from God's plain, simple and righteous government had now, a second time, fully overcome the masses of men. Divided among themselves, filled with envy, pride, covetousness, and passion to rule over each other, war breaks out.—Gen. 14. Blood and carnage follow.

During this scene of revolt from God, with efforts to organize such governments as suited their rebellious ambition, there were a few men under the Lord's government, in "Salem." But little mention is made of them, yet that little contains much. The Lord had called out one man from the seceders in "Ur of the Chaldees," to occupy the land of Canaan. That man heard and accepted his law, and entered into covenant with God. So the Lord made him (Abraham) "the father of the faithful." Here is the Lord's testimony of him: "For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."—Gen. 18: 19. It appears that when the rebels began the fight, they took Sodom, and carried away captives therefrom,—Lot, one of the Lord's servants, Abraham's nephew, among others. Abraham fits out an armed force of his household and pursues them, and takes back the goods and his nephew. This is the first instance where we find the Lord's people ready to fight. This seems to be justified by the Lord's king-priest of Salem, who met Abraham and approved his course and blessed him in the name of the most high God—Gen. 14: 19, saying, "Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of heaven and earth. And blessed be the most high God, which hath delivered their enemies into their hand."

This circumstance has led some to argue that christians may fight. We shall attend to this point in its place. But let it be here noticed, that Abraham was under God's especial direction, and that he only took his own servants to go and rescue his kindred—Lot, and also he refused the spoils wholly.

Time passes. Abraham, Isaac, his son, and Jacob his grand-son, were each rulers under God of their children, and kindred, and servants. They ruled in righteousness, teaching the law of the Lord. We hear nothing of their being obedient to other governments, or aiding to sustain them. Sodom and Gomorrah, and other cities of the plain, become rife in rebellion. God sends down "fire and brimstone" and sweeps them off. Finally, Jacob's sons become infected with secession, and break from the patriarchal authority. Joseph is sold into Egypt. He rises from a slave to a ruler in Egypt. In this, again, some see that christians may be members of wicked governments, and be officers in them also; but this does not prove it. God can use Abraham, and Joseph, and Moses, as special instrumentalities to carry on his work, and as types of his future work of grace, while no others may be allowed to act any such part.

In process of time, the descendants of Abraham, all the family of Jacob, are brought into Egypt. Esau is not there. He joined the rebels against God's government, and is left out of God's family. How do the Hebrews act in Egypt? They are slaves. God had long before said they should be (Gen. 15: 13). But the day of Moses comes. His preservation is directly contrary to the law of the land. Who dare disobey the rulers? It was decreed that all the male children should be killed. Who knew that this was not God's decree? Were "the powers" of Egypt "ordained of God"? Who dare say, No? But the midwives disobeyed, the parents disobeyed; God aided them in a most miraculous manner in evading the law of the kingdom.

Moses lives—grows up—first is instructed by his godly parents in the law of the Lord, then in Egyptian lore, in all the wisdom and arts of their schools—adopted into the king's family, on the direct road to the throne. Did Moses obey the laws of Egypt? Did he reason that the time would come when he would sway the sceptre of Egypt—use a mighty influence—change the constitution, and abolish slavery, all in a legal way? No. He had been taught what God had said. How did he? "By faith he refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." What! a man occupying so honorable, so influential, and so advantageous a position, with wisdom learning, and piety, deny his birth-right, his citizenship, when he might have elevated society, raise the government from degradation and heathendom, to the acknowledgment of the true God, and the right principles of government? Ah! Moses had faith. He saw that God had better principles of government. He sympathized with the slaves—not as do many in the present day. He chose not the throne of power, not the generalship, but "to suffer affliction with the people of God." He tried reconciliation between the contending parties, but failed. Killing an Egyptian, he fled. Subsequently he returned, not with an armed force, but with God's promise. Israel is led out of bondage and across the sea. Not a weapon drawn against them. No barges to convey the host over the sea. The God of Israel leads the way. All is well.

The government of Egypt fared hard, with all its splendor, its excellent privileges, and its good institutions. Was God the founder of the government of Egypt? I think not. Yet he used that government to chasten Israel, and teach them his way, and to make his way, and to make his glory known among the heathen. Moses is constituted the teacher and head of the Lord's host. This was God's appointment; and when men seceded from that, they found trouble indeed. Some tried it, saying, "the people are all holy," and, "Moses took too much upon himself." The Lord opened the earth and swallowed them up quickly. The people multiply; the work is too much for one; others are appointed to assist. At length Moses is called into the immediate presence of God, and receives the code of law which is to be the special system by which to govern this great people. God had sent messages by angels before; now the "law is given by the disposition of angels" on Mount Sinai. It was "not perfect," but it was a system to last them until the time of reformation. It combined the civil and ecclesiastical, so that Israel might be kept a separate people from all other nations.

Human Ghostology.—No. 2.

II. PROGRESSION OF DEPARTED GHOSTS. Assuming that the human soul is an entity, a distinct person of itself, which survives the stroke of death, it is claimed by many that it enters upon a state of progression as soon as it leaves the body. To this we reply, if it progresses, either in a moral or intellectual sense, no matter how slowly, it would ultimately attain to a higher position than Jehovah now occupies, and to a higher position than he will ever occupy, unless God also progresses, and if God does progress, then he ever has progressed; hence, there must have been a time in his history when he was inferior to ourselves. Thus this theory of ghostly progression, when compelled to its legitimate conclusions, either proves that ghosts will finally outstrip the God of heaven, leaving him but a dwarf in their ranks, or that God himself was once inferior to ourselves!!! I say again, if souls progress, even ever so slowly, they will eventually reach to a prominence above God himself, unless God also progresses; and if he does progress, he ever has progressed, (for his attributes are unchanging) and if he ever has progressed, he must once have been even below the present position of man!!!

III. JUDGMENT FOR GHOSTS. "And the DEAD were judged out of those things which were written in the books." Rev. 20: 12. What part of man is judged? Inspiration answers, The DEAD were judged.

First. If the soul does not die, it is not judged; for it is the "dead" that are judged.

Secondly. If the soul is not "judged," it cannot be rewarded.

Thirdly. Thus the soul is neither saved or damned, if not "judged" or rewarded. In other words:—

First. If the body only dies, the body only will be judged, for it is the "dead" that are to be judged.

Secondly. If the body only is "judged," the body only is to be rewarded.

Thirdly. Thus the body only will be saved or damned: this would fill the kingdom with soulless bodies of the holy, and fill hell with the soulless bodies of the wicked, and leave the poor soul out of the question. But:—

First. If the whole man dies, the whole man is to be judged.

Secondly. If the whole man is judged, the whole man is rewarded.

Thirdly. Thus the whole man is either saved or damned.

Again: death is not the time of judgment. If ghosts are judged at death, was not the Savior cruel in reversing the decision in the case of Lazarus? Could not Lazarus have remonstrated at the call of Jesus, upon the plea that he had been "judged," and had a right to stay in glory? Furthermore, if souls are judged at death, why did those souls under the fifth seal inquire, "How long . . . wilt thou not judge (us)" etc.?

1. Christ "shall judge the quick [those who have never died] and the dead at his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 1.

2. God "hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world." Acts 17: 31.

3. "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48.

4. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall account thereof in the day of judgment." Matt. 12: 36. Thus the judgment takes place, not at death, but at an appointed day in the future, viz.: the "last day," the "day of judgment," at the "appearing" of Christ. It is not a judgment of ghosts, but of men.

The idea that men are judged at death is not only unscriptural, but unreasonable. Paul and Luther accomplished much good before their death, but they have left behind them an influence which has accomplished a thousand fold more good since their death. If judged at death, this thousand fold influence cannot be applied to their account. Also, a Mohammed and a Tom Paine accomplished much evil while they lived; but they have opened channels through which a thousand fold more of evil has been done since their death, as the result of their works. If they were judged at death, this thousand fold influence for evil cannot be put to their account. The same is true of all men to some extent.

W. SHELDON.

For the Crisis.

Light Spreading.

BRO. GRANT:—As many things are transpiring among us to wound our feelings, and check our zeal and hopes in the points of reform we are endeavoring to effect, I will try to give some encouragement by sending to the Crisis a few extracts from the many letters I am receiving, mostly from the great West, where I have traveled much, and scattered many of our works. If I can judge the feelings of brethren by my own, they are more cheered and prompted to action by hearing the state of things in different places, than by long exhortations which are often sent to our papers, without being accompanied with any real information as to affairs, or explanation of the Scriptures. But it is better to send exhortations than to hatch up new and erroneous views and send them, which is becoming too common among us. The Lord give our Editors wisdom to separate the chaff from the wheat. A paper to be "free," need not admit every wild notion inventive brains may conjure up, and fancy to themselves it agrees with the Bible. Well does Cowper say:—

"That text that suits not to his darling whim, Though clear to others, is obscure to him."

But to the object of this communication. A Brother writes from ——, Wis., Sept., 1861:—

"BRO. BLAIN:—Having learned something of your standing as a Baptist minister, and as no little interest is being awakened here which may result in the separation of some from one or more of the three sects in this place, I wish to consult you in reference to your position, and that of those generally who embrace similar sentiments, and do not identify themselves with Adventists, all of which I think are destructionists. . . . When once the Scriptures are opened to the understanding on the life and death question, do they not also lead to a love of the prophecies, and a belief that they point to the soon coming of Christ, and therefore forbid that we settle down again into that disregard of the sacred word which so alarmingly prevails among the sects? . . . That you may be able to judge with more relevancy, I will state to you about the condition of affairs now in the church of which I am a member—the Baptist. About one year ago our pastor, a distant relative of mine, said to me he was reading a book, loaned him by a neighbor, on the Destruction of the Wicked, etc., by Elder J. Blain of Buffalo. He then in conversation often referred to the work as quite well supporting the view, and wished me also to read it. At that time I gave no quarters whatever to the doctrine, and thought him quite wandering from the truth in the concessions he made. However, in the former part of last winter I obtained your book, "Death not Life," determined it possible to read it in the absence of prejudice. I did so, and now date the opening of my eyes from that time. It opened the way also for further study upon the subject, and I procured some of the works of Hudson, Hastings, Grew, etc., and found no serious difficulty in becoming settled in the belief, that immortality is the gift of God through his Son; that the dead are not alive, and that the wicked will not be preserved forever, or to all eternity.

I was then before the church as a candidate for the ministry, though I had received no written license . . . It was known by some that I held views offensive to the denomination, but as little publicity had been given to them, no serious objections were raised and I was licensed. . . As my views became known, they were offensive to some of the influential members, and my license was taken away, leaving me a private member—or, as it is, one of their deacons. This was not satisfactory to all, as nothing short of an expulsion will pacify them. . . . The church has since had a meeting to expel me, but some cried one thing and some another, till the mover withdrew his resolution. . . . Already there are several in the church who receive the truth, and many in the community who openly confess their convictions. I shall not be surprised should our pastor be dismissed on the same point."

In a subsequent letter, (which I enclose) he writes that he has received a letter from the church, and is in Vermont, where he will be for a year, or longer, and where I hope he will make himself known to our brethren, and become useful. He now takes the Crisis.

This we see that our books are doing a work where our preachers do not penetrate, and if those who travel would more uniformly carry books to back up the truth when they are gone, much more light would be spread, and they would be richly paid for the sacrifice, as some esteem it to be. In '56 and '57 I traveled and gave out many works in the country, though not in the town, where these brethren resided, and after a long time I am happy to learn that I labored not in vain. Let us be patient. "The mills of the gods grind slowly."

I am obtaining subscriptions for the C. P. S., hoping it will do much good by spreading books. I leave other extracts from letters till another week.

The Promise, the Faith, the Hope, and the Calling of the Christian; the Scope of Christian Ordinances, the crowning gift of God's Grace; the official work of the Holy Ghost in his errand unto our world, all find their blessed consummation in the coming of Jesus the "second time unto salvation."

If this be so stated—so incorporated into all the essentials of the christian economy, then no one can be "a scribe well instructed into the kingdom of heaven" while uninformed as to the fact and relations of the second advent of Jesus.

1. THE PROMISE. John 14: 1–3,—"Let not your heart be troubled. . . . In my Father's house are many mansions. . . I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." "Again" is the "second time." This promise centres in the second coming of Christ. If he comes not again, the vital promise fails; and the apostles attain no "place" here specified, nor can they ever see Jesus. 1 Thess. 4: 17; 1 John 3: 1–3; Heb. 9: 1–28.

2. THE FAITH. Heb. 10: 37–39,—"Yet a little while, and (the coming one) will come, and will not tarry. Now the just live by faith—by this faith in the coming one, the resurrection, the better country and its heavenly city, "whose builder and maker is God." These unnumbered witnesses and worthies, who "obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise!" They "all died in faith," awaiting its accomplishment when the coming one shall come to receive them to himself in "the resurrection."

3. THE HOPE. Titus 2: 14,—"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of . . . our Savior."

4. THE CHRISTIAN'S CALLING. 1 Thess. 1: 9–10,—"To serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus." The service of God is no more a part of the object of this calling, than it is to "wait for his Son from heaven."

5. The scope and object of christian ordinances agree in urging the believing mind on to the second advent of Christ as the end of faith and hope. 1 Cor. 11: 26,—"As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." Thus the future coming is as distinctly brought out in the Lord's Supper as is the past: the second advent is made the consummation of the whole plan of truth expressed in the Lord's Supper. Baptism goes further than the death of Jesus, as it presents resurrection. Thus it embodies the grand objects of faith and hope. "Buried by baptism into the likeness of his death;" but raised up in hope of the resurrection. Rom. 6: 3–5; Col. 2: 12 to 3: 1–4; 1 Pet. 3: 21. Thus the baptized do not trust in Christ crucified merely, but in Christ who was raised up from the dead for our justification—our salvation.

6. The crowning gift of grace brings the believer into this waiting, expectant posture. 1 Cor. 1: 4–7; 1 Thess. 4: 16–18; 2 Thess. 3: 5. "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

7. The work of the Holy Ghost on the heart takes just this range; and never in his official operation stops short of the second coming of Christ to judgment, when he will receive his people to himself, as taught in our text. John 16: 8–11,—"He will (convict) the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." This judgment day begins at "the resurrection of the just" and their rapture to meet the Lord.

Thus each part of the christian system—each part of gospel worship—all parts of christian experience, embrace the second advent of Jesus. The official guidance and indwelling presence of the Spirit, invites to us the judgment at Christ's future coming. "As it is appointed unto men once to die; but after this the judgment [illegible]

Notes by the Way.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—Thinking that the loved ones of earth would like to know how their Bro. Pilgrim is getting along and what he is about, I write. August 18th, I closed my labors with the first Baptist Church and Society, in Ashford, Ct. Having spent five Sundays with them in discoursing upon the all-important theme of life only through the Christ, and that it is a conditional blessing, and that those who comply with the conditions will obtain it and live forever. On the last Sunday, I had the happiness of baptizing one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. I cannot describe the joy that filled my entire being whilst addressing the audience. I thought of the time when I had baptized scores in the same stream, and at the same place, whilst pastor of the church some twenty years ago. Many of them were now before me, and their eyes were filled with tears, glory be to God!

After closing up my affairs in W. and S., I bade adieu to friends, and amid falling tears started for the Wilbraham campmeeting. Here I had the opportunity of meeting old and long-tried friends of Jesus, and the honor of forming new acquaintance, which I shall not forget as long as memory lasts. This meeting was a feast to me, because the spirit of liberty and kindness prevailed. On Saturday, I took leave of the camp, and gave the parting hand to loved ones.

After taking the cars, a sense of loneliness came over me, and I was obliged to give vent to my feelings; however, by steam and horse power, I reached my old pilgrim home, kept by Bro. Rawson, in Jamaica, Vt., about midnight. Found a good supper in readiness, prepared by Sister Cobb. The next day (Sunday) I gave three discourses to large congregations, who listened with deep interest. Preached on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. House crowded. Bro. S. W. Bishop was in the neighborhood, but not out.

From J. I passed over the Green Mountains to Hebron, N. Y.; gave six sermons to large congregations, had a good time and a warm reception. This church was raised up under my labors in 1849–50. They have a good house, and the field of labor is large; but they have no pastor. Who that loves to work will go and occupy this delightful field?

On Monday, the 9th of Sept., I took my leave of H. for Addison, Vt. Found my beloved Bro. Eld. D. T. Ross, and brother waiting at the depot at Vergennes to convey me to Addison, a distance of seven miles. At an early hour, a fine looking and intelligent congregation were in attendance, who listened with deep interest whilst I talked to them some two hours from Amos 8:7. Among them were two teachers of high schools.

The next day, in company with Bro. Ross, I called on quite a number of the brethren. Addison is, with me, a favorite spot. Bro. R. conveyed me to the station where we had to part, but in hope of meeting by and by upon the glory-capped hills of our Eden home. At half-past 6 P. M. I stepped into a chariot drawn by an iron horse, for Chateaugay, N. Y. At half-past 11 P. M. I reached C. Found my good Bro. Webb in readiness to take me to his hospitable dwelling, where I found supper prepared by his true yoke-fellow. Stopped at C. until Monday, the 16th. Gave a number of discourses in C. and Burk. A general turn-out. Had a good time in preaching, and also in visiting the friends. Attended the Franklin Co. Fair. Sept. 16, I reluctantly bade adieu to the loved ones of C. and took the cars for Ogdensburg. Crossed the river into Canada the 17th, having been absent ten weeks from this land of my adoption. Was kindly received by all the lovers of truth.

On the evening of the 18th, the general meeting of the church of God commenced at Adams' Mills. Our meeting was excellent, and good was done. Spent some ten days in visiting the saints in the townships of Augusta, Oxford, South Gower, Mountain, Williamsburg and Edwardsburg, preaching in the evening in different localities to attentive congregations.

Sunday the 29th, I gave two discourses in the place called the Lyon's den, from 1 Cor. 12:4. Ate the Supper with the church of God in that place, and then took my leave of them for the present, (though it was hard to part with them,) and rode ten miles through mud and water to speak in the evening. It was a good day to me.

Oct. 2d. All things being ready, I bade farewell to the loved ones in Spencerville and vicinity, and started for Prescott; and after attending to some temporal affairs, I took the boat for Oswego, N. Y. Had a pleasant passage. Reached O. about 9 A. M. At 10, took the cars for Seneca Falls. Upon my arrival, I found Bro. Joblin waiting for me. Gave four discourses in the Church in S. Had a good time. Was cordially received by them. Had a good visit with Bro. Newman, the Editor of the Harbinger. [illegible]

[illegible] I started for Thorold, C. W., by the way of the Suspension Bridge [illegible] In good spirits, though [illegible] after enjoying a good [illegible] table of Bro. [illegible] Commenced a meeting on the evening of the 9th at Fonthill. Congregation continued to increase till their beautiful house was full. Gave nine discourses. Had a glorious time. On Sunday, the 13th, in the presence of a large congregation, I had the honor of baptizing two mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins.

Monday, 14th, at 7 P. M., I commenced a meeting in Gainsborough, some eight miles from Fonthill. A hard place; but I kept up an open fire into the fort of the enemy, until I gave them twenty-two discourses. Congregation large. Truth has found a place in some hearts. The whole community are all stirred up; some rejoice in the truth. I have baptized eight mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins. Last Sunday (Nov. 3) twenty-four came into gospel order, made choice of elders, taking the name of "The Church of God at Gainsborough," C. W. One of the elders has been a public speaker for many years. Another, Bro. McKay, was a licensed speaker among the United Brethren. Many threats were made to break up the meeting. Some of the friends of truth thought I was in danger of being hurt by the Pharisees; but my reply was, If by my death for the truth, I could do more to advance it than by my life, I was ready to die. Amen.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 29, was a sorrowful, yet a joyful time. A company came for the purpose of breaking up our meeting. I gave out the following hymn, which was sung in the spirit and understanding—"In expectation sweet." I then gave a discourse predicated upon Heb. 6. 17–20. Had a free time; notwithstanding some of the party made an effort to quiet my brain by throwing a club through the window at me. They then returned to their own company and reported that "he" (I) was not to be frightened. Glory be to God for the truth! Brethren, I am not a stranger to such scenes. Many has been the time that I have stood amid showers of stones and clubs, with nothing but my canvass and the arm of the Lord to shelter me. Ten years ago, in this country, by this class of human beings, I had one hundred and sixty dollars worth of property destroyed in some thirty minutes, and my own life threatened. But God took care of me. Therefore none of these things move me. His truth, as revealed in the Living Oracles, I will proclaim by precept and example, though preachers of a false system and devils oppose. Amen.

Nov. 5, I returned to Fonthill, and commenced a meeting in the evening, which continued every evening, and closed on Sunday morning. Good has been done. This evening I preached in this village, which is upon the Welland Canal. Had a good hearing. Shall stop till Thursday morning. More anon.

The Maine Advent Mission.

The work is still going well. Since our annual conference, Bro. Fassett has held many very interesting and profitable meetings in several parts of the State, in which some have been led into the gospel hope from other hopes, and some lost sinners in several places have been brought to Christ. The Lord is signally blessing this effort, and the appearances indicate much success to the cause of God. Some of our brethren and sisters are subscribing and contributing liberally to sustain the mission, yet there are many more who can, and, we trust, will aid in this noble work. We are carrying this gospel of the kingdom into new and destitute places, where it is not expected to receive a competence to pay expenses. Therefore those who have learned the blessedness of the truth, and of sending it to others, should improve this good opportunity, and send their donations, or pledges, to the committee, the missionary, or the treasurer, that the work may go on unembarrassed.

We have believed it to be economy to purchase a team for the mission as a great saving in traveling expenses, and convenience in getting about the country where the public conveyances afford no accommodations. In doing this we have incurred an outlay of seventy-five dollars for sleigh and harness, robes, &c., and shall need a wagon in the spring. This property will belong to the mission for its continual use. Now we propose to those who are interested in carrying on this mission, that they contribute such sums as they wish to invest in meeting this outlay, as a separate item from the current expenses of the mission. Bro. H. B. Sevey has given ten dollars to begin with. Who will help fill up the amount? Let us do as we are able in saving men, and do all we can do now, for now is the time to work.

Yours in behalf of the mission,

I. C. Wellcome, Treasurer.

Thessalonica.—A physician, and author, in New Jersey, writes to a friend who had sent him "The Model Church":—

"Thessalonica came to hand, and I cannot thank you too highly for it. It is a tip-top book, and just the work I needed. I have already used it as a fount of suggestions for remarks at prayer meetings, in which I am somewhat actively engaged."

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1862.

☞SPECIAL NOTICE.☜

Hereafter all letters, communications, remittances and orders for the World's Crisis are to be directed to ELDER MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

H. L. Hastings, President C. P. S.

Bro. Howell Sleeps in Jesus.

Early Monday morning, Dec. 30, 1861, this good man finished his work. No doubt, our readers expected to hear this sad intelligence. It is often a wonder to mortals why such valuable men should be taken away in the midst of their usefulness; but we have the sure promise, "that all things work together for good to them that love God." Though we cannot always see how, let us believe it is so, and rest calmly on the promise. We trust our dear sister H. will take comfort from this sweet promise, while passing through this vale of sorrow where none but Jesus can sustain in such affliction. The separation from the loved one will be short. He will soon awaken from his rest, to shine eternally in the kingdom of God. He has fought the good fight, finished his course, kept the faith, and will soon receive the crown of glory.

To those who did not know Bro. Howell, we may be excused for saying, he was one of the brightest specimens of true christianity that we have ever met. We knew him; and all who were personally acquainted with him, will love to think of his unwavering faithfulness to the cause of Christ.

As a preacher and logician, he had but few equals. He made no compromises with error or sin. It was often remarked, "He practices what he preaches;" while many of his hearers would be heard to say, "nobody can live up to such preaching." He was a man of strong faith and mighty in prayer. But few were better versed in the Scriptures. Whatever he examined, must be probed to the bottom. He was never satisfied with surface work.

Besides all his arduous labors in the ministry, he often attended the sick as their physician. In this department he was very skillful, and met with great success, but his sympathy for his patients often overtaxed his nervous energies, and perhaps was one cause of his final sickness. He was of small stature, with a frail constitution, and yet had a powerful voice. He became so absorbed in his subject, when preaching, that he frequently went beyond his strength, before he was aware of the fact, and thus he finally exhausted his vital forces in deeds of love.

His work is done—well done. In his death, the church has sustained a great loss. Though dead, he yet speaketh. His worthy deeds, his wise counsel, his exemplary life, will still preach, while he quietly sleeps in the grave.

He made a dying request to be buried in the beautiful "Union Cemetery," at Sandy Hill, N. Y. He is now deposited in a tomb at Chicago. Tuesday, Jan. 7th, if possible, Sr. Howell purposes to comply with his request and accompany him in the sad journey to his final resting place. Though he will not be able to speak to comfort her by the way, may she feel conscious of the companionship of Jesus and his angels.

If any of the friends of Bro. and Sr. Howell are disposed to assist her with pecuniary aid in these last sad duties to a kind husband, it will be very thankfully received. We hope their friends will be liberal in this matter. Bro. Howell has worn himself out in serving others, and used up all he had of this world's goods in the service of Christ, and now let his friends and the friends of Jesus do nobly, remembering our Lord has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Send at once. As we do not know where Sr. Howell intends to stop, those who send can direct to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and we will see that she has the money in due time.—o.

The New Year.

The year 1862 has begun, and will soon pass away. Yet, before its close, we may expect the accomplishment of many startling events. We are most rapidly approaching the world's Niagara. It is too late to doubt that we already begin to listen to its foaming roar. We are passing down the rapids with a speed that but few realize. Many are sleeping quietly, careless of the approaching danger. Like the man enveloped in the smoke of the burning house, their perils only seem to make them sleep the sounder. O how awful the situation of most of the inhabitants of this world, as well as a large share of the professors of religion! What can arouse them? Brethren and sisters, let us, who see their alarming situation, be faithful and do all in our power to reach them before it is too late. Let us double our efforts this year, in every department of well doing. It may be the last one during which we can labor in our Master's vineyard. Let it be so spent, that when he comes, he will say, "Well done." Let us bring every energy to bear in favor of the cause of truth. We hope all our friends, who love Jesus and his coming, will try to spread light by scattering tracts, and by getting new subscribers for the Crisis. Come, let us make an effort worthy of the noble cause in which we are engaged.

"Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God."

o.

Well Done.—Will those who have so promptly responded to the bills, please accept our thanks for the kind words they have sent with the money. This is double pay. It is exceedingly unpleasant for us to send out bills to those who have failed to pay for the Crisis, because we know these are "hard times"—"perilous times," when many of our dear brethren and sisters find it very difficult to meet their current expenses; and still they feel more anxious than ever to have the paper, that they may hear from their fellow pilgrims to the land of glory. Never have they felt the need of the paper more than at this time. They, with us, feel we cannot be deprived of the reading of the heart-cheering epistles and communications which come so richly laden with good things. We say, in view of these facts, it is even painful to us to send bills to any of our subscribers, lest they should think we wish to crowd them. This is not so. But remember the article concerning the Granary, published a few weeks since.

If you cannot pay all now, send a part; and if you cannot pay any thing, and wish the paper continued, please drop us a line stating the fact, and we will have long patience with you, and do the very best we can in supplying you with the reading of our paper.

Once more we wish to say that the kind words accompanying your business notes are prized as jewels. They afford great relief to our burdens, which otherwise would be grievous to be borne. We love to serve such noble souls, who are ever ready to defend and support the truths of the blessed Bible, and who love the appearing of Jesus. Press forward; we will endeavor to meet you at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—o.

Read and Understand.—We learn that several do not understand what the figures mean in the cash receipts. For instance, they read, "J. Thompson, $1.40, 327." All know what the $1.40 means, but do not understand what 327 represents. These figures show the whole number of the Crisis to which they have paid. By "whole number" we mean the one at the top of the first page over the first column. On this paper it is 328, which shows the number of papers that have been published since the Crisis was first started.

When you send money, always expect to find it credited in the "cash receipts" within two weeks after we receive the money, and also the whole number to which your money pays.

Now we recommend to all who send money, to note down the whole number to which it pays, in a memorandum book, or in some place where they can find it at pleasure, and then they can know at any time how their account stands.—o.

War with England.

Three weeks since, there was a strong probability that England would at once declare war against the United States because of the capture of Mason and Slidell from the British steamer Trent, while on their passage to England and France, as ministers from the Southern Confederation. In consequence of the imperative demand of England, these prisoners have been given up, and sailed for England Jan. 1st, and experienced the terrible wind of that night. As there was a doubt whether all the steps in their capture were strictly in harmony with the law of nations, our government wisely decided to release them, and let the present example be considered as a standard hereafter, by which to be guided in similar cases, which is just what the United States have contended for at other times, and which England then refused.

As this cause of war appears to be past, the question still arises, is there now any probability that England will interfere with our government? We think there is much reason to expect it, though the immediate cause does not now appear. For several months we have looked for such an event. We think it to be the policy of Napoleon III. to get England engaged in war with America if possible, and then unite himself with the opposite side, and avenge the battle of Waterloo, when England's forces are drawn from home. To accomplish this, we may expect that he will profess to be neutral, until England strikes; then he will find some pretence for interference, and thus the war of nations will carry us rapidly to the great day of the Lord.

There may be a lull of peace for a short season, but we see no reason to expect any better times till Jesus comes.—o.

Bro. Cotton.—Several, who have been much interested in the writings and acquaintance of Bro. Cotton, have inquired after his welfare. He is well, and keeping a neat little grocery and eating room at 162 Broadway, South Boston, Mass., where he will be glad to meet his friends. May the Lord bless him and give him prosperity in this life, and a home in the coming kingdom.—o.

Discussion.

A public discussion will be held at the Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, on the evenings of Jan. 13th and 14th, and continue longer if thought best. Question: Is the observance of "The Seventh Day" as a Sabbath, binding upon Christians? Affirmative, Elder Wm. Langarl, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Negative, Miles Grant, of Boston.

Chapman Hall, Boston.

Eld. H. Munger is expected to preach at Chapman Hall Sunday, Jan. 12th, and continue each evening through the following week.—m.

A. D. 1862.

We have reached the morning of a new-born year. How many such have we seen! days when we felt like pausing, and taking one long, deliberate look at the past; with memory clinging to the untroubled and unsullied days of early youth, and joyful in contemplation of the new life we early experienced through a Savior's pardoning love. Who that knows his God, is not glad on this day to chronicle the mercy exhibited in sparing him to greet the dawn of a new year? Spared, through cares, perplexities, sicknesses, and in the midst of death and the darkness of the grave! But who is not surprised and grieved to think, how swift the years have flown, and to how little substantial good they have been improved! One event in all the past is luminous: namely, the day when we forsook the road that leads downward to eternal darkness and death, and intelligently and truly believed on a crucified, but risen and all-merciful Savior. Few of all other events are without what savors more of earth than of heaven.

But how eventful the years compassed by our own remembrance! The earth now grown so old and hoary, exhibits wonderful fruits as the product of its maturity. Time, long said to pass swiftly, now flies faster than ever. Events, once the result of a nation's life-time, are now planted, grown, and harvested in a year. And yet with all the mature wisdom and experience gathered from the past, the world waxes worse and worse. Man ere this ought to know the object and worth of life, and that there are better ways for parliaments and cabinets to adjust their difficulties than by slaying a few thousand of their subjects: but this remains to be learned. Never was the world so belligerent as now. War, war, war, is the prospect and the echo, from the orient to the occident. "Wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up . . . let the weak say, I am strong."—Joel 3: 9, 10.

But we cannot pause here long. Cares are too many, and at most the day is but twenty-four hours long. And though our sins must be confessed and resolutions made before Almighty God with deliberation, our time is short, oh, so short! What we do must be done quickly; yet it must be done intelligently. So up, my soul, gird thee anew for the contest! Savans say the world's crisis is at hand. Mighty events, big with weal or woe to the human family are about to burst upon us. But while we look out upon the darkness that surrounds, let us fear not. There is a light beyond the clouds: ah! more. There is a God whose throne is high, who yet reigneth among the nations, and whose Almighty hand shall eventually be recognized by an astonished world in the passing events of these times. Though unknown to the world to-day, to the christian it is known, that this God, hated and blasphemed though he be, is turning and overturning among the nations, preparatory to the introduction of that eventful period known as "the desire of all nations," namely, the coming and reign of Jesus Christ;—mistakenly termed by the world, "the good time coming." Event of all events to be studied, and felt in every thought and act of which we are to give account in the future. Let us then not fear, but rejoice and be glad for this day. God be thanked we see it! And though we count one less of the years we have to live in this world, and though we deprecate so much of the past, let us be exceeding glad that it is ours to live in this day of grace, so merciful for to-day and so promising for the morrow.—m.

Retribution.—We have just finished a careful reading of this last work from the pen of Bro. H. L. Hastings, and have been most amply rewarded for the time thus spent, as we think every other reader will be. It is a book that everybody should read, who wishes to be perfectly satisfied of the great truth it advocates,—the "resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." A copy of it should be in every library. It contains many valuable translations of different passages, besides the weighty and sound arguments of the author.—o.

Wind.—Wednesday, Jan. 1st, was a very warm and pleasant day, but in the evening, and for three days following, we have had an unusual amount of strong wind. On the evening of Jan. 1st it was terrible. Chimneys were blown down, houses unroofed or demolished, besides causing many a heart to tremble with fear while they were rocked in their beds during the night. But we may soon expect the glad hour to arrive when warring winds and fighting men will finish their work.—o.

For the Crisis.

Reflections for New Year's Day.

"What have I done?"

What have I done? How often come
These words with keenest smart,
Carrying their own conviction home
With sorrow to my heart.

What have I done to stem the tide,
The fearful tide of sin,
To ope the gates of mercy wide,
And let salvation in?

What have I done to feed the poor,
Who starving ask for bread,
Who sick and naked seek my door,
That they may there be fed?

What have I done to save from hell
One soul for whom Christ died?
Have I e'er sought his fame to tell,
Or owned him as my guide?

What have I done to keep my heart
From sinful lusts and pride?
Have I performed the christian's part?
Have I one sin denied?

What have I done? Alas! I own
My time has run to nought;
I've not improved one hour that's flown
As fully as I'd ought.

What have I done? Another year
To-day has just begun;
May I improve its moments here,
So that its close shall cause no tear,
That I have nothing done.

For the Crisis.

Our Pilgrimage.

After our discussion with Mr. Baker, we visited the church in Worcester, spent one Sabbath, and baptized one disciple, whom we trust is still on his way rejoicing. We think the vitality of this church has not increased with its numbers, yet there is a commendable effort put forth to do good in that place. May the Lord bless them with a more realizing sense of the pending judgment. The following Sabbath we visited our brethren in Willington, Ct. Here the tried few came together whom, we trust, have their names in heaven, the only correct record of the church. They are searching to see if these things are so. Next we met with the scattered ones in Brimfield, and was glad to see signs of increasing strength there. May they not altogether fail of the grace of God.

We met with the brethren in Sandisfield the 8th, and tarried a few evenings. The traveling and weather were unfavorable, still we trust that some good was done. Bro. Fenn is highly esteemed among them, and so is his wife. May they be encouraged to work while the day lasts. Bro. Jones was here to distress and comfort in his line of dentistry, and I was much comforted with the assurance that teeth pulling would not be required in the kingdom; and I think Bro. Jones would like to give himself more entirely to the ministry of the word should it seem to him to be duty. We attended a wedding at Bro. Cotton's, (New Boston,) and although we did not witness the turning of water into wine, yet while at the table of the marriage supper we felt the exhilerating influence of the wine of the kingdom, at least in anticipation, and longed to be there. The evening was well spent, thank the Lord. May we all be united more firmly to Christ, that the coming storm may not be able to separate us from him who alone can keep us in that day.

Nineteen years have I been in this glorious warfare, and I do confess that I have no inclination to prove traitor, either by putting on the enemy's uniform or armor. I am glad that so many have learned that Christ's weapons, though mighty, are not carnal, and those who use them never have occasion to change them for a more modern or improved class or style. That same old armor that quenched the violence of fire, shut the mouths of lions, put to flight the aliens and subdued kingdoms, finds no rival in Sharp's rifle, Colt's revolver, or Napoleon's rifled cannon. Three worthies on one occasion upturned a vast empire with no other armor, and if I mistake not, in a little from this a few "chosen and faithful" ones, under very similar circumstances, with the same armor will upturn all the kingdoms of this world.

For the Crisis.

Show your Light.

When placed in darkness, men desire light. They have no wish to grope their way amid the blindness of confusion. In all their undertakings, they love a clear "coast"; and, unless able to descry in the distance a landing point, they are unwilling to attempt a voyage. Uncertainty they abhor. Darkness is a terror; and when placed amid its dismal gloom they sigh for light.

Such is now the condition of the world. Men are in darkness in reference to things that are coming on the earth. They behold the mighty up-heavings and convulsions of the world, in these last days, and not only wonder, but their "hearts fail them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." That the nations are up in arms, they know; but the cause of this uprising they cannot comprehend. Could they but lift the veil, gladly would they take a look into the future; but this they cannot do. Well has the poet sung:—

"Kingdoms now are reeling, falling,
Nations lie in woe appalling,
On their sages vainly calling,
All these wonders to explain."

Yes, they have called for light, and called in vain. Wise men, so called, have undertaken to give the desired information; but their answers are vague, inconclusive, and contradictory, and of course unsatisfactory. They, too, are in darkness; and, blinded as they are by the god of this world, and refusing the only true source of light, they must continue in darkness, and at last perish forever.

Christian reader, the above is but a faint picture of the times in which we live. Sin and iniquity abound. Revilings, cursings and blasphemies are heard on every hand. Crimes of every grade are committed every day, and men are madly rushing onward to perdition. Surely we are in the midst of great darkness. "I know it, but what can I do?" Is this your answer? Then listen! Hear the words of Jesus of Nazareth: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Here, then, is something that we can do. We can give them light. Let us do so, and perhaps we may be instrumental in bringing some out of darkness. But how shall we let our light shine?

First. When we hear sinners talking about the things that are coming on the earth, let us all tell them what the Scriptures say about them. Let us describe the perils of the last days, as recorded in the word of God; and let us show them the danger and folly of rebelling against God.

Second. Let us give them a scriptural "reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear."

Third. Let us entreat them to embrace the hope of the gospel.

Fourth. Let us endeavor to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. Let us take up the cross daily; and let us not flinch from our whole duty when in the presence of sinners; convince them, by our daily walk, that there is life and power in christianity.

Let us reflect a moment. We are now in the perils of the last days. Time is short. What is done must be done quickly; and surely we have enough to move us into action. Then let us be up and doing; arouse from lethargy, and work while the day lasts. The night cometh, and with it the besom of destruction to the ungodly. Shall we fold our arms in lazy-lock, and see them perish without an effort for their rescue? God forbid. Let us endeavor to save some, by pointing them to the Lamb of God—telling them of a Savior's love, and of the glories of the coming kingdom, as described in the never-failing word of God. Let us entreat them to forsake their sins, and seek for immortality. Let us cry aloud and spare not, for the sword cometh; and shall our hands be free from blood? Let us watch and pray, for

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime!
Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray!
Hark! what soundeth? Is creation
Groaning for its latter day?"

A fearful responsibility now rests upon the christian. May we do our duty, and find mercy in the day of the Lord Jesus, is the prayer of the writer. G. W. Greene.

Articles of Church Government.

Article I. We, whose names are hereunto affixed, do fellowship each other as members of the Second Advent Church, in the Town of , State of , and do take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as our only rule of faith and practice.

Article II. We believe it is our duty to disfellowship any person who walks disorderly.

Article III. We believe it is our duty and privilege to meet from time to time for self-examination, prayer, and the breaking of bread, in token of fellowship, which we call Love-feast.

Article IV. We do adopt as a rule, that any member who shall absent him or herself from the Love-feast three times in succession, without a reasonable excuse, will be considered by such act as withdrawn from the Church.

The above is the form of government adopted at Pawlings, N. Y., and recommended by the Eastern N. Y. and Western Massachusetts and Connecticut Second Advent Conference, to be adopted by the churches within its limits.

Retribution Notices.

Eld. Thos. Smith of Me., being somewhat in doubt as to the resurrection of the unjust, solicited and read a copy of Retribution. In a letter ordering four copies, he says:—

"Was not very sick with no resurrection of the wicked views; God's word, which I revere, must settle the controversy. Yet some difficulty remains in the minds of some, which I think a careful and candid reading of Retribution will remove."

Eld. T. W. Smith of Illinois writes:—"I have just finished reading Retribution. I think it is in the first place "timely." It was not written an hour too soon. Secondly, it is a book that ought to be read, and not only so, but to be studied. Third, the arguments are forcible and conclusive. If the doctrine of future retribution needs proving from the Scriptures, I think your book can accomplish that work. Finally, I think it is a book that will do much good, and I sincerely wish it abundant success."

Notes by the Way.

Dear Bro. Wendell:—Thinking that the loved ones of earth would like to know how their Bro. Pilgrim is getting along and what he is about, I write. August 25th, I closed my labors with the first Baptist Church and Society, in Ashford, Ct. Having spent five Sundays with them in discoursing upon the all-important theme of life only through the Christ, and that it is a conditional blessing, and that those who comply with the conditions will obtain it and live forever. On the last Sunday, I had the happiness of baptising one mortal soul into the Christ for the remission of sins. I cannot describe the joy that filled my entire being whilst addressing the audience. I thought of the time when I had baptized scores in the same stream, and at the same place, whilst pastor of the church some twenty years ago. Many of them were now before me, and their eyes were filled with tears, glory be to God!

After closing up my affairs in W. and S., I bade adieu to friends, and amid falling tears started for the Wilbraham campmeeting. Here I had the opportunity of meeting old and long-tried friends of Jesus, and the honor of forming new acquaintance, which I shall not forget as long as memory lasts. This meeting was a feast to me, because the spirit of liberty and kindness prevailed. On Saturday, I took leave of the camp, and gave the parting hand to loved ones.

After taking the cars, a sense of loneliness came over me, and I was obliged to give vent to my feelings; however, by steam and horse power, I reached my old pilgrim home, kept by Bro. Rawson, in Jamaica, Vt., about midnight. Found a good supper in readiness, prepared by Sister Cobb. The next day (Sunday) I gave three discourses to large congregations, who listened with deep interest. Preached on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. House crowded. Bro. S. W. Bishop was in the neighborhood, but not out.

From J. I passed over the Green Mountains to Hebron, N. Y.; gave six sermons to large congregations; had a good time and a warm reception. This church was raised up under my labors in 1849–50. They have a good house, and the field of labor is large; but they have no pastor. Who that loves to work will go and occupy this delightful field?

On Monday, the 9th of Sept., I took my leave of H. for Addison, Vt. Found my beloved Bro. Eld. D. T. Ross, and brother waiting at the depot at Vergennes to convey me to Addison, a distance of seven miles. At an early hour, a fine looking and intelligent congregation were in attendance, who listened with deep interest whilst I talked to them some two hours from Amos 8:7. Among them were two teachers of high schools.

The next day, in company with Bro. Ross, I called on quite a number of the brethren. Addison is, with me, a favorite spot. Bro. R. conveyed me to the station where we had to part, but in hope of meeting by and by upon the glory-capped hills of our Eden home. At half-past 6 P. M. I stepped into a chariot drawn by an iron horse, for Chateaugay, N. Y. At half-past 11 P. M. I reached C. Found my good Bro. Webb in readiness to take me to his hospitable dwelling, where I found supper prepared by his true yoke-fellow. Stopped at C. until Monday, the 16th. Gave a number of discourses in C. and Burk. A general turn-out. Had a good time in preaching, and also in visiting the friends. Attended the Franklin Co. Fair. Sept. 16, I reluctantly bade adieu to the loved ones of C. and took the cars for Ogdensburg. Crossed the river into Canada the 17th, having been absent ten weeks from this land of my adoption. Was kindly received by all the lovers of truth.

On the evening of the 18th, the general meeting of the church of God commenced at Adams' Mills. Our meeting was excellent, and good was done. Spent some ten days in visiting the saints in the townships of Augusta, Oxford, South Gower, Mountain, Williamsburg and Edwardsburg, preaching in the evening in different localities to attentive congregations.

Sunday the 29th, I gave two discourses in the place called the Lyon's den, from 1 Cor. 12:4. Ate the Supper with the church of God in that place, and then took my leave of them for the present, (though it was hard to part with them,) and rode ten miles through mud and water to speak in the evening. It was a good day to me.

Oct. 2d. All things being ready, I bade farewell to the loved ones in Spencerville and vicinity, and started for Prescott; and after attending to some temporal affairs, I took the boat for Oswego, N. Y. Had a pleasant passage. Reached O. about 9 A. M. At 10, took the cars for Seneca Falls. Upon my arrival, I found Bro. Joblin in waiting for me. Gave four discourses in the Church in S. Had a good time. Was cordially received by them. Had a good visit with Bro. Newman, the Editor of the Harbinger. [illegible] the 8th, I started for Thorold, C. W., by the way of the Suspension Bridge, stopping some three hours. Reached Thorold 5 P. M. in good spirits, though somewhat tired; after enjoying a good supper at the well supplied table of Bro. Curry, I commenced a meeting on the evening of the 9th at Fonthill. Congregation continued to increase till their beautiful house was full. Gave nine discourses. Had a glorious time. On Sunday, the 13th, in the presence of a large congregation, I had the honor of baptising two mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins.

Monday, 14th, at 7 P. M., I commenced a meeting in Gainsborough, some eight miles from Fonthill. A hard place; but I kept up an open fire into the fort of the enemy, until I gave them twenty-two discourses. Congregation large. Truth has found a place in some hearts. The whole community are all stirred up; some rejoice in the truth. I have baptized eight mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins. Last Sunday (Nov. 8) twenty-four came into gospel order, made choice of elders, taking the name of "The Church of God at Gainsborough," C. W. One of the elders has been a public speaker for many years. Another, Bro. McKay, was a licensed speaker among the United Brethren. Many threats were made to break up the meeting. Some of the friends of truth thought I was in danger of being hurt by the Pharisees; but my reply was, If by my death for the truth, I could do more to advance it than by my life, I was ready to die. Amen.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 29, was a sorrowful, yet a joyful time. A company came for the purpose of breaking up our meeting. I gave out the following hymn, which was sung in the spirit and understanding—"In expectation sweet." I then gave a discourse predicated upon Heb. 6:17–20. Had a free time; notwithstanding some of the party made an effort to quiet my brain by throwing a club through the window at me. They then returned to their own company and reported that "he" (I) was not to be frightened. Glory be to God for the truth! Brethren, I am not a stranger to such scenes. Many has been the time that I have stood amid showers of stones and clubs, with nothing but my canvass and the arm of the Lord to shelter me. Ten years ago, in this country, by this class of human beings, I had one hundred and sixty dollars worth of property destroyed in some thirty minutes, and my own life threatened. But God took care of me. Therefore none of these things move me. His truth, as revealed in the Living Oracles, I will proclaim by precept and example, though preachers of a false system and devils oppose. Amen.

Nov. 5, I returned to Fonthill, and commenced a meeting in the evening, which continued every evening, and closed on Sunday morning. Good has been done. This evening I preached in this village, which is upon the Welland Canal. Had a good hearing. Shall stop till Thursday morning. More anon.

The Maine Advent Mission.

The work is still going well. Since our annual conference, Bro. Fassett has held many very interesting and profitable meetings in several parts of the State, in which some have been led into the gospel hope from other hopes, and some lost sinners in several places have been brought to Christ. The Lord is signally blessing this effort, and the appearances indicate much success to the cause of God. Some of our brethren and sisters are subscribing and contributing liberally to sustain the mission, yet there are many more who can, and, we trust, will aid in this noble work. We are carrying this gospel of the kingdom into new and destitute places, where it is not expected to receive a competence to pay expenses. Therefore those who have learned the blessedness of the truth, and of sending it to others, should improve this good opportunity, and send their donations, or pledges, to the committee, the missionary, or the treasurer, that the work may go on unembarrassed.

We have believed it to be economy to purchase a team for the mission as a great saving in traveling expenses, and convenience in getting about the country where the public conveyances afford no accommodations. In doing this we have incurred an outlay of seventy-five dollars for sleigh and harness, robes, &c., and shall need a wagon in the spring. This property will belong to the mission for its continual use. Now we propose to those who are interested in carrying on this mission, that they contribute such sums as they wish to invest in meeting this outlay, as a separate item from the current expenses of the mission. Bro. H. B. Sevey has given ten dollars to begin with. Who will help fill up the amount? Let us do as we are able in saving men, and do all we can do now, for now is the time to work.

Yours in behalf of the mission,

I. C. Wellcome, Treasurer.

Thessalonica.—A physician, and author, in New Jersey, writes to a friend who had sent him "The Model Church":—

"Thessalonica came to hand, and I cannot thank you too highly for it. It is a tip-top book, and just the work I needed. I have already used it as a fount of suggestions for remarks at prayer meetings, in which I am somewhat actively engaged."

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1862.

☞SPECIAL NOTICE.☜

Hereafter all letters, communications, remittances and orders for the World's Crisis are to be directed to ELDER MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

H. L. Hastings, President C. P. S.

Bro. Howell Sleeps in Jesus.

Early Monday morning, Dec. 30, 1861, this good man finished his work. No doubt, our readers expected to hear this sad intelligence. It is often a wonder to mortals why such valuable men should be taken away in the midst of their usefulness; but we have the sure promise, "that all things work together for good to them that love God." Though we cannot always see how, let us believe it is so, and rest calmly on the promise. We trust our dear sister H. will take comfort from this sweet promise, while passing through this vale of sorrow where none but Jesus can sustain in such affliction. The separation from the loved one will be short. He will soon awaken from his rest, to shine eternally in the kingdom of God. He has fought the good fight, finished his course, kept the faith, and will soon receive the crown of glory.

To those who did not know Bro. Howell, we may be excused for saying, he was one of the brightest specimens of true christianity that we have ever met. We knew him, and all who were personally acquainted with him, will love to think of his unwavering faithfulness to the cause of Christ.

As a preacher and logician, he had but few equals. He made no compromises with error or sin. It was often remarked, "He practices what he preaches;" while many of his hearers would be heard to say, "nobody can live up to such preaching." He was a man of strong faith and mighty in prayer. But few were better versed in the Scriptures. Whatever he examined, must be probed to the bottom. He was never satisfied with surface work.

Besides all his arduous labors in the ministry, he often attended the sick as their physician. In this department he was very skillful, and met with great success; but his sympathy for his patients often overtaxed his nervous energies, and perhaps was one cause of his final sickness. He was of small stature, with a frail constitution, and yet had a powerful voice. He became so absorbed in his subject, when preaching, that he frequently went beyond his strength, before he was aware of the fact, and thus he finally exhausted his vital forces in deeds of love.

His work is done—well done. In his death, the church has sustained a great loss. Though dead, he yet speaketh. His worthy deeds, his wise counsel, his exemplary life, will still preach, while he quietly sleeps in the grave.

He made a dying request to be buried in the beautiful "Union Cemetery," at Sandy Hill, N. Y. He is now deposited in a tomb at Chicago. Tuesday, Jan. 7th, if possible, Sr. Howell purposes to comply with his request and accompany him to the sad journey to his final resting place. Though he will not be able to speak to comfort her by the way, may she feel conscious of the companionship of Jesus and his angels.

If any of the friends of Bro. and Sr. Howell are disposed to assist her with pecuniary aid in these last sad duties to a kind husband, it will be very thankfully received. We hope their friends will be liberal in this matter. Bro. Howell has worn himself out in serving others, and used up all he had of this world's goods in the service of Christ, and now let his friends and the friends of Jesus do nobly; remembering our Lord has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Send at once. As we do not know where Sr. Howell intends to stop, those who send can direct to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and we will see that she has the money in due time.—o.

The New Year.

The year 1862 has begun, and will soon pass away. Yet, before its close, we may expect the accomplishment of many startling events. We are most rapidly approaching the world's Niagara. It is too late to doubt that we already begin to listen to its foaming roar. We are passing down the rapids with a speed that but few realize. Many are sleeping quietly, careless of the approaching danger. Like the man enveloped in the smoke of the burning house, their perils only seem to make them sleep the sounder. O how awful the situation of most of the inhabitants of this world, as well as a large share of the professors of religion! What can arouse them? Brethren and sisters, let us, who see their alarming situation, be faithful and do all in our power to reach them before it is too late. Let us double our efforts this year, in every department of well doing. It may be the last one during which we can labor in our Master's vineyard. Let it be so spent, that when he comes, he will say, "Well done." Let us bring every energy to bear in favor of the cause of truth. We hope all our friends, who love Jesus and his coming, will try to spread light by scattering tracts, and by getting new subscribers for the Crisis. Come, let us make an effort worthy of the noble cause in which we are engaged.

o.

Well Done.—Will those who have so promptly responded to the bills, please accept our thanks for the kind words they have sent with the money. This is double pay. It is exceedingly unpleasant for us to send out bills to those who have failed to pay for the Crisis, because we know these are "hard times"—"perilous times," when many of our dear brethren and sisters find it very difficult to meet their current expenses; and still they feel more anxious than ever to have the paper, that they may hear from their fellow pilgrims to the land of glory. Never have they felt the need of the paper more than at this time. They, with us, feel we cannot be deprived of the reading of the heart-cheering epistles and communications which come so richly laden with good things. We say, in view of these facts, it is even painful to us to send bills to any of our subscribers, lest they should think we wish to crowd them. This is not so. But remember the article concerning the Granary, published a few weeks since.

If you cannot pay all now, send a part; and if you cannot pay any thing, and wish the paper continued, please drop us a line stating the fact, and we will have long patience with you, and do the very best we can in supplying you with the reading of our paper.

Once more we wish to say that the kind words accompanying your business notes are prized as jewels. They afford great relief to our burdens, which otherwise would be grievous to be borne. We love to serve such noble souls, who are ever ready to defend and support the truths of the blessed Bible, and who love the appearing of Jesus. Press forward; we will endeavor to meet you at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—o.

Read and Understand.—We learn that several do not understand what the figures mean in the cash receipts. For instance, they read, "J. Thompson, $1.40, 327." All know what the $1.40 means, but do not understand what 327 represents. These figures show the whole number of the Crisis to which they have paid. By "whole number" we mean the one at the top of the first page over the first column. On this paper it is 328, which shows the number of papers that have been published since the Crisis was first started.

When you send money, always expect to find it credited in the "cash receipts" within two weeks after we receive the money, and also the whole number to which your money pays.

Now we recommend to all who send money, to note down the whole number to which it pays, in a memorandum book, or in some place where they can find it at pleasure, and then they can know at any time how their account stands.—o.

War with England.

Three weeks since, there was a strong probability that England would at once declare war against the United States because of the capture of Mason and Slidell from the British steamer Trent, while on their passage to England and France, as ministers from the Southern Confederation. In consequence of the imperative demand of England, these prisoners have been given up, and sailed for England Jan. 1st, and experienced the terrible wind of that night. As there was a doubt whether all the steps in their capture were strictly in harmony with the law of nations, our government wisely decided to release them, and let the present example be considered as a standard hereafter, by which to be guided in similar cases, which is just what the United States have contended for at other times, and which England then refused.

As this cause of war appears to be past, the question still arises, is there now any probability that England will interfere with our government? We think there is much reason to expect it, though the immediate cause does not now appear. For several months we have looked for such an event. We think it to be the policy of Napoleon III. to get England engaged in war with America if possible, and then unite himself with the opposite side, and avenge the battle of Waterloo, when England's forces are drawn from home. To accomplish this, we may expect that he will profess to be neutral, until England strikes; then he will find some pretence for interference, and thus the war of nations will carry us rapidly to the great day of the Lord.

There may be a lull of peace for a short season, but we see no reason to expect any better times till Jesus comes.—o.

Bro. Cotton.—Several, who have been much interested in the writings and acquaintance of Bro. Cotton, have inquired after his welfare. He is well, and keeping a neat little grocery and eating room at 162 Broadway, South Boston, Mass., where he will be glad to meet his friends. May the Lord bless him and give him prosperity in this life, and a home in the coming kingdom.—o.

Discussion.

A public discussion will be held at the Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, on the evenings of Jan. 13th and 14th, and continue longer if thought best. Question: Is the observance of "The Seventh Day" as a Sabbath, binding upon Christians? Affirmative, Elder Wm. Langarl, of Cincinnati, Ohio. Negative, Miles Grant, of Boston.

Chapman Hall, Boston.

Eld. H. Munger is expected to preach at Chapman Hall Sunday, Jan. 12th, and continue each evening through the following week.—m.

A. D. 1862.

We have reached the morning of a new-born year. How many such have we seen! days when we felt like pausing, and taking one long, deliberate look at the past; with memory clinging to the untroubled and unsullied days of early youth, and joyful in contemplation of the new life we early experienced through a Savior's pardoning love. Who that knows his God, is not glad on this day to chronicle the mercy exhibited in sparing him to greet the dawn of a new year? Spared, through cares, perplexities, sicknesses, and in the midst of death and the darkness of the grave! But who is not surprised and grieved to think, how swift the years have flown, and to how little substantial good they have been improved! One event in all the past is luminous: namely, the day when we forsook the road that leads downward to eternal darkness and death, and intelligently and truly believed on a crucified, but risen and all-merciful Savior. Few of all other events are without what savors more of earth than of heaven.

But how eventful the years compassed by our own remembrance! The earth now grown so old and hoary, exhibits wonderful fruits as the product of its maturity. Time, long said to pass swiftly, now flies faster than ever. Events, once the result of a nation's life-time, are now planted, grown, and harvested in a year. And yet with all the mature wisdom and experience gathered from the past, the world waxes worse and worse. Man ere this ought to know the object and worth of life; and that there are better ways for parliaments and cabinets to adjust their difficulties than by slaying a few thousand of their subjects: but this remains to be learned. Never was the world so belligerent as now. War, war, war, is the prospect and the echo, from the orient to the occident. "Wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: . . . let the weak say, I am strong."—Joel 3:9, 10.

But we cannot pause here long. Cares are too many, and at most the day is but twenty-four hours long. And though our sins must be confessed and resolutions made before Almighty God with deliberation, our time is short, oh, so short! What we do must be done quickly; yet it must be done intelligently. So up, my soul, gird thee anew for the contest! Savans say the world's crisis is at hand. Mighty events, big with weal or woe to the human family are about to burst upon us. But while we look out upon the darkness that surrounds, let us fear not. There is a light beyond the clouds: ah! more. There is a God whose throne is high, who yet reigneth among the nations, and whose Almighty hand shall eventually be recognized by an astonished world in the passing events of these times. Though unknown to the world to-day, to the christian it is known, that this God, hated and blasphemed though he be, is turning and overturning among the nations, preparatory to the introduction of that eventful period known as "the desire of all nations," namely, the coming and reign of Jesus Christ;—mistakenly termed by the world, "the good time coming." Event of all events to be studied, and felt in every thought and act of which we are to give account in the future. Let us then not fear, but rejoice and be glad for this day. God be thanked we see it! And though we count one less of the years we have to live in this world, and though we deprecate so much of the past, let us be exceeding glad that it is ours to live in this day of grace, so merciful for to-day and so promising for the morrow.—m.

Retribution.—We have just finished a careful reading of this last work from the pen of Bro. H. L. Hastings, and have been most amply rewarded for the time thus spent, as we think every other reader will be. It is a book that everybody should read, who wishes to be perfectly satisfied of the great truth it advocates,—the "resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." A copy of it should be in every library. It contains many valuable translations of different passages, besides the weighty and sound arguments of the author.—o.

Wind.—Wednesday, Jan. 1st, was a very warm and pleasant day, but in the evening, and for three days following, we have had an unusual amount of strong wind. On the evening of Jan. 1st it was terrible. Chimnies were blown down, houses unroofed or demolished, besides causing many a heart to tremble with fear while they were rocked in their beds during the night. But we may soon expect the glad hour to arrive when warring winds and fighting men will finish their work.—o.

For the Crisis.

Reflections for New Year's Day.

"What have I done?"

What have I done? How often come
These words with keenest smart,
Carrying their own conviction home
With sorrow to my heart.

What have I done to stem the tide,
The fearful tide of sin,
To ope the gates of mercy wide,
And let salvation in?

What have I done to feed the poor,
Who starving ask for bread,
Who sick and naked seek my door,
That they may there be fed?

What have I done to save from hell
One soul for whom Christ died?
Have I e'er sought his fame to tell,
Or owned him as my guide?

What have I done to keep my heart
From sinful lusts and pride?
Have I performed the christian's part?
Have I one sin denied?

What have I done? Alas! I own
My time has run to nought;
I've not improved one hour that's flown
As fully as I'd ought.

What have I done? Another year
To-day has just begun;
May I improve its moments here,
So that its close shall cause no tear,
That I have nothing done.

For the Crisis.

Our Pilgrimage.

After our discussion with Mr. Baker, we visited the church in Worcester, spent one Sabbath, and baptized one disciple, whom we trust is still on his way rejoicing. We think the vitality of this church has not increased with its numbers, yet there is a commendable effort put forth to do good in that place. May the Lord bless them with a more realizing sense of the pending judgment. The following Sabbath we visited our brethren in Willington, Ct. Here the tried few came together whom, we trust, have their names in heaven, the only correct record of the church. They are searching to see if these things are so. Next we met with the scattered ones in Brimfield, and was glad to see signs of increasing strength there. May they not altogether fail of the grace of God.

We met with the brethren in Sandisfield the 8th, and tarried a few evenings. The traveling and weather were unfavorable, still we trust that some good was done. Bro. Fenn is highly esteemed among them, and so is his wife. May they be encouraged to work while the day lasts. Bro. Jones was here to distress and comfort in his line of dentistry, and I was much comforted with the assurance that teeth pulling would not be required in the kingdom; and I think Bro. Jones would like to give himself more entirely to the ministry of the word should it seem to him to be duty. We attended a wedding at Bro. Cotton's, (New Boston,) and although we did not witness the turning of water into wine, yet while at the table of the marriage supper we felt the exhilerating influence of the wine of the kingdom, at least in anticipation, and longed to be there. The evening was well spent, thank the Lord. May we all be united more firmly to Christ, that the coming storm may not be able to separate us from him who alone can keep us in that day.

Nineteen years have I been in this glorious warfare, and I do confess that I have no inclination to prove traitor, either by putting on the enemy's uniform or armor. I am glad that so many have learned that Christ's weapons, though mighty, are not carnal, and those who use them never have occasion to change them for a more modern or improved class or style. That same old armor that quenched the violence of fire, shut the mouths of lions, put to flight the aliens and subdued kingdoms, finds no rival in Sharp's rifle, Colt's revolver, or Napoleon's rifled cannon. Three worthies on one occasion upturned a vast empire with no other armor, and if I mistake not, in a little from this a few "chosen and faithful" ones, under very similar circumstances, with the same armor will upturn all the kingdoms of this world.

For the Crisis.

Show your Light.

When placed in darkness, men desire light. They have no wish to grope their way amid the blindness of confusion. In all their undertakings, they love a clear "coast"; and, unless able to descry in the distance a landing point, they are unwilling to attempt a voyage. Uncertainty they abhor. Darkness is a terror; and when placed amid its dismal gloom they sigh for light.

Such is now the condition of the world. Men are in darkness in reference to things that are coming on the earth. They behold the mighty up-heavings and convulsions of the world, in these last days, and not only wonder, but their "hearts fail them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." That the nations are up in arms, they know; but the cause of this uprising they cannot comprehend. Could they but lift the veil, gladly would they take a look into the future; but this they cannot do. Well has the poet sung:—

"Kingdoms now are reeling, falling,
Nations lie in woe appalling,
On their sages vainly calling
All these wonders to explain."

Yes, they have called for light, and called in vain. Wise men, so called, have undertaken to give the desired information; but their answers are vague, inconclusive, and contradictory, and of course unsatisfactory. They, too, are in darkness: and, blinded as they are by the god of this world, and refusing the only true source of light, they must continue in darkness, and at last perish forever.

Christian reader, the above is but a faint picture of the times in which we live. Sin and iniquity abound. Revllings, cursings and blasphemies are heard on every hand. Crimes of every grade are committed every day, and men are madly rushing onward to perdition. Surely we are in the midst of great darkness. "I know it, but what can I do?" Is this your answer? Then listen! Hear the words of Jesus of Nazareth: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Here, then, is something that we can do. We can give them light. Let us do so, and perhaps we may be instrumental in bringing some out of darkness. But how shall we let our light shine?

First. When we hear sinners talking about the things that are coming on the earth, let us all tell them what the Scriptures say about them. Let us describe the perils of the last days, as recorded in the word of God; and let us show them the danger and folly of rebelling against God.

Second. Let us give them a scriptural "reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear."

Third. Let us entreat them to embrace the hope of the gospel.

Fourth. Let us endeavor to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. Let us take up the cross daily; and let us not flinch from our whole duty when in the presence of sinners; convince them, by our daily walk, that there is life and power in christianity.

Let us reflect a moment. We are now in the perils of the last days. Time is short. What is done must be done quickly; and surely we have enough to move us into action. Then let us be up and doing; arouse from lethargy, and work while the day lasts. The night cometh, and with it the besom of destruction to the ungodly. Shall we fold our arms in lazy-lock, and see them perish without an effort for their rescue? God forbid. Let us endeavor to save some, by pointing them to the Lamb of God—telling them of a Savior's love, and of the glories of the coming kingdom, as described in the never-failing word of God. Let us entreat them to forsake their sins, and seek for immortality. Let us cry aloud and spare not, for the sword cometh; and shall our hands be free from blood? Let us watch and pray, for

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime!
Hark! the waking up of nations,
Gog and Magog to the fray!
Hark! what soundeth? Is creation
Groaning for its latter day?"

A fearful responsibility now rests upon the christian. May we do our duty, and find mercy in the day of the Lord Jesus, is the prayer of the writer. G. W. Greene.

Articles of Church Government.

Article I. We, whose names are hereunto affixed, do fellowship each other as members of the Second Advent Church, in the Town of , State of , and do take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as our only rule of faith and practice.

Article II. We believe it is our duty to disfellowship any person who walks disorderly.

Article III. We believe it is our duty and privilege to meet from time to time for self-examination, prayer, and the breaking of bread, in token of fellowship, which we call Love-feast.

Article IV. We do adopt as a rule, that any member who shall absent him or herself from the Love-feast three times in succession, without a reasonable excuse, will be considered by such act as withdrawn from the Church.

The above is the form of government adopted at Pawlings, N. Y., and recommended by the Eastern N. Y. and Western Massachusetts and Connecticut Second Advent Conference, to be adopted by the churches within its limits.

Retribution Notices.

Eld. Thos. Smith of Me., being somewhat in doubt as to the resurrection of the unjust, solicited and read a copy of Retribution. In a letter ordering four copies, he says:—

"Was not very sick with no resurrection of the wicked views; God's word, which I revere, must settle the controversy. Yet some difficulty remains in the minds of some, which I think a careful and candid reading of Retribution will remove."

Eld. T. W. Smith of Illinois writes:—"I have just finished reading Retribution. I think it is in the first place "timely." It was not written an hour too soon. Secondly, it is a book that ought to be read, and not only so, but to be studied. Third, the arguments are forcible and conclusive. If the doctrine of future retribution needs proving from the Scriptures, I think your book can accomplish that work. Finally, I think it is a book that will do much good, and I sincerely wish it abundant success."

☞Price of Retribution, post paid, 38 cts; three for $1.00. By express, thirteen copies for $3. Fifty copies for $10. One hundred copies for $18. [illegible] to the poor, to preachers, and to all ministers of the resurrection of the unjust, who will send their names and ten cents postage to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. For sale also at this office.

Vienna Quarterly Conference.

This conference commenced as appointed, Dec. 19th, under unfavorable appearances, as there was not snow for sleighing, and wheeling was bad. Yet the faith and zeal of the faithful brought a good number together to enjoy the blessings of God on this occasion. There were a few believers in the place who were much interested in truth, in the beginning. The meeting began well, and continued to increase in numbers and interest until its close. The ministers in attendance were, H. B. Sevey, O. R. Fassett, D. M. Hanscomb, E. M. Haggett, I. C. Wellcome, I. K. Lombard, H. D. Reed, C. H. Leverton, who seemed to have the gospel harness on, and labored faithfully for the upbuilding of believers and the conversion of sinners. The preaching was earnest, faithful and scriptural, adapted especially to these times, and was listened to with much attention by the more candid portion of the community, many of whom seemed to consent that these things are so. Several of our Methodist brethren were in attendance, who seem to be looking favorably into the gospel message we preach. The most perfect union existed throughout the meeting, and we all felt that it was good to be there. The Lord manifested his love and grace by clothing the word with power, and making it effectual by his Holy Spirit in convincing sinners of their need of a Savior to fit them for the home of God's people.

In one meeting two who became decided of their duty to seek the Lord, arose for prayer, one of whom, the school-teacher in the place, found peace with God through Christ. Several others are deeply impressed with their lost condition. We trust the work of the Lord will not stop here, but will continue to go on until others believe the whole gospel, and find peace in Christ.

The hearts and doors of the friends were open to us, who kindly entertained the brethren. It being stormy on Monday and Tuesday following, several of us were obliged to remain. We therefore held two more meetings in prayer and conference, and in relating our conversion to Christ, and to the Advent faith. The blessing of God rested upon us, and made these meetings seem more precious than any of those previous. One more sinner arose for prayers to be offered in her behalf, and we trust she will obey the Lord.

On the whole, this was the best quarterly meeting I have ever yet attended, and this was the remark of the brethren generally. May the Lord still continue to increase his blessings upon our efforts until Jesus comes in glory, and then gather us into his everlasting kingdom.

I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I have recently visited Stowe, according to appointment, and preached at the house of Bro. Withington. The brethren came together, who had not had a meeting for some time in the past, and found it good to meet and have their minds stirred by way of remembrance. I found they had not lost their relish for the gospel of the kingdom. The meeting was a good one, although but small. The Lord's children are scattered, and it is their life to speak often one with another.

Sunday, 15th. I was at Lunenburg, where there was a gathering of the little flock from seven different towns. Some came fifteen, others ten miles for one day's meeting, where was freedom and blessedness in breathing out and confessing with the mouth what we believe with the heart, and we had a heavenly, stirring, soul-refreshing season. It was good to see some that I had not seen for ten years, and find them in the faith and love of Jesus, and giving heed to the apostle, by exhorting one another, and so much the more as they see the day of life approaching. Our spiritual strength was renewed, and all seemed with united heart to say, by grace I'll go through! The Spirit of the Lord was evidently inspiring every heart, and all said it was good to be there. Such meetings can but do good. How precious such seasons to the contrite, loving, faithful soul, especially to that isolated child of God who has this privilege only occasionally. It is like Peter's meeting on the Mount. Brethren, make more effort for such meetings; they pay well. One brother who came ten miles on foot and back again, said he got well paid, and all said Amen. Blessings will follow such meetings.

Groton, Dec. 18th, 1861.

From Eld. M. Batchelor.

To the Brethren waiting for the Lord:—We have arrived at a period of great importance in the world's history. We are in a state of things to which we once pointed; namely, "distress of nations, with perplexity"; together with an universal spirit for fighting. The Savior foretold it in Luke 21: 25, 26. I thank the Lord that he has warned the world of the approach of these things before the end comes. We are in the midst of the fulfillment of it. The world laughed, ministers made light of it; they said peace, peace; but those men that said peace, are now the first to say fight. So it is. For this world I can only see trouble increasing. They must drink the cup. In this state of things I see signs of our coming deliverance. Our duty is plain.

First, warn the world of their coming doom—when the dead bodies shall be from one part of the earth to the other. (Jer. 25.) God says, "woe to the men that cry peace to the wicked."

Second, to hold up Christ as the only way for a poor sinner to escape the wrath to come. Christ first, Christ last, in the sinner's salvation.

Third, to strive as much as lieth in us to keep the church in unity. All the strength of the church is needed, and in unity there is strength.

Fourth, to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. The Lord will take care of those that are doing his will in this matter.

Rutland, Jan. 1, 1862.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Hinesburgh, Vt, Oct. 28th, 1861, Francis Henry Irish, aged 3 years 11 months and 12 days.

In the same place, Oct. 30th, 1861, Catherine Amanda Irish, aged 12 years and 25 days.

These dear sleeping ones, each of whom was ill one week with Diphtheria, were the youngest of the six children of a dear brother and a dear sister in Christ, Nelson and Lucy Irish. These parents are firmly established in the doctrine of Immortality through Christ alone, and in this sad bereavement we rejoice to learn that they are "wonderfully sustained" by the grace of God. We trust they will find unfailing consolation in the assurance that their loved ones will soon have their slumbers broken by "the voice of the archangel and the trump of God." Amanda died happy in the Lord; left a message for her Sabbath School associates, bidding them "to be faithful that they might have a crown of life;" gave with her parting kisses a word of counsel, comfort, or exhortation to each member of the family,—astonishing all who saw and heard her by her calm, cheerful thoughtfulness. "Here"—said her mother as the scene was about closing"—is some of the fruit of the preaching in the Town Hall last fall"—referring to the series of meetings held there in September, 1861, by the writer. When asked what they "should say for her to Bro. Wendell," she replied—"Tell him I have reckoned much on his having meetings here again." Frankie and Amanda were buried on the same day in the same grave. Theer being no preacher of the "blessed hope" and Life through Christ within reach, the funeral exercises were limited to a prayer and reading of the Scriptures by the resident Methodist minister and the singing of the beautiful hymn, "Shining Shore."

"Faith sees the bright, eternal doors
Unfold to make his children way;
They shall be clothed with endless life,
And shine in everlasting day." R. W.

Died, Dec. 27th, 1861, in Castleton, Vt., of diphtheria, Mary Hannah Graham, aged six years, and Frederick Nathan Graham, aged three years.

Thus in one week Bro. John Graham has laid away three interesting children. One, whose death was noticed last week, and now two more, who died the same day, and were buried in the same coffin. The funeral services were held at the Advent Chapel, in the presence of a large audience. The scene was very solemn and affecting. I spoke on the resurrection, from John 5: 28, 29. "All that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth. The future is lighted up with joy, in the view of the glorious reservation and re-union of those who have been separated by death. And "the hour is coming." The time hastens for this event, which gives additional joy to those who love his appearing and kingdom.

Our Brother G. is greatly afflicted, with his family, but they are also greatly blessed and supported in this hour by the "blessed hope" and present grace, which is sufficient for them. J. V. H.

Castleton, Dec. 28th, 1861.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Northfield, Nov. 29th, 1861, Bro. Silas Whittaker, aged 49 years.

He died suddenly, of apoplexy, at his residence, having been sick but about thirty-six hours.

Bro. Whittaker was hopefully converted to God in early youth. He then united with the Methodist Church, where he remained a member until the early part of the Advent movement. Since 1842, he had been "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of . . . our Savior Jesus Christ." He had a heart to feel for, and hands ready to supply the wants of the needy. His house was ever the home of the weary pilgrim. But he rests from his labors, and his works will follow him. H. P. Sikes.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Etna, we have foreign news from Liverpool to the 18th ult., and Queenstown the 19th.

Warlike preparations continued. The Persia took nearly 1200 troops. The Grenadier and Scots Fusilier Guards would embark on the 19th.

All disposable vessels in the Mediterranean were assembling at Gibraltar, to be ready for immediate departure.

Admiral Dacres has been appointed second in command to Admiral Milne.

War risks at Lloyd's were active and advancing.

Parliament meets about the middle of January.

The death of Prince Albert caused a most profound sensation. There is great sympathy for the Queen, who bore the bereavement with much fortitude. The warmest eulogiums have been passed on Prince Albert. Strong sympathy from the French and other Continental Courts are expressed, many of which went immediately into mourning.

Lord Palmerston has been ill from gout, but is better.

The Asia's news is generally regarded in Paris as unfavorable for peace.

The leading Paris journals continue to advocate French neutrality.

Garibaldi had written a letter to the Genoa Committee which indicates an approaching movement.

Several French journals maintain that France should give a moral support to England, by recognizing the justice of her demand and the independence of the South.

The Opinione Nationale, the organ of Prince Napoleon, says France has no other enemy but England, and should not weaken the United States.

London, Dec. 19. A rumor was current at Paris yesterday that the French Government had sent a note to Russia, Prussia and Austria, suggesting a common mediation of the great powers between England and America.

A portion of the Mediterranean fleet is gradually accumulating at Gibraltar to be ready, if necessary, to cross the Atlantic.

[Advices of the 21st ult.]

GREAT BRITAIN.

Warlike preparations continued. Additional troops have been ordered to be in readiness for embarkation, but the Army and Navy Gazette of the 21st says no more are likely to be placed under orders until hostilities are actually declared. In that event, some of the regiments now in the Mediterranean garrisons will probably be sent in the war vessels now rendezvousing at Gibraltar.

The steamer Adriatic, with nearly 1400 troops of Grenadier Guards, and the Parana, with about 1000 of Scots Fusileer Guard, left Southampton on the 20th for British North America.

The steamer Cleopatra would leave Liverpool on the 21st for Queenstown, there to embark over 500 men of the 17th Regiment.

The Magdelena would embark about 1000 men at Southampton on the 21st inst.

The Steamer St. Andrew, of the Quebec and Glasgow line, has been chartered to convey troops, &c.

Halifax, Dec. 31. Steamships Adriatic and Persia have arrived at Halifax with troops.

Paris correspondents generally say that the belief that hostilities between England and America will not be arrested, has become more general.

Prince Napoleon, it is rumored in Paris, will, at the next session of the Senate, deliver a discourse which is expected to create a great sensation. No one, however, seems to know the subject of the impending oration.

Later.—Arrival of the Bohemian.

ENGLAND.

The English papers are still discussing the Trent affair in a hopeful vein, and it is thought that the Confederate Commissioners will be given up and war be thus avoided. Pending the receipt of news from America in response to English advices by the Europa, there was quite a lull in speculation on the Anglo-American question, and the result was being quietly awaited, the prevailing opinion being in favor of peace.

The Paris Presse says two new Southern Commissioners had arrived at some German port en route for Paris.

The London Times has a critique on Secretary Chase's report, and expatiates on the extraordinary extension of the borrowing system, and says it exceeds anything in England's history.

FRANCE.

The Government is about to send reinforcements to the squadrons off Mexico and the Northeastern coast of America. It was also rumored that a squadron of observation is to be sent to the coast of America under Admiral Henaud.

It is reported that the frigate Algiers has been stationed off the Straits of Gibraltar to prevent the passage of privateers.

Canton, Nov. 16. Mr. Burlingame, the American Plenipotentiary, has visited the Governor and was well received. His visit was returned. Mr. B. afterward left for Shanghae, on his way to the capital.

The rebels are near Ningpoo, and the inhabitants are fleeing to Shanghae, where the alarm had subsided.

Hangshon is reported to be invested by the rebels.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Departure of Mason and Slidell.—We are informed that Messrs. Mason and Slidell were finally delivered up yesterday, Jan. 1st., and left Fort Warren at about 11 o'clock. The arrangement for their return was very quietly made, and nothing was known in this city in regard to the affair until the hour arrived for their departure. The steam tug boat Starlight was employed by the Government to convey the prisoners to Provincetown, Cape Cod, where they are to be transferred to the British gunboat Rinaldo, which arrived at that Port Tuesday night.

In accordance with the above plan of releasing the rebels, the tug boat Starlight left this city shortly before ten o'clock yesterday, and stopped at Fort Warren, where she took on board Mason and Slidell and their two secretaries. After receiving their baggage, &c., the tug proceeded on he way to sea, leaving the fort about 11 o'clock. The whole affair was conducted without any display, in perfect quiet, and in the ordinary manner of conveying passengers.

The tug boat would probably reach Provincetown same afternoon, and the prisoners will be transferred without delay to the British gunboat.—Journal.

A dispatch to Palmer's News Room states that the British gunboat Rinaldo, with Mason and Slidell on board, sailed from Provincetown at 6 Wednesday evening. It blew a hurricane all night, but as the wind was off shore she probably sustained no damage.—Journal.

Mobile, Jan. 1. A Confederate steamer going from Pensacola to the Navy Yard was fired upon by Fort Pickens. Bragg's batteries replied, and the firing continued at last accounts.

Baltimore, Jan. 4. The Southern papers contain important news.

A dispatch from Pensacola dated 1st inst. says Fort Pickens opened fire yesterday, but it has not been renewed to-day. Our batteries are silent.

The Charleston Mercury has a dispatch giving an account of the landing of a large force of Federals on the North Edisto and the seizure of Railroad Station No. 4 on the Charleston and Savannah Railroad.

Sixteen Federal war vessels are reported at Ship Island.

There has been a destructive fire at Richmond during which the theatre and other valuable property was burnt.

Frederick, Md., Dec. 31. Contrabands are arriving daily, and are sent to Gen. McClellan's head-quarters. It is stated that at least one-third of the slaves of Loudon county have made their escape, and some from Fairfax Farquar and Culpepper occasionally turn up.

Washington, Jan. 2. At no time has Gen. McClellan been dangerously ill. He is rapidly recovering from a severe cold taken to Gen. Porter's last review. He is attending at all important business, and will be out in a day or two.

Baltimore, Jan. 4. The Richmond Dispatch of Friday says that a private dispatch has been received there dated Mobile, yesterday, which says Picayune Butler is at Ship Island; also that the Federal troops have nominal possession of Biloxi, and it is believed that they will occupy all the towns on the coast in that region. They captured two cannon at Biloxi. It is stated that from 5000 to 7000 Federal troops landed there, and it is rumored that they express a determination to push forward to Jackson.

At the South, everywhere, one hears the most bitter and violent denunciations of the Federal Government and of President Lincoln; and the people declare they will resist to the death all attempt to subjugate them. They declare the Administration designs this as an Abolition war, and that they will perish before they surrender their slaves.

Cincinnati, Jan. 6. A special dispatch to the Gazette from Huttonsville, Va., says that the expedition, sent out by Gen. Milroy to attack Huntersville, [illegible]

After skirmishing an hour the rebels retired with a loss of eight killed and wounded. Our side lost none. $80,000 worth of army stores and clothing were captured and destroyed.

Discussion.—We are to hold a discussion in Willimantic, Ct., with J. S. Loveland, on the immortality of the soul, commencing Tuesday evening, Jan. 7th, and continuing four evenings or more.—G.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the Christian Publication Society, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once Five Hundred Dollars, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than any Tract Society in the country, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in Tracts, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

☞ PREMIUM TRACT!! ☜

The Christian Publication Society offer a premium of Ten Dollars for the best Tract on The Signs of the Times, and the tokens of the near approach of the Kingdom of God.

The Tract should be plainly written, on only one side of the paper, (covering about 24 pages foolscap, in ordinary hand writing,) and the manuscripts should be accompanied by a sealed envelope containing the author's name. If more than one manuscript is retained, satisfactory payment will be made for the same. Rejected MSS. are to be at their author's disposal, and the committee may reject all if thought best by them.

Manuscripts should be sent to the Crisis office, addressed to the "Editorial Committee of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass., or to H. L. Hastings, D. T. Taylor, or H. F. Carpenter, Editorial Committee, on or before January 1st, 1862.

Per order of the C. P. Society,
H. L Hastings, President.

Notice of Conference.

Providence permitting, there will be a conference, of Advent believers, held in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., commencing Tuesday, 2 o'clock, P. M., Jan. 17th, 1862, and continuing over Lord's day. Bro. A. N. Seymour and wife, Bro George Moyer, and others are requested to meet with us. Brethren and sisters from surrounding vicinities are earnestly requested to attend this meeting. Come, brethren, make efforts to be here. It may be the last conference we shall enjoy previous to the general gathering at the coming of our Lord, for he is at hand. This meeting will be held in the neighborhood of Bro. John Arable's and N. C. Jerome's. In behalf of the church,

J. A. Sober.

Our Father is Dead.

LINES COMPOSED ON THE DEATH OF MR. JOHN [illegible], WHO DIED JULY 25TH, 1861, AGED FIFTY-EIGHT.

[Sung at the grave.]

Our father is dead! he has gone to the tomb!
Farewell, dearest father, farewell;
Then sweet be thy rest till the Savior returns,
O! then thou with angels wilt dwell.

That cold, lifeless form, now in death's chill embrace,
Lies low in the dark earth so drear;
O! never again shall we gaze on that face
Until Jesus in glory appear.

Our own loving mother long since passed away,
And she sleeps till the last trump shall sound;
Then father and mother will hail that glad day
In glory, where pleasures abound.

When we think of that father we all loved so well,
When we think of that noble high brow,
With eyes filled with light and a heart full of love,
Our hearts whisper—where is he now?

In this pleasant green field we leave him to rest,
Aside from all sorrow and care,
And the faithful, sure promise all such shall be blest,
When they rise to meet Christ in the air.

Farewell, dearest father, and calm be thy rest
In the stillness of that dreamless sleep;
No grief can disturb thee, no danger molest,
In that chamber so silent and deep.

He's left a companion in sadness to mourn,
With her daughter who stands by her side;
Blest hope to the widow—a God thou wilt be,
And for the fatherless thou wilt provide.

Ye dear weeping children, oh never forget
The counsels and prayers of your sire;
Make Jesus your friend and a father he'll be,
And in Eden you'll part never more.

Ye kind, loving sisters, a brother and friends,
Be patient and trust in the Lord;
Thy brother will rise when the Savior descends,
And with him you'll receive your reward.

O, hail! thou blest morning, when Salem's bright King
Shall gather his jewels all home
From the east and the west, from the south and the north,—
With singing to Zion they'll come.

O Jesus! come quickly! we hail thy return,
To make the earth blossom again;
And thy saints will rejoice as they upward are borne,
To meet thee in glory. Amen.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

Thoughts for the Thoughtful—No. 2.

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime!"

True, every word of it. It is a privilege of much value to be permitted to live in these "last days," and see the death struggle of old earth. I would desire to live and see the end. It is dark looking in the grave, even if we sleep in Jesus. It is well enough, when in the full enjoyment of health, to sing, as some do—but when the time comes to unlatch the gate, it is generally done reluctantly, and many confess that it is "quite dark beyond." To us the thought of dying has always been unpleasant and unwelcome, but the prospect of living now until Jesus comes is glorious.

"Death is the gate to endless joy;"

"The end of all things is at hand"—a solemn truth, but how few there are who really believe it! When we endeavor to impress this great fact upon the minds of people, our heart is pained at the apparent indifference they seem to manifest. It is truly discouraging to one who feels deeply concerned for the eternal welfare of perishing mortals, and who realizes that "the time is short," when presenting the great truth of the coming of Christ and the nearness of that event, to see it received with such manifest coldness; and after laboring to bring men to see these things as we see them, and to offer this last message to dying men, we feel like saying with Isaiah, "who hath believed our report?" But has not the Master told us that this indifference would be one of the characteristics of the last days? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of man be." It is very evident that Noah's preaching was unavailing, from the fact that none of the inhabitants of that world were saved but Noah's family. Doubtless, the old patriarch was as earnest in his preaching and as faithful in warning that doomed people, as we are in these last hours exhorting men "to flee from the wrath to come."

I doubt whether we have any right, as the messengers of God, to stop to question what good we are doing, to ascertain whether men are paying heed to these things or no. We know very well that if we discharge our duty, we are not responsible for the consequences that may ensue upon the rejection of our message. What saith the prophet Ezekiel? "Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore hear the word of my mouth, and give them warning from me. When I say to the wicked thou shalt surely die; and thou givest him not warning; nor speakest to warn the wicked from his way to save his life; the same wicked man shall die in his iniquity, but his blood will I require at thine hand. For if thou warn the wicked, and he turn not from his wickedness, nor from his wicked way, he shall die in his iniquity, but thou hast delivered thy soul." Ezek. 3: 17-19. Faithfulness is required of us in fulfilling our [illegible] God is overturning and will still overturn until He whose right it is shall come to reign. Our conflict with the prince of darkness and his emissaries will be a severe one, and more desperate as the end approaches. Are we all ready for the fight? Is there one single piece of armor wanting? O brother! put it on; put on the whole armor and STAND. The Master comes!

For the Crisis.

Anti-Christ.

If any are weak in the faith that the Roman Catholic hierarchy constitutes the "anti-Christ" of the Scriptures, it is well to refresh their minds with some portions of their doctrine and pretensions. At present, we cite the following, to show the language of the "man of sin."

"What human tongue can describe the dignity of the priesthood and the greatness of the priest. The first man was great, who, established as the king of the universe, commanded all the inhabitants of his vast dominion, who obeyed him with docility. Moses was great, who by a word divided the waters of the sea, and caused an entire people to pass dry shod between its suspended masses. Joshua was great, who said to the sun, 'Stand still,' and the sun obeying, stood still at the voice of a mortal. The kings of the earth are mighty, who command armies and shake the world by the sound of their name. But behold! there is a man still greater; there is a man who daily, when it pleases him opens the gates of heaven, and addresses himself to the Son of the Eternal, to the Monarch of worlds, and says, 'Come down from your throne, come.' Obedient to the voice of this man, the word of God, by whom all things were created, leaves instantly the abode of glory, incarnates himself in the hands of this man, more mighty than kings, than angels, than the august Mary; and this man says to him, 'you are my Son; this day I have begotten you; you are my victim,' and he allows this man to immolate him, to place him wherever he wishes, and give him to whomsoever he chooses. This man is the priest!!!"

The priest is not only almighty in heaven and over the body of the god-man, he is also almighty upon earth and over the mystical body of Jesus Christ. Behold, a man has fallen into the hands of the devil; What power will be able to deliver him? Call to the assistance of this unhappy man the angels and archangels, holy Michael himself, chief of the heavenly host, conqueror of Satan and his revolted legions, never will he be able to sever the chains of the sinner who has placed his confidence in the wicked one; . . . the priest can do it."

"Much more. Suppose that the Redeemer visibly descends in person to his church, and stations himself in a confessional to administer the sacrament of penance, while a priest occupies another. The Son of God says, I absolve you, and the priest says also, I absolve you, and the penitent finds himself absolved just as much by the one as by the other. Thus the priest, mighty like God, can instantly snatch the sinner from hell, render him worthy of paradise, and a slave of the devil make a son of Abraham, AND GOD HIMSELF IS OBLIGED TO SUBMIT TO THE JUDGMENT OF THE PRIEST, to refuse or grant his pardon according as the priest may grant or refuse absolution. THE SENTENCE OF THE PRIEST PRECEDES, GOD SUBMITS TO IT. Can any one conceive of a greater power?" *

* Catechisme de perseverance. Vol. 4, pp. 310, 312.

The above is taken from a work of M. Gaume, of eight volumes; was approved by nine bishops and archbishops, and by his holiness Pope Gregory XVI; and as a token of his fatherly regard for the author of said work, the Pontiff sent him the cross of Order of St. Sylvester. If this is not "above God," "sitting in the place of God," and denying the claims and prerogatives "of the Father and the Son," I am not yet informed what would be.

For the Crisis.

Believing and Realizing.

The faculties of men are various, and for various purposes; for instance, our understanding, or judgment, has an important agency in the direction of the passions; the memory also has an important mission. But is there not a possibility of these faculties being developed and in exercise, while other important ones are dormant? or, Scripturally speaking, "having a form of godliness" without "the power thereof?" May we not be thoroughly convinced of the truth or certainty of an event, and not realize its importance? I think, to be aroused effectually of what our judgment convinces us, another class of faculties must be brought into exercise—the affections; and nothing but the gentle breathings of the Holy Spirit will awaken these to activity in divine things. Are there not multitudes at the present time who are intellectually convinced of the truth of the advent near, who are lukewarm in religion, and perhaps backsliders from God?

Some are absorbed in worldly things; some having even the understanding darkened, by erroneous conclusions from Scriptural controversy; some having one idol and some another. And what will arouse these sleepers from their dreams? Will they ever be awakened to see their danger until the trumpet sounds which is to call the dead to life? It is to be feared that many will never get out of dreamland until the giant destiny fastens upon them the horrors of fate. Awake, ye sleepers! there is danger near. Escape from the enchanter before he coils around you his unflinching grasp, and you are swallowed up in the whirlpool of despair. D. N. [illegible]

Correspondence.

From Ralph Phinney.

BRO. GRANT:—For some time I have thought of throwing out some hints to the friends and lovers of the near approach of our Lord, to stir up their minds by way of remembrance.

It will not do to believe in the near coming of Jesus alone, but we must have holy living also; and that living must be manifest to the world. Ye are a city set on a hill that cannot be hid. "Let your light so shine" that men "may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Thus we see men are led to praise God by reason of our conduct. Then does it not follow that our bad conduct will lead sinners to "blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called"? This is a day when men want light; and how can we give it to them better than by proving by our conduct that we do really believe what we profess? If we confess that we are pilgrims and strangers, let us do it by our holy living. If a man says, I am seeking a better country, and still remains in his old village home, who believes him?

Again, men should be kind one toward another. "Charity suffereth long and is kind," "vaunteth not itself," "believeth all things," etc. "Though I have all knowledge," "and understand all mysteries," and "have all faith, so that I could remove mountains . . . and give my body to be burned," and "bestow all my goods to feed the poor," "and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing." Brethren and sisters, think of the above facts, and see to it that the love of God be in your souls, if this be the case, we are like Jesus, meek, inoffensive, always doing good and seeking our neighbor's good in preference to the riches and pleasures of this world. And don't think to say to your needy brother and sister, be ye warmed, fed, and clothed, notwithstanding ye give them not those things necessary. How dwelleth the love of God in those who are seeking to lay up treasures here, and are grinding the face of the poor! I do hope there are none who are looking for the soon coming of the Lord Jesus that do such things; if there are, remember your conduct is a libel on the professions you make. Therefore let us seek to build each other up in the most holy faith.

"If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." "If Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin," etc. Our acts and conduct are known and read of all men. Yes, all know whether we manifest that meekness that they read of as being displayed by Jesus. Can we expect to feel at home in the kingdom of God, when it comes, unless our sympathies and spirit are like angels and "just men made perfect"? Take the desperado and place him in the society of the virtuous and good, and he is not at home there, and longs to be among those congenial spirits of his own sort. So it will be with us, when Jesus comes, unless our feelings and sympathies are the same as his. Let us then, do our duty toward all men, as well as pray and sing. Do His commands, that ye may have life; that ye "may enter in through the gates into the city." "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Do your duty toward the laborers in the gospel; also to the membership, and those who are without, "redeeming the time."

I would like to see my old brethren and friends of former years. Many of those with whom I labored in 1842–3 have gone back into the world, some have fallen asleep, and I find some have returned to their old creeds again, and are satisfied with the old forms. I see Bro. Ingraham is still in the field. I do long to see him, and would write him if I knew his address; also those brethren at Woodstock, N. B., with whom I first found Jesus. Let me here say that I have often prayed for them and longed to see them. Let me say to them, and all, that I am striving still to overcome the world, and with good success when I lean on Jesus. Let all my old friends address me here, where I am located and preaching Jesus, expecting soon to be changed and caught up to meet the Lord, and so ever be with him. I like the Crisis better than any of our papers. Keep it pure till Jesus comes; and may God give it prosperity. Yours in hope.

From Bro. C. S. Page.

BRO. GRANT:—I have thought that it would be proper for me to say through the Crisis, to our western brethren, particularly to the members of Iowa, Minn., and Wis. Christian Conference, that the reason I did not attend, or report myself to our last annual conference, was, I had no information of the time or place until it was too late. We intended to have had the conference with us, but for some reason we did not.

Our Quarterly Conference in Winona Co. was held Oct. 19th and 20th. We had a good meeting. Bro. Thomas K. Allen (of Winona) was with us, and took part in preaching "the word." He showed himself a workman. He was set apart for the ministry, "with the imposition of the hands of the Eldership." An appropriate discourse was delivered on the occasion by Eld. W. Sweet. Prayer by him, charge by the writer. We hope that the brethren will sustain Bro. Allen wherever he shall labor. Our prayer is, Lord, send forth men that will labor in God's harvest field; men that are not afraid to speak the truth as it is in Christ. I am glad there are so many that are awake to the truth.

We like the Crisis well. Hope it will be sustained. Here is a great field of labor, and there are but very few, comparatively, that are ready to gird on the armor and face the cold chill of the world. But I am thankful that there are some that are willing to go out bearing the reproach of Christ; believing that he will be with them to the end; having the blessed assurance, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." John 10: 27, says, "My sheep hear my voice, . . . and they follow me." Ver. 28,—"And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." "Neither shall any enemy pluck them," etc. This is the plain import and energy of the original, which is greatly enervated by adding the word man in the translation, as the authors of our English version have frequently done."—[Doddridge.]

Thank the Lord, eternal life is promised unto his people, with the assurance that no enemy shall be able to pluck his people out of his hand. Amen.

Winona Co., Minn.

From N. L. Curtiss.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST: I feel truly thankful to hear from you from time to time, through the Crisis, in this hour of earth's distress and the nation's perplexity. It does my heart good to know that there are some who "look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, . . . which are eternal." Truly it would seem rather dark if we looked at things as seen at present; but blessed be God who "calleth those things which be not as though they were," and who revealeth things unto us by his Spirit which he giveth us. By the eye of faith, we can see glorious things that await us in the future, causing us to go on our way rejoicing, counting "that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us," when he "who is our life shall appear," for then shall we "also appear with him in glory," and that glory shall be eternal. Thank God for the prospect that soon this mortal shall put on immortality, and we shall be made like Christ.

Brethren, let us be faithful and let our light so shine before the world that we shall be clean from the blood of all men, and be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of man at his appearing. O may we all live so purely before God, and be so engaged in the cause of Christ, that we shall loose our hold on the things of earth, and on every thing that draws us away from God. Let us ever keep in mind the text, "Thou God seest me," always remembering that we shall be brought to give an account for the time and talent allotted us here; and if we do these things, we shall be able to stand in that day, and receive that crown of glory that is undefiled and that "fadeth not away." May God help us to stand, is my prayer. Amen.

Barkhamsted, Ct., Nov. 27, '61.

Extracts from Letters.

J. C. DENNEN, of New Braintree, Nov. 25, 1861, writes:—"The Crisis is a welcome messenger to us, as a family, living as we do where we hear no preaching, either bad or good. We are glad to receive the Crisis for Sabbath perusal. Although members of the M. E. Church, yet we love the Crisis for its spirit and truth.

I was brought into the fold of God through the influence of the Advent church in Salisbury, Ct., in 1848, but soon left Ct. and went to Maine, and afterwards joined the M. E. Church. I have always loved the doctrine of the advent of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; and now, living as we do where there are neither Methodists nor Adventists, and without having the privilege of going to meeting on the Sabbath, I thought of the Crisis, and accordingly subscribed, wishing you a God-speed in your work of spreading the gospel of the kingdom to the nations of the earth."

SR. B. P. HILDRETH, Westford, Mass., writes:—"It seems to me that this is the beginning of the 'time of trouble' which will result in 'the battle of the great day of God Almighty.' That we, and all the readers of the Crisis, may be prepared to 'enter into the King's palace' and stand before him in robes of righteousness, is the prayer of your unworthy sister."

BRO. DAVID WILSON, Shelburne Falls, Mass., Nov. 18th, writes:—"I am receiving the legacy which Jesus tells his children they shall have in this world, but in him there is peace. There is no peace only in Jesus. In the world there are wars, commotions, and strife. Glory to God it is the last great struggle. I can truly lift up my head and rejoice, knowing my redemption draweth nigh. I believe without doubt that we shall see no better times until the King of peace shall come and establish his righteous reign on earth. Then those nations, which are now being gathered to the battle of the great day of God Almighty, shall become as chaff of the summer threshing-floor; and the wind shall carry 'them away, that no place' shall be 'found for them.' Then will the kingdom, 'and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven' be 'given to the people of the saints of the Most High, and they shall 'possess it forever and ever.' O it is my prayer, 'Come, Lord Jesus,' 'come quickly.'"

Selections.

Curious Calculation.

The vast number of inhabitants who do live, and have lived, upon the face of the earth, appear, at first sight, to defy the powers of calculation. But if we suppose the world to have existed six thousand years; that there now exist one thousand million; that a generation passes away in thirty years; that every past generation averages the present, and that four individuals may stand on one square yard, we find that the whole number will not occupy a compass so great as one-fourth the extent of England. Allowing six thousand years since the creation, and a generation to pass away in thirty years, we shall have two hundred generations, which, at one thousand millions each, will be two hundred thousand millions, which being divided by four persons to a square yard, will leave fifty thousand millions of square yards; there are in a square mile three millions, ninety-seven thousand, six hundred square yards, by which if the former sum be divided, it will give sixteen thousand one hundred and thirty-three square miles, the root of which, in whole numbers, is about one hundred and twenty-seven, so that one hundred and twenty-seven miles square will be found sufficient to contain the immense and almost inconceivable number of two hundred thousand millions of human beings.

The Voyagers.

We are voyagers on an ocean, and our destiny we know,
For our chart it has pointed out the way,
And our Leader he is cheering us as o'er the waves we go,
Saying courage, sailors' soon we'll gain the day.
Then we'll watch and we'll pray,
As our vessel bears away,
And we ne'er will be disheartened any more;
For the port is getting nearer, and we hear the Leader say,
We soon shall reach the harbor and the shore.

Though hard the winds are blowing and high the waters roll,
It will only make us sigh for land the more,
And our rest will be the sweeter when we reach the final goal,
And shout our sufferings over on the shore.
Then we'll watch, etc.

We have passed the coasts of Babylon, the Medo-Persian heights,
We have left the realms of Grecia far behind,
We've been sailing down the Roman shore these eighteen hundred years,
And the chart declares the port we soon shall find.
Then we'll watch, etc.

To Fault-finding Parents.

There are times when it is necessary to censure and punish; but very much more may be done by encouraging children when they do well. Be, therefore, more careful to express your approbation of good conduct, than your disapprobation of bad. Nothing can more discourage a child than a spirit of incessant fault-finding on the part of its parents, and hardly anything can exert a more injurious influence upon the disposition, both of the parent and child. There are two great motives influencing human actions,—hope and fear. Both of these are at times necessary. But who would not prefer to have a child influenced to good conduct by a desire of pleasing, rather than by fear of offending? If a mother never expresses her gratification when her children do well, and is always censuring them when she sees anything amiss, they are discouraged and unhappy; their disposition becomes hardened and soured by this careless fretting; and at last, finding that, whether they do well or ill, they are equally found fault with, they relinquish all efforts to please, and become heedless of reproaches.

Duties of Daily Life.

Life is not entirely made up of great evils or heavy trials, but the perpetual recurrence of petty evils and small trials is the ordinary and appointed exercise of the christian graces. To bear with the failings of those about us—with their infirmities, their bad judgment, their ill-breeding, their perverse tempers—to endure neglect when we feel we deserved attention, and ingratitude where we expected thanks—to bear with the company of disagreeable people whom Providence has placed in our way, and whom he has provided or purposed for the trial of our virtue—these are the best exercises of patience and self-denial, and the better because not chosen by ourselves. To bear with vexation in business, with disappointment in our expectations, with interruptions of our retirement, with folly, intrusion, disturbance—in short, with whatever opposes our will, or contradicts our humor—this habitual acquiescence appears to be more of the essence of self-denial than any little rigors or afflictions of our own imposing. These constant, inevitable, but inferior evils properly improved, furnish a good moral discipline, and might, in the days of ignorance, have superseded pilgrimage and penance.—Hannah More.

PRINCE ALBERT.—Prince Albert was born Aug. 26th, 1819, and was forty-two years of age at the time of his death. He was next brother to the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, and heir presumptive to his titles. He entered the University of Bonn in 1837, as a student of jurisprudence, and his university course did him great credit for diligence, order and capacity. In July, 1838, he visited England with his father and brother, and at that time made his first acquaintance with Her Majesty the Queen. Soon after his return from this visit the rumors of a matrimonial engagement began to spread, although denied by the ministerial papers. But in Nov. 1839, the Queen herself announced her intentions of accepting the hand of the Prince to her Privy Council, who approved the step. The marriage was solemnized in Feb., 1840. [illegible] World's Exhibition at London, and it is said that the real character of that great event was due to his suggestion. From that time forward he was connected with most of the leading movements in England in behalf of education, art and agriculture. He was a man of good natural abilities, of unexceptionable character, and of superior personal appearance. His position in life was peculiar, and not without grave disadvantages, and it is sufficient eulogy to say that he filled it with honor.—Boston Journal.

THE IRON CROWN OF LOMBARDY.—Republican hands threaten to grasp the Iron Crown of Charlemagne! Garibaldi, at the head of the insurgent Italians, has pursued the Austrian General D'Urban into Monza. In the Cathedral at Monza was, till lately, deposited this famous relic, which is now placed for safe keeping in the citadel of Mantua. The crown is an iron circlet, which tradition pretends is made from one of the nails from the cross of Christ. It was first placed upon the head of the conqueror Charlemagne by Pope Adrian I., in the year 774. In 1452 it was carried to Rome to crown Frederick IV. In 1530 it was used at Bologna to crown the Emperor Charles V. In 1805 Napoleon placed it on his own head when he conquered Italy.

ITEMS.

THE LARGEST PRINTING PRESS IN THE WORLD.—At the printing house of the Appletons, in New York, is a press made expressly for Webster's Spelling Book, which prints both sides at once. As this is the only press of the kind in existence, so Webster's "Speller" is the only book requiring a press so rapid, and on which a single book is being printed without interruption from January to December. The sale of Webster's "Speller" amounts to more than a million per annum, and more have been sold than there are people in the United States.—New York Aurora.

☞ The Scientific American gives the following directions for tanning skins with the fur on:—Nail the fresh skins tightly and smoothly against a door, keeping the skinny side out. Next proceed with a broad bladed knife to scrape away all loose pieces of flesh and fat; then rub in much chalk, and do not be sparing of labor. When the chalk begins to powder and fall off, take the skin down, fill it with finely ground alum, wrap it closely together, and keep it in a dry place for two or three days; at the end of that time unfold it, shake out the alum and work is over.

THE SABBATH IN FRANCE.—The Rev. Mr. Hocart, President of the French Conference, while attending the British Conference, which met July 25th, in Newcastle, stated that the working classes of the French had no day of rest. On asking a workman in a large clothing establishment in Paris where he attended worship, he received the following reply: "We have no time for going anywhere. I am so exhausted on the Sabbath that I can but just creep into my bed at night. The Sabbath is our busiest day."

To prevent Tools from Rusting.—Thousands of dollars are lost each year, by the rusting of plows, hoes, shovels, etc. Some of this might be prevented by the application of lard and rosin to all steel or iron implements. Take three times as much weight of lard as rosin, and melt them together. This can be applied with a brush or cloth to all surfaces in danger of rusting, and they can be easily kept bright. If tools are to be laid away for the winter, give them a coating of this, and you will be well repaid. It can be kept for a long time, and should be on hand and ready for use.

☞ In the south of France a harvest of two and a half million of pounds weight of flower leaves is gathered every year, and sold for about a quarter of a million pounds sterling. It consists of 100,000 pounds of leaves of the orange blossom, 500,000 pounds of rose leaves, 100,000 pounds of jasmine blooms, 60,000 pounds of violets, 65,000 pounds of acacia buds, 30,000 of tube-roses, and 5,000 pounds of jonquil flowers.

THE GOOD WIFE.—She commandeth her husband in any equal matter, by constantly obeying him. She never crosseth her husband in the spring-tide of his anger, but stays till it be ebbing water. Her clothes are rather comely than costly, and she makes plain cloth to be velvet by her handsome wearing it.—Fuller.

Cement for the tops of Bottles or Jars.—Take equal parts of rosin and brick dust, pounded fine, and a lump of beeswax. Stew them together and keep in an old tin, melting it when you want to seal your jars.

Presence of Mind.

1. If a man faints, place him flat on his back and let him alone.

2. If any poison is swallowed, drink instantly half a glass of cool water with a heaping teaspoonful each of common salt and ground mustard stirred into it; this vomits as soon as it reaches the stomach; but for fear some of the poison may still remain, swallow the white of one or two raw eggs or drink a cup of strong coffee, these two being antidotes for a greater number of poisons than any dozen other articles known, with the advantage of their being always at hand; if not, a half-pint of sweet-oil, or lamp-oil, or "drippings," or melted butter or lard are good substitutes, especially if they vomit quickly.

3. The best thing to stop the bleeding of a moderate cut instantly, is to cover it profusely with cob-web, or flour and salt, half-and-half.

4. If the blood comes from a wound by jets or spirts, be spry, or the man will be dead in a few minutes, because an artery is severed; tie a handkerchief loosely around near the part between the wound and the heart! put a stick between the handkerchief and the skin, twist it round until the blood ceases to flow, and keep it there until the doctor comes; if in a position where the handkerchief can not be used, [illegible] the pressure until the bleeding ceases, but do not lessen that pressure for an instant, until the physician arrives, so as to glue up the wound by the coagulation or hardening of the cooling blood.

5. If your clothing takes fire, slide the hands down the dress, keeping them as close to the body as possible, at the same time sinking to the floor by bending the knees; this has a smothering effect on the flames; if not extinguished, or a great headway is gotten, lie down on the floor, roll over and over, or better, envelop yourself in a carpet, rug, bed-cloth, or any garment you can get hold of, always preferring woolen.

6. If a man asks you to go his security, say, "No," and run; otherwise you may be enslaved for life, or your wife and children may spend a weary existence, in want, sickness, and beggary.

7. If you find yourself in possession of a counterfeit note or coin, throw it in the fire on the instant; otherwise you may be tempted to pass it, to feel mean therefor, as long as you live, then it may pass into some man's hands as mean as yourself, with a new perpetration of iniquity, the loss to fall eventually on some poor widow whose "all" it may be.

8. Never laugh at the mishaps of any fellow mortal.

9. The very instant you perceive yourself in a passion shut your mouth; this is one among the best precepts outside of inspiration.

10. The man who always exacts the last cent, is always a mean man; there is no "evacuant" in all the "Materia Medica" efficient enough to "purge" him of his debasement; he is beyond druggery.

11. Never affect to be "plain" or "blunt;" these are the synonyms of brutality and boorishness; such persons are constantly inflicting wounds which neither time nor medicine can ever heal.

12. Never be witty at another's expense; true generosity never dwelt in such a heart; it only wants the opportunity to become a cheat or a rogue.

13. If the body is tired, rest; if the brain is tired, sleep.

14. If the bowels are loose, lie down in a warm bed, remain there, and eat nothing until you are well.

15. If an action of the bowels does not occur at the usual hour, eat not an atom until they do act, at least for thirty-six hours; meanwhile drink largely of cold water or hot teas, and exercise in the open air to the extent of a gentle perspiration, and keep this up until things are righted; this one suggestion, if practiced, would save myriads of lives every year, both in city and country.

16. The three best medicines in the world are warmth, abstinence, and repose.—Hall's Journal of Health.

CUT OFF THE BACK LEGS OF YOUR CHAIRS.—I will tell you a secret worth knowing. A thousand things not worth half as much have been patented and elevated into a business.

It is this. If you cut off the back legs of your chairs so that the back part of the seat shall be two inches lower than the front part, it will greatly relieve the fatigue of sitting, and keep your spine in much better shape.

The principal fatigue in sitting comes from your sliding forward, and thus straining the ligaments and muscles in the small of the back. The expedient I have advised will obviate this tendency, and, as I have suggested, add greatly to the comfort and healthfulness of the sitting posture.

The front edge of a chair should not be more than fifteen inches high, for the average man, nor more than fourteen for the average woman. The average chair is now seventeen inches high for all, which no amount of slanting in the seat can make comfortable.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

CURE FOR THE EAR ACHE.—Take a small piece of cotton batting, or cotton wool, making a depression in the centre with the end of a finger, and fill it with as much ground pepper as will rest on a five cent piece, gather it into a ball, and tie it up. Dip the ball into sweet oil, and insert it into the ear, covering the latter with cotton wool, and use a bandage or cap to retain it in place. Almost instant relief will be experienced, and the application is so gentle that an infant will not be injured by it, but will experience relief as well as adults.—Cor. Boston Journal.

REMOVING SUNBURN.—If our young lady friends would like to know what will take off tan and sunburn, let them take a handful of bran, pour a quart of boiling water on it, let it stand one hour, then strain. When cold put to it a pint of bay rum. Bottle and use it when needed.

Earthly Hopes.

BY VESTA B. CUDWORTH.

One by one, as stars set at night,
Earth's brightest hopes depart,
Though long they linger, casting their light,
Painting life's landscape all too bright
For the peace of the trusting heart.

Thus one by one the drops of bliss
Leak out from the silver cup,
Leaving the stricken its emptiness,
Or worse, the dregs of bitterness,
As a pledge for their trust and hope.

Loved ones are leaving, one by one;
Youth and its gladness flee;
What is the nest when the birds have flown—
When the fruit is gathered, the harvest done?
What is the refuse to thee?

Thy days are passing one by one,
For thy life-work what shalt thou win?
For earth hast labored, for earth hast sown,
Its flowers are withered, its beauty gone,
And death is the wages of sin.

"Take Heed unto the Doctrine."—Paul.

BY C. G. CARRE.

Love is a word hackneyed and abused, until it has lost its meaning. To assert that we love God, is to the ear of an ungodly man but a weak expression of faith in heavenly character. But just tell him he is our God—our Divinity—our Religion, and the suggestion speaks to him of a relation uncircumscribed by the narrow confines of human thought or worldly calculation. He expects to find incorporated within our lives and deeds some counterpart of heavenly character—some tangible evidence of holiness made gloriously luminous by affiliation with the religion of the Son of God in the heart. That man never lived who wholly based the prerequisites to eternal life on the solution of a mathematical problem. Even the pagan idolater beholds in the hewn block or stone the indwelling presence of spiritual affinity; while the impious Pantheist sees no omnific hand save in the garniture of nature, whose apparent death and resurrection suggests to him a Deity,

"Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

But yet this spiritual worship of a supernatural power is literally germain with the true faith of Christ's mission. It is not because any prolific plan of human ingenuity suggests its adoptive policy, but an instinctive, inherent, natural belief,—the first gratuitous offering from the workings of the human heart that makes idol worship less sinful, and the adoration of Jesus Christ inexpressibly glorious. The most incredulous believer will not tax his ingenuity to show that the healing of the withered arm was a suggestion of the subject's chemical investigation; or that the raising up of the blind man with inspired vision originated from any previous practical experiment of the sightless beggar. There is no proof that the loathsome leper plunged beneath the flood of Siloam, until the lips of that divine Physician uttered the prescription, and his own immaculate hand imparted healing to its waves. Nothing but an instinctive credulity that He was "God manifest in the flesh," could extort from him the cry, "Jesus, thou Son of God, have mercy on me." That was the receiving of the kingdom as little children, without which spirit he cannot enter therein.

The fact is well established and made patent to every observing mind, that the height, length, depth and breadth of religion's greatest issue, is made a question of philosophical cause and effect. Some men can believe that Christ could make a dead man live,—with the flash of thought he could make the fair flesh o'er a wasted limb come like a garment, and not ask any questions; but the ability of a special divine agency to nullify the natural laws of digestion and assimilation, by resurrecting a decayed dead man—gathering together the absorbed elements of a once physical organism—is quite preposterous. Then come the objections. First, the metaphysical argument, then the psychological argu- [illegible] conformity with a divine theocracy, but is destructive to the success of a long established creed. Hence the dissension. Such a faith is homogeneous,—only with the grossest distrust, while it is a daring counterfeit of the faith of the prophet. "I have set the Lord always before me; because he is at my right hand, I shall not be moved."—Ps. 16: 8. Such objections are not only questionings of God's omnific power, but absolutely denying the compatibility of the resurrection of the dead commensurate with his dignity. God himself is only comprehensive through a revealed law. Why, then, subvert the memorial of his government by transmuting its precepts into logic, in order to learn him better? "Abraham believed God; and it was counted unto him for righteousness." In the event of the death of his son by his hand, he believed God was able to raise him from the dead. The patriarch did not believe the resurrection of his son included an aerial flight of individualized elements through the air to some unknown realm, there to await the development of the promise—"In Isaac shall thy seed be called." No. If the theological resurrection of the soul is a fact now, it was no less a fact when the unsheathed knife hung suspended over Isaac; and if through the occurrence of the sacrifice the translation should have been complete, it would have been very doubtful whether the Abrahamic lineage would have been successfully perpetuated in Isaac.

While such poetic fancies of unbelief detract from the gospel's healthful influence, it does not affect its single blessedness. While such a departure from the doctrine of Jesus is sure proof of the workings of a will antagonistic to his own, it does not for a moment add or take away the smallest atom that may eventually operate in the grand solution of a future life. A man may profess to know God, but in works deny him. He may have professed to have touched His sceptre of mercy and forbearance, and yet allow his gross opinions of God to overbalance every good intent. He may abstractly give speculative assent to Heaven's precepts, but practically care for none of those things.

This is not religion. What right have I to have or encourage the growth of an opinion springing from an ignorant knowledge of God's ways and means? No man, I care not who he is, can be a godly recipient of Heaven's favor, except he bends low at the feet of Christ, and in trembling accents, full of hope and pardon, cries—"Thy will, oh God, not mine be done." And he must feel it too!! He need not care to acquaint himself with the modus operandi of the successful accomplishment of His plans, or the expediency of their propriety; for their immutability precludes the necessity. When we can say, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? there is none on earth that I desire beside thee. My flesh and my heart faileth; but thou, oh God, art my portion forever";—when we can say this, we shall "take heed to the doctrine."

There is no commingling of service here—no interchange of loyalty—no parasitic policy subject to a transfer, recognized by the "Father of spirits." As wide as the unfathomable gulf of eternity is the junction line between sin and holiness. No cankered heart, fed by the festering morsel of iniquity, is a fit temple for the residence of the immaculate spirit of Jesus. As the bird that hastes into the subtle fowler's snare, and knows not, simple thing, 'tis for its life; so the tender fostering of evil in the heart, is the deadly Upas, whose withering breath blasts every struggling germ of spiritual worth.

But when preachers of the gospel defile the sanctuary of God by incorporating within its elements worldly expediencies;—when, instead of worshiping at the shrine of their ordination vows, by battling sin, and pointing the sinner home to God, they transpose the rites of his earthly tabernacle by the application of political economy for the edification of assemblies; it is no wonder that the spirit of Christ is like the touch of the Alpine glacier,—no wonder that God turns a deaf ear to prayer while sinners die; for the result of such presumption is as feeble as the worm that climbed Olympus to wreck the altar of liberty, or the struggling giant amid the throes of Etna. What matters it if faith, charity and love were words well lettered in his Sabbath creed? His life as plainly speaks, "Revenge!" The moral effect emanating from the sanctuary of God,—whether conducive to the common good or otherwise,—is no excuse for the minister of Christ who, by his consecration to God, has sworn to deal sincerely with the souls of men.

"To preach the gospel for the gospel's sake,
To hate and put away all pride,
All vanity, all earthly pomp,—
To seek all meekness, mercy, truth and grace."

God never has, nor never will bless with his approval such indirect and misconceived motives. The in-coming of his everlasting kingdom, replete with his personal presence, will find no cause, no word of welcome, no time-redeeming patience for his early advent in this direction. It matters not what is the substance of words uttered by ministerial lips, if God does not cry, "Grace, grace unto it!" They may deliver long essays upon the "Nation's Crisis," but that is not preaching "this gospel of the kingdom." They may tax their powers of logic to reconcile the shedding of my brother's blood with justice and mercy, holiness and love, until mountains turn into mole-hills, and "the heavens fall," but that is not visiting in cottage garb the beggar rotting, starving in his rags, or "hiding a multitude of sins." "Follow thou me," is the requisition. What for? To call "sinners to repentance," not to involve them in destruction's remorseless grave.

The religion of Jesus is a simple acquiescence to his commands. "Give me thine heart," is Heaven's cry, and thou shalt be my son. Feel that this relation is immortal, and no tainting virus will be found polluting that inner sanctuary where sits enthroned the spirit of Jesus. Feel this, and the noblest ideal of the human heart will be the salvation of the lost and our own induction into that kingdom, resting beneath the sweetly whispering zephyrs of peace. Feel this, and God will magnify his mercy. "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the face of the earth."—Rev. 3: 10.

This is the worship of God. This is the casting aside of imaginations for the more practical fact of living to his glory, and proving to the world that there are a few names left "who have not defiled their garments." To feel that God and heaven are a perpetual fact,—the only truth that is, is to scorn the world's scorn, despise its threatening wrath, and to lay upon the sacrificial altar of Christ's undying benevolence all our lusts and pride of life, and shelter within the pale of His truthful, trusting heart, all the hopes and sighs of the o'erburdened soul, until earth is made glorious by his presence, and our anticipations culminate in immortality.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER TWO.

In our last we arrived to the giving of the code of law to Moses on Sinai, to govern the Lord's nation. For he had separated them from all the families of earth as "a type" of the future and everlasting age. The land of Judea the Lord had set apart from all other, saying of it, "It is mine," in distinction from all other lands. Israel was a type of God's people who will gain final victory over sin and corruption. Moses was a type of Christ, as leader and law-giver. Many of the ceremonies and services of the code of law given to Moses were types of the sacrifice and redemption by Jesus Christ, and so explained in the New Testament.—Heb. 9. Therefore, as the Lord was establishing a nation a distinct people, to live by themselves, surrounded by wicked hosts, and that nation a typical people, and their leader a type of the great Head of the family of God, of the Almighty Conqueror of sin and sinners, the law-giver and executor,—it was evidently important for him to blend the civil and ecclesiastical principles of government in one system, as we find in the Mosaic system.

Moses was made the medium for the Lord to communicate his law to his people. He was chosen, and power given him, and afterwards to his successors, to not only administer and explain the law, but to enforce it; consequently the penalty must be executed upon offenders of God's law, by the constituted federal head of the people. Accordingly the several officers of a civil department were appointed, and their duties assigned them. When the Lord instructs them to enter Canaan and drive out the nations of rebels who had refused obedience to him, and who occupied land reserved for his chosen people, he shows by such an act what will be the work of Christ in clearing his dominion finally of the rebellious nations who will not obey him, and who occupy his inheritance.—Ps. 2; Dan. 2: 7; Rev. 19. When the Lord's host marched towards the land promised them, and Amelek defied the Lord and his people, and came out to fight them, then the Lord gave instructions to destroy them; giving a clear type of the work of Christ in his second coming, as described in Rev. 17: 14.

Such examples as this are often cited by ambitious men under the gospel dispensation, to justify their course and wishes in opposing and warring against those who violate their rules and disobey their laws. But this may be assuming too much. It claims their laws to be God's law, and themselves to be God's appointed agents to "execute judgment and justice in the earth"; while Christ has told us expressly that God has given him "authority" to do this.—John 5: 22, 27. We should remember Korah, Dathan and Abiram (Num. 16: 1–3), and let God's appointed officers and instrumentalities do their work, and cheerfully obey whatever part he assigns us.

The children of Israel were called out of Egypt and were defended, not by bow or spear, but by the miraculous power of God. Had they not sinned grievously in the wilderness, God's promise would have been good to them,—"I will go before you, and fight your battles for you." But this they could not claim, as they had been faithless and rebellious. Still they were to go in and occupy the Lord's land. Amelek came out and arrayed himself against the purpose of God—stood in the Lord's path and defied him. What now is to be done? They are to be destroyed—"utterly blotted out." Israel is now chosen as God's "rod." They must now fight their way against the opposing elements, for the Lord called them to execute his purpose. They are sure of victory when the Lord calls them to execute his purpose. The host of Israel enter the promised land, yet they do not obey the Lord's command to "drive out all" the rebels occupying it. Consequently they had more trouble, and war followed. But during the history of this people one thing direct to our purpose is clearly seen: the people having been taught correctly of the character of the true God, and the importance of being directed by him, with the many assurances that he communicated his will to them by his chosen mediums—angels, patriarchs, Urim, Thummin, prophets, etc.—they asked direction of the Lord about going to war. "Shall we go up to fight, or shall we not?" When they obeyed the voice of the Lord, they went safely; when they would not, but followed their own way, it went ill with them.

It is so with us. Our law-giver and leader has laid down the rules of his government, published his will, [illegible] on us to follow him, obey his commands, and assured us that no evil shall befall us. Shall we obey him? Will we consult his statutes and learn what we ought to do relative to fighting our enemies, to uniting with the governments of men, and being united with the men of the world? If so, our duty as christians will be seen and understood, and we shall find the divine protection promised by our Lord and Master.

In our next we shall speak of God's kingdom among Israel, and the kingdoms of men. I. C. WELLCOME.

An Exhortation.

BY S. S. BREWER.

DEARLY BELOVED BRN. AND SRS.:—Permit me to address a few words to you in connection with the exhortation of the apostle,—"Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God: but exhort one another daily." Daily and entire consecration to our heavenly Father and his cause, will inspire all such with the spirit of daily exhortation, and that will create constant watchfulness over our conduct, words and motives, and without which no person can enjoy the divine favor, the hallowing influence of the blessed Comforter, and breathe out the ejaculation with the man that God raised up,—"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God. When shall I come and appear before God?" If a mere theory be substituted, secret prayer and the family altar be neglected, and daily contention and dogmatic zeal indulged in, then, to such soul-chilling jargon, the tinkling of a cymbal and sounding brass would be comparative harmony in the ears of a meek disciple.

Secret prayer is as essential to our growth in grace, as food to our natural existence. Our ever living Head has set us the example: "And he withdrew himself into the wilderness and prayed." He went out and departed into a solitary place and prayed there. How forcibly the apostle enjoins this duty in the following language: "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." "Continue in prayer, and watch in the same with thanksgiving." "Pray without ceasing." It is declared in holy writ that Cornelius "prayed to God alway." Becoming meekness and dependence on God, which every one must possess in order to be accepted and blest, will constrain us to pray in secret, and such devotion will imbue the heart (if watchfulness come) with the spirit that David uttered in the outgushing emotions of his full heart when he exclaimed, "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul. I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue. If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me: but verily God hath heard me; he hath attended to the voice of my prayer. Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor his mercy from me." Such is the certain results of faith in, and prayer to, our Father in heaven. O! my dear brother and sister, test it; then there will be a powerful attraction to the closet, the prayer and conference meeting, and daily exhortation will be sweet and precious.

There is no concealing the mournful fact that there is a great spiritual dearth among us as a people, and it may be traced to the neglect of the above duty. Our Lord and Master prayed; the apostles prayed, and we are commanded to watch and pray: and as well might a master undertake to navigate the ocean without a rudder, as a puny human being undertake to stem the current of this world's opposition without the assisting grace of God; and that is only obtained by prayer and supplication. In my travels, I am sorry to say, in some instances family prayer I have reason to fear is neglected, when there is no preacher present to read the Bible and lead in prayer. O! ye professed lovers of our Lord and Master, neglect no longer this delightful and becoming part of worship. How, dearly beloved, can you inspire your children and households with that reverence due to the Holy One, and beget that confidence in your profession of love to him, unless you meekly show your dependence on him? And what is so well adapted to accomplish this very desirable object, as to take the holy Bible and read a part of its precious truth, and then plight your vow to God by thanking him for blessings by day and protection by night? O precious privilege and delightful duty! Your children will soon meet you at the judgment seat of Christ. Are you doing your duty to them? You can answer this solemn question. It must very soon be met at a bar from whence there will be no appeal. O! for the blood of Christ's sake, be wise in time. Another year, month, week or day may be too late. Take the vow of God upon you, and pay it to the merciful One while there is mercy. Hear an ancient prophet pray,—"Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name."

Lately, in conversing with some of my brethren in the ministry, the want of deep heart work, fervent, spiritual living was lamented. In his travels he thought he saw but very little. Said another devoted one, "I fear the Advent people are, as a body, deceived; they can talk life and death, and theorize in such a manner as to obtain the mastery in argument with their opponents; but oh! the lack of deep, practical godliness in their every day life." In view of the coming of Christ; in view of the above mournful consideration, when I would comfort myself against sorrow, my heart is faint within me. There is a necessity for and there must be a speedy turning to God with all the heart, in all such cases as above mentioned, or they must very soon be gathered with the tares and burned. The day of wrath and perdition of ungodly men is about to break with all its dread realities and eternal consequences upon us. My prayer is that the spirit of supplication may be poured out upon all, and that grace, mercy and peace may rest on the faithful in Christ Jesus everywhere. The world is now sleeping beside a volcano. Smoke, flames and lava occasionally emitted are the precursors of a speedy outpouring of wrath and ruin that will soon shake heaven, earth, sea and dry land. Dearly beloved, watch and pray, that you may escape all these things and stand before the Son of man. Thy Bro. in Christ waiting for redemption at his appearing.

The Fear of Death.

O what a privilege the christian enjoys, to be made free from the fear of death and the cold grave! What great slavery and bondage it is to fear death; the sting of death is sin. But thanks be to God who hath opened a fountain for sin where I can wash and be made clean. Glad am I, that Jesus has undertaken this work, of setting them at liberty who through the fear of death have been in bondage. Jesus once entered the enemy's camp; he was arrested, and he that hath the power of death was pleased to lead Jesus captive even unto a cruel death. What rejoicing in the ranks of the enemy! Jesus is dead! But this rejoicing is very short. Jesus is soon coming from the grave, as a mighty conqueror. Yes, he has broken the bands of death,—and, as he comes forth, takes the keys of death and the grave. He has them to-day. No one can wrest them from him. He can never lose them. His dear saints who have been slain by the enemy, and laid away, now sleep peacefully. They have had their last encounter with their enemy. They fell with their christian armor on. It was not rusty, but bright. They had fought a good fight, had finished their warfare, and a crown of glory awaits them in the future. My dear brethren, it is my privilege, and yours also, to advance boldly on, even into the dark valley of the shadow of death, fearing no evil. Our repose will be short; and in the morning we will mingle our voices with Paul, Peter, John, James,—yes, and good old Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and their great family, in giving honor and glory to Him who has redeemed us from the enemy's grasp. Then we shall hear from that mighty host the song of triumph, "O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

O my soul! can this be so? Are these things facts? Will the graves be opened, and the friends of Jesus be released from their prison house? Will my poor emaciated body, that has been marked as a victim, and that must go down in a few days, or weeks at most, to the cold grave, ever again live? Will the tongue again speak? Will my feet again take me among the friends of Jesus? Will my voice again be heard in praising God? Or, if I die, I live again? O! how full of light is God's holy word on this subject. Hear Paul:—"It is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory!" Then the dear saints will not always lie in the cold grave? O no! Jesus has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. Glad tidings! Then march forward, my soul, trusting in Jesus as your Savior, and Advocate, and very best friend. With Jesus at your side, banish all fear of the enemy. Jesus loves you now, he will not forsake you then; you can depend on his word, for it is Truth, and Life and Light.

Human Ghostology.—No. 3.

IV. GHOSTS APPEARING TO MEN. It is claimed, firstly, that the Bible speaks of the manifestation of disembodied human souls to men; and secondly, that they now frequently appear to men. If this is so, it is in opposition to that theory which claims that they are judged and sent to their reward at death. If the good are in heaven, and the bad are in hell, how happens it that they are skulking around among men?

First. We will look at their Bible proof. We are told that the soul of Samuel appeared to Saul,—1 Sam. 27: 8. Not a word is said in the whole transaction about Samuel's soul; but allowing for a moment that his soul is meant, what a great blunder it must have been in Saul to have said, "Bring me him UP whom I shall name unto thee." If he is calling for the soul of that Prophet, why not say, "bring him down, if good men go up to heaven at death? Perhaps he was not posted in modern theology! The witch, not stopping to lecture him upon his mistake in theology, falls into the same mistake, and inquires, "Whom shall I bring up?"—not down. Perhaps she too was unacquainted with modern orthodoxy! But shall we find this supposed soul of Samuel any better posted? Why, yes; just from heaven! But, hark! Samuel exclaims, "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me UP?" If this was Samuel's soul, it disproves the ascension of the souls of saints at death; thus, in attempting to set up one post in this superstructure, another more prominent one is knocked down. But nothing is here said about Samuel's ghost, or soul. We are informed that Job saw a human ghost: "Then a spirit passed before my face."—Job 4: 15. Ignoring the fact that there are two orders of spirits in existence, good and bad, called angels and devils, both of which were in existence before the creation of man, theologians will blunderingly jump at the conclusion that a human ghost is here spoken of. A spirit of man is not mentioned. We are also told that the ghost of Moses appeared upon the mount of transfiguration. In the first place, not a word is said about the soul of Moses, and in the second place, the language used by the disciples at the time clearly proves that they had no idea that Moses' soul was there; and certainly they should be allowed to know as much about the matter as modern theologians. Peter exclaimed, "Let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." Was Peter so foolish as to talk of building a tabernacle for a ghost? There would be some propriety in talking about building a tabernacle for a literal Jesus and Elijah; but if the disciples thought that only Moses' soul was there, what propriety in saying, let us build a tabernacle for that ghost? Do ghosts stand in need of tabernacles? Who will charge the apostle Peter with such folly as proposing to go into such a silly speculation as offering to go to building tabernacles for ghosts? A six year old boy, with common sense, would know better than to propose such a project. This simply proves that Peter had no idea but what Moses himself was as really there as Elijah—whether in vision or reality.

Secondly. The ghosts of modern times, that appear to men, always come clad in garments of some kind. For instance, an officer was slain in battle; his friends subsequently saw him, wearing the same military dress, and carrying the same sword. Were the dress and sword a reality, or were they seen through the aid of imagination? Yet they were as distinctly seen as the ghost that wore them. If the garments were seen by the aid of imagination why not the ghost? After the death of a certain person, his sister carefully laid away his clothes in a closet, to remember him by. Soon the ghost of the deceased appeared to the sister, wearing every article of that clothing, but upon immediate examination it was discovered that not an article of said clothing had been disturbed, the door of the closet having been locked. Did that ghost really wear that clothing? It was seen as plainly as the ghost was. If the clothing was seen by the imagination, so was the ghost. Some sea captains report having seen cats and dogs on their ships, after having been out from land for months, with no such animals on board. Ghosts of animals are as distinctly seen as those of men—by imagination.

Thoughts upon the Old Year.

Dying Old Year! yes, thou too art dying like other years. How brief the time since we with gladness welcomed thy birth! And while we mourned for the old, we rejoiced that thou the young year was born. We have witnessed thy smiles and tears, joys and sorrows, for a brief season. And can it be that thou art now departing ere we half realized thy existence? And yet we watch thee reclining upon thy couch of snow, eager to catch thy last silent gaze, for feebly, faintly burns thy life-taper, and thy frosty lips are sealed forever; they speak no more the language of the seasons. Loved ones, who with us beheld the dawn of thy first existence, are gone forever from our side; they are fallen upon the battle field; their names henceforth to be enrolled upon the page of fame and glory; or perchance, by the hand of slow disease, they have wasted before our eyes. And now with aching hearts we stand alone by thy dying couch,—"Old Year,"—while thou art breathing out thy short life. We know that we cannot recall thee, nor stay thy noiseless flight. In vain we ask a return of the past misimproved opportunities for usefulness, and for the performance of kind acts and of great and noble deeds. Alas! 'tis all in vain; we can never redeem thy brief past, with its many forgotten vows. Thou art gone forever, and thy shroud shall be our heart's memory, while thou art entombed within the sepulchre of the great, the irrecoverable past. Hark! we hear the low, hoarse wailing of the wintry winds, chanting thy funeral requiem through the leafless forests, as we whisper thou art dying.

Dying, Old Year, dying!
Yes, thou too art dying.
And thy form with other years [illegible]
Entombed within the past;
Gone, gone with other years
Are all thy pleasures, smiles and tears,
Too brief to last.

Dying, Old Year, dying!
We gaze and [illegible]
While we in sorrow [illegible]
Alas! that thou shouldst die.
View thy low, parting breath,
Fast growing cold in death,
Like other years.

The Gift of God.

"For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6:23.

In discoursing upon this important subject, so many points of real worth seem to present themselves for our candid consideration, that we have not space, time nor disposition, to tax the patience of the reader with unnecessary preliminary remarks. Life, in the strictest sense, is the animating principle of all living; an invaluable blessing to its possessor; not because of the universality of the same in the animal and vegetable kingdoms,—for then the prevalence of a thing would be proof of its goodness,—but, because God who "hath life in himself" (John 5: 26) saw that it would be just to create, and impart life also to his creatures. Not only to angels inhabiting a world almost immeasurably distant from the earth, but in wisdom, goodness and mercy "formed man (Adam, our first parent) of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."—Gen. 2: 7. He gave life also to the beasts of the field, fowls of the air, and fishes of the sea. Hence Jehovah is called the "God of the spirits (or breath) of all flesh."—Num. 16: 22. And the wonderful tenacity with which men and animals adhere to life under all circumstances, is additional proof of its intrinsic value.

To die, is not a result to be desired. On the contrary, it is greatly to be dreaded. Paul denominates it "the curse of the law" (Gal. 3: 13); and this will be seen by turning to Gen. 2: 17, where God commanded Adam, upon penalty of death, not to "eat of the tree of knowedge of good and evil," for, said God, "in (after) the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Adam disobeyed, and subjected himself and all his posterity to death, as expressed in Gen. 3: 19. There can be no question about the manner and kind of death threatened Adam, for the great Lawgiver passed sentence thus: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." And the subsequent portion of the chapter demonstrates the fact that Adam did not possess immortality, either before or after his transgression, prior to the execution of the sentence, which was temporal death, at the end of "nine hundred and thirty years."—Gen. 5: 5. Adam could have eaten also of the tree of life after his transgression, but for the integrity of God's word that he should "surely die," and the inevitable state of immortality in sin to all the human family. To prevent a state of things so dishonoring to God and disastrous to mankind, Adam was driven from the garden, and a flaming sword placed so as to "keep the way of the tree of life." And as a stream cannot naturally rise above its fountain, neither could Adam, by the laws of generation, transmit to his offspring that which he did not possess, viz., eternal life. A state of unconsciousness in the grave, was the only alternative for all the human race, through Adam's transgression. Means must have been devised sufficiently powerful to raise man to life again, or death would have been an eternal sleep. God laid a plan, and made promise of a deliverer. Some hoped faintly, while many "through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage."—Heb. 2: 15. That is, they could not see how man could ever quit the tomb, when once brought under the dominion of death. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."—Gal. 4: 4, 5. But before redemption could be made sure, Christ must pour out his blood (or life, for the blood "is the life of all flesh," Lev. 17: 11–14,) and die—be raised to life again; thus rendering powerless the penalty of the violated law, so as to make it possible for man to come up again from the "land of the enemy."—Jer. 31: 16.

As God required the first Adam to be obedient, so also the second Adam or Lord Jesus Christ. And if we would secure immortality and eternal life, the possession and enjoyment of which must be in a future state, we must of necessity obey the stipulations of the gospel, which "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. 1: 16. Then this life principle, this priceless blessing, will be given to the obedient "through Jesus Christ our Lord" in God's appointed time.

At this juncture in our discourse, a passage from Rom. 5: 12, will add weight to the distinction made in our text between sin and death. "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, so (the sentence of) death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." The apostle does not say that the wages of temporal sin is eternal sin, thereby confounding the penalty with the crime, but "the wages of sin is death." Reasoning from cause to effect, it is clear that all the sinner gets as a just compensation for a life spent in sin, is death, which Webster defines to be "the [illegible] of life."

"breath of life" into Adam, and he "became a living soul," or man. And respecting all the living, when God takes "away their breath, they die, and return to their dust." Ps. 104: 29. None "can keep alive his own soul."—Ps. 22: 29. Man's "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."—Ps. 115: 17. And "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou (man) goest."—Eccl. 9: 10. For "THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING."—Eccl. 9: 5. How sad the condition of all the human race! Mortality is stamped upon the face of all. Man cannot hope for "eternal life through" Adam, for he has forfeited all right to that inestimable blessing. Man is exposed to death, for he is only "mortal."—Job. 4: 17. God "is immortal" (1 Tim. 1: 17). God in mercy hath sent Jesus Christ to abolish death and bring (future) "life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1: 10), and commands all mankind to "seek for . . . immortality" "by patient continuance in well doing." And such as obey God, and secure a second life, (before the execution of the sentence of the law broken by Adam) by obedience to the gospel during the present life of probation, will "put on immortality" at the second coming of Christ, and resurrection of all who sleep in him.

Jesus Christ is "our Life." He said to the Jews, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have (eternal) life."—John 5: 40. "God hath (by promise, Titus 1: 2) given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life."—1 John 5: 11, 12. Our future "life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 3, 4.

Dear reader, with all this evidence before you, which is but a scrap of what God has said upon this subject, what conclusion will you come to? Do you feel secure out of Christ? Are you not in need of a "hope of eternal life," which you can yet have through the Lord Jesus? Say, dear friend, unreconciled to God, will you share the "gift of God" or no? A thousand voices proclaim from the four winds that the judgment is at hand! Signs are thickening all around us, and the last links in the many chains of prophecy are filling up. Jesus soon is coming. O! heed the last call of mercy; haste thee and get ready.

For the Crisis.

God's Faithfulness.

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children: how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?—Luke 11: 13.

The deep, unwavering love of a parent for a child is universally known. How forcible then these words of inspiration! We have the example of Bible teaching and the practice of eminent christians, to enforce the habit of combining the doctrines of the gospel, with our daily surroundings and experience. Let every manifestation of an earthly parent's love be associated in our minds with His love that "exceedeth knowledge,"—thus encouraging us to make known our requests in faith to our Heavenly Father, who giveth liberally" to his children, and "upbraideth not." Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, who "love his appearing," may we ever bear in mind the readiness of our Almighty Friend to answer prayer, and to fit our hearts to be "meet temples for the indwelling of his Holy Spirit," that we may not be ashamed before him at his coming.

Christian parents, many of your little ones have eagerly anticipated the season specially devoted to gifts of love; your own hearts can testify the "blessedness of giving," to enhance childhood's joy in a "Merry Christmas." Exclude not from the "good gifts" your hand so freely bestows, those means of grace, and that godly example that will train "the children God has given you" to be heirs of heaven.

Fond parents on their children dear
Earth's choicest gifts bestow,
A father's loving hand supplies
Each want his children know.

More ready is our heavenly Friend
To listen to our prayer,
And send his Holy Spirit down
On all who ask his care.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH."—A strong and vigorous work, in which the author, discussing first in turn the seven primitive churches founded in Asia Minor, finally settles upon the church of Thessalonica as arriving more nearly to perfection than all the others; and then proceeds to dwell at length upon the characteristics of this church, its faith, its hope, and above all its unity. He urges upon christians to become living personations of their faith; and he reprimands unsparingly both christians individually, and churches, whenever he finds it necessary.—Godey's Lady's Book.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 15, 1862.

The Tract Fund.

The Tract Fund enterprise looks very encouraging, and the amount of pledges shows the lovers of truth and of Jesus's coming are willing to sacrifice for the good of our fellow beings, that they too may rejoice in the same blessed hope, which is to us of more value than all the world beside. As we have before stated, there is probably no way by which we can do so much good with a little money as by scattering tracts. They bear their own expenses and preach while we are doing something else. These harmless little messengers are no respectors of persons, feel no sectarian prejudices, scorn no humble dwellings, and tremble not before the scoffing infidel, or the proud oppressor. They are just the visitors to send out in these last days to warn a guilty world. Come, brethren, let us do our best, and do it now, before the seventh trumpet sounds.

Send the dollars or the mites, as the Lord has prospered you. We have no salaried officers to eat up half you give, but every cent goes into the work and pays for some sixteen pages of valuable reading matter. We hope the children will take hold of this glorious work also. Instead of spending their money for candy, let them deny themselves, and help us in the great work of trying to save men from eternal destruction. Come, children, will you take hold with us in the good work? Let Sunday school scholars write and send us their gifts; let their teachers unite and do what they can, and every church that loves the second advent of Christ, take up a collection for this purpose. Let every preacher of the gospel of the kingdom do what he can to awaken an interest on the subject. In view of the shortness of time, and the extent of the work that should be done, every lover of Jesus should arouse all his latent energies for the coming and closing conflict.—G.

The "Turning Point."

It has been repeatedly prophesied that our nation had reached the "turning point" in the present war; but such have been proved false prophets; and even now, we see no sign that the "turning point" is yet reached. Every thing moves slowly and heavily. Thus far, but little has been accomplished beyond preparation for terrible slaughter. They seem to be fulfilling the prophecy of Joel, where he describes the state of things just before the "harvest," and says, "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men." The war spirit seems to have taken possession of all classes in society, state and church. People have become impatient of restraint. Each wishes to have his own way, and if he cannot, he is ready to lead a secession movement. They have forgotten that the Lord instructs us to "be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility," "in honor preferring one another." This spirit of independence, or want of submission one to another, is positive evidence of the low state of christianity, and a sign that we are "in the last days."—G.

Selfishness.

This is emphatically an age of "selfishness." If it were not so, we could not be justified in believing that we are "in the last days"; for Paul says, "This know also, that in the last days . . . men shall be lovers of their own selves," or selfish. This spirit of self-love is now so apparent, and extensive, that it attracts the attention of all careful observers, and has become the subject of many articles in the books and periodicals of the day. We clip the following from one of our exchanges:—

"In no period of this world's history has selfishness been so general as at the present time. Among the great sins that swell the catalogue of abounding iniquity, none are more blighting than this. It dries up all that makes man noble among his fellowmen; and with him who is under the control of this cruel power, Bible consecration is out of the question. When the plain, straight testimony of God's word is brought to bear upon the minds and hearts of the multitudes that surround us, God's faithful ministers often witness with sorrow, after weeks of labor in presenting the last solemn message of mercy, how few there are willing to obey. The reason is obvious. It may all be traced directly and indirectly to a selfish heart. The sacrifice is too great. Hundreds acknowledge the truth, but the Devil is ready to snatch away the good seed, and they submit to be led captive at his will, and pass on to their doom."

This sets forth the present state of things in its true light, only the picture comes short of the reality; but while time lasts, this evil propensity will be more fully developed. We are sometimes met with the objection, "Men have always been selfish." True, they have, to a certain extent; but in the last days, they are to be so much more so, that it will attract special attention and be an evidence that earth's night of sorrow is near its close. But if we have not yet come to the period where men are selfish enough to correspond with the commencement of the fulfillment of the prophecy, how will they act when we get near the close of the time to be characterized by [illegible]

"Preparation."

The above is the heading of an interesting English work, from an able writer, in which he takes the position that the end of this dispensation is at hand, and that Napoleon III. is to perform an important part in the closing scenes. He denominates the present state of Europe as "The calm before the storm." When referring to the movements of the year now closed, and the apparent delay in the execution of the vast programme, he says,

"The outbreak that has so long been contemplated is of so enormous a magnitude, both in violence and in extent, that, as the time approached, the very conspirators themselves stood aghast at their own work." Hence, as he says, 'MORE PREPARATION' was the word. All must be made sure—nothing left to chance—the plan fully digested—every agent in his place—every implement of war wrought to perfection—the subtle inventions of the most destructive brain carried out into form, before the great conspiracy unfolds. After forty years of peace—after a deluge of CANT—the whole extent of christendom is converted into a theatre of war. One half of mankind preparing to defend—the other to destroy. One half preparing to defend the venerable hypocrisies and villanies of the past, the other half to set up the blooming hypocrisies and villanies of the present . . . On both sides, preparations for war that are absolutely without a parallel. The ancient armies of Rome or Macedon were like 'two little flocks of kids,' compared with the armies of that Christendom which takes its name from the Prince of Peace. The whole ingenuity of Christian nations is exhausted upon implements, not of use but of destruction—in devising, not how to save, but how to kill . . . Such is the state of things. A calm before a storm—and the longer the calm, the more dreadful the storm. The winds are gathering up their sullen strength, and folding their dark wings, until the appointed hour shall come; and then they will cover the whole heavens with one instantaneous gloom.

Yet all these things are in the hand of God. One man seems to hold all the cords that now move the world; but that man himself is held by the hand of God . . . For this extraordinary crisis the Devil is now preparing with proportionate activity. He has long ago undermined the foundations of Divine truth by the introduction of "SPIRITUALIZING INTERPRETATION." The nominal church, glories in spiritualizing interpretation. . . . From whence but the father of lies has it come that the kingdom of heaven, which means the reign of Christ over the earth, is now understood to mean nothing more than the rude, imperfect, feeble christianity, which we find scattered here and there over the world? . . . By the practice of "spiritualizing," the edge of the sword has been thoroughly BLUNTED, so that it is now no longer capable of dealing with extraordinary antagonists, or with any but the ordinary difficulties of human life. . . . He has blunted the spirit by means of "Spiritualism." He has employed the FALSE metal to shatter the edge of the TRUE metal. Be assured of this—that when the hour of peril comes, the ministers of the gospel will be found bewildered and unarmed . . . The mischief is now irreparable, and the penalty of "spiritualizing" must be paid. . . .

As the enemy has invented "spiritualising," so he has also invented SPIRITUALISM, another preparation for the approaching future. . . . The world has rejected altogether the supernaturalism of the DEVIL . . . The devil, has, therefore, two distinct agencies by which he is preparing the world for his immediate and, perhaps, visible presence,—"spiritualizing" and "Spiritualism." By "spiritualizing" he has destroyed the power and beauty of scripture as far as they can be destroyed."

All can see that the foregoing is a graphic picture of christendom and the world at the present time. It is cheering to learn that the Lord has some men on both sides of the ocean who see the signs of the times and dare tell what they see. May the Lord multiply the number of such men to sound the alarm to a sleeping world and church.

Turkey.

The following from a Turkish paper is an item of interest, harmonizing with the fact that "the end of all things is at hand."—G.

"CONSTATINOPLE, Nov. 1, 1861.

To the Editors of the Independent:

DEAR SIRS:—The following is the translation of an article which appeared in a late number of the Armeno, Turkish paper, published here by the Armenians, (not Protestants.) I place it at your disposal.

'November 7th, 1861.

Four months ago the Tsherkess (or Tsherkassian) tribes had a meeting, where five of the chiefs (mentioned by name) spoke severally and personally, and expressed the following sentiments:

"Tsherkassian brethren, countrymen, and co-religionists!—In our present state there are but two things before us to choose between. The first alternative is this;—we must forget all the blood we have spilt these eighty years past; we must forsake our country; we must go far away from the land where we were born; we must give up our cherished country and home to be trampled down by Russian feet; we must cause our enemies to rejoice, and throw our friends into discouragement; in short, we must consent to slavery, and become prisoners to the most savage and oppressive empire.

The only remaining alternative is this, viz., we must put an end to the treason of that Sheikh, Emin Mehemet, (a Russian partisan) and reject his advice and exhortations; we must stand fast; we must unite firmly and indissolubly, and spend our whole strength, and spill our last drop of blood for our country. There is no other alternative. Now what will you choose?"

After much discussion and consultation, the assembly came unanimously to the following resolutions;

"To become slaves to Russia is impossible; therefore we must unite, and every man must devote his blood and all his property to the cause, and thereupon take his oath upon the Koran. A grand national council must be formed, in which five individuals shall sit from each tribe. Its decisions are final, and must be universally obeyed in the nation. Twelve courts of justice shall be organized, and have their sessions in the places to be assigned to them. In each one of them there shall be found two muftis, (doctors of the law,) one judge and one scribe, (or secretary.)"

The first decisions of the new grand council were as follows, viz:

1. The slave trade is utterly abolished and prohibited, and any person acting against this order shall be subjected to the severest punishment. 2. A regular soldiery shall be organized and trained. 3. All property shall be subjected to the tithe for the maintenance of the government and army, etc. 4. Magazine for corn and other public stores shall be built and supplied.

Every Tsherkess is bound to obey the new government. All foreigners (Russians excepted) who shall come to Tsherkassia shall be received with all possible courtesy."'

The article in question adds that Russia will be much discouraged by the new order of things.

It may be added that the Turks will be no less so. The slave trade from Africa is stopped. The Turks can no more take by force, or decoy away the children of their Christian subjects. Now the Tsherkassian trade is to stop also. What shall they do to keep up their numbers? Euphrates is drying up fast.

S."

A Worthy Example.

It is said of John Howard, the Philanthropist, that he never "neglected family prayer, even though there was but one, and that one his domestic, to join in it; always declaring that where he had a tent, God should have an altar." Such should be the resolution of every follower of Christ, who has a family. At the close of life, no one ever feels that the time spent around the family altar has been lost or vainly employed. How these devotional exercises sweeten our domestic joys, and assist us to bear the perplexing cares of the day! None but those who enjoy these scenes know their worth. A dearth seems to hang over that family which allows the family altar to be broken down. Reader, is this your case? Be entreated to erect the altar of prayer this night. Do not defer it any longer. Do it for the sake of your children, your companion, for your own good, peace here, and the glory to come. Be decided to shun the cross no more. Let whoever may come be present, read and pray with them, and you will find a rich reward. If time be limited, omit the breakfast rather than the praying.

If you can sing a song of praise, it adds much interest to the occasion. We can use our organs of speech for no better purposes. Come, brother, do not put off these duties any longer. Go into your closet and ask for aid, resolving in the strength of the Lord, to shrink from no cross till Jesus comes to award the crowns of glory. —G.

Materialism.

This word when used to signify the relation existing between the material and spiritual universe, or in other words, when used as indicating the belief that the spiritual and material are properly united in the economy of the Creator, is not only innocent in itself, but expresses one of the grandest truths taught in the Scriptures. In proof of this, we might instance the the resurrection of the dead, wherein body and spirit are united for the realization of what in the nature of things could never be enjoyed in any other state. The proof lies in the fact that God, who seeks the highest possible well-being of his children, has ordained this as the state in which they are to eternally enjoy the felicity of his kingdom. Proof may again be found in the promised "restitution of all things," when paradise shall be brought back again and made the glorious abode of glorified beings. It was in this sense that the word was used by the famed Dr. Chalmers, and other like good men.

But while the word may be used in the aforesaid manner, it is likewise capable of quite a different meaning, and, unfortunately is most popular in this latter sense; namely, to signify the belief that denies, or rather unbelief in, spiritual existence. Webster in defining it says, among other things, it is "the doctrine of materialists"; a materialist being "one who denies the existence of spiritual substances." In this sense, we protest against any relation to any persons who profess such a faith—or more properly want of faith: and our christian brethren do well that they do not under any circumstances allow themselves to be recognised by this term. When a professedly christian teacher says, "all the Holy Ghost there is he can put in his pocket," (as was said by one whose name is familiar to us, but which we do not care here to mention,) and, attempting to suit the action to the word, thrusts his Bible in his pocket, we do not hesitate to say we cannot with our present convictions acknowledge any fellowship with such a man; neither can we fellowship that kind of doctrine that has materialism for its legitimate end. Because a substance is impalpable and imponderable, it does not follow that it does not and cannot exist. Such is the fact with the aeriform fluids; and we might with as much propriety deny the existence of the Arctic pole, as to deny theirs. Many of them, like the Arctic pole, we never saw, and in the nature of things never can see either.

The expression, "immaterial substance," is said to be a contradiction of terms, and hence we must believe in materialism or nothing. But this is more plausible than weighty. To affirm there is no such thing as immaterial existence, or substance, is simply to be "wise above what is written." The expression in such an instance would be but a fit synonym of the word nothing; it would express nothing, and could mean nothing. In short, it would properly have no fit place in language. But to the contrary of this, it is always used, when intelligently employed, to signify something, the existence of which is beyond being demonstrated by our physical senses. To say there is nothing the existence of which cannot be thus demonstrated, is equivalent to denying the existence of God. It therefore follows that it is in this sense the word is used when applied to spiritual existence which is denied, and is meant to be denied, by the teachings of materialism. In no other sense can we understand the term Spirit, as commonly used in the Scriptures. But more anon.—M.

Obituary.

Several of our readers will be interested to learn of the death of Mrs. Elizabeth Jennings Atwood, who died of pulmonary consumption at Ottawa, Ill., on the 13th ult. Her brother, Dr. Jennings, writes us, "she had professed religion several years, and much of the time was an active and spiritual minded christian. . . . In the last trying hour she found the Savior precious, proving

'The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
He cannot, he will not, desert to his foes.'"

She requested her sister, who stood by her in the last moment, not to weep, for, she added, "I shall live again." The Dr. adds, "Lizzie had great peace of mind; was calm and happy in the hour of death." It was said "the expression on her countenance was almost angelic." The deceased was a relative of the writer.—M.

——"Your paper is a church to me," writes a brother from Minnesota. "Your paper is all the preaching I have," writes another from Maine, and another from New Hampshire. Carrying out this idea, we hope for "a good meeting" every time we meet; to this end we suggest that all do their duty, specially the preaching brethren, and further that there be no "going out of meeting."—M.

Sudden Deaths.

We do not often pay much attention to deaths reported in the public journals, they being so local in their character as to fail in interesting readers at a distance; but the following, which we cut from a Boston Journal, certainly impresses us with the uncertainty of life. And this, because it is a specimen in kind, of what is seen almost every day in a daily paper.

Considering the prevalence and fatality of Diphtheria, and other strange and new diseases of modern times, we feel there is room for charity at least, for the position of the Rev. Dr. Cumming, who believes that the seven plagues of the Apocalypse are now being poured into the air, and the effects seen in the multiplied diseases of these times. At all events, one thing is certain,—people loving life and desiring to secure it had better let drugged and death-dealing liquors alone.—M.

SUDDEN DEATHS.—Mrs. Webster, wife of John W. Webster of Wakefield, R. I., suddenly expired Saturday morning while in the act of making up her bed. She was apparently in good health, complaining only of a slight headache.

Mrs. Lydia Ingraham, aged 85 years, died suddenly at the house of Capt. Latham Cross, in New Bedford, on Saturday evening. She retired to bed, apparently in perfect health, about half-past nine o'clock, and an hour later was discovered to be dead.

Bernard Riley of Providence, was taken home in an intoxicated condition Friday evening, and died soon after.

A Slight Correction.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Whilst returning my heartfelt thanks for your kind notice of my whereabouts, I would beg to correct you on the nature of my establishment. It is not a "grocery and eating saloon," but a "Provision store," where I shall be as glad to see my friends as if the eatables were already cooked. JOHN F. COTTON.

ERRATUM.—Through an error of the proof reader I am made to say in the obituary column of last week's Crisis that I held a series of meetings in Hinesburgh, Vt., in September, "1861": it should be 1860. R. W.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH." —The book is well written, says many good things in a sharp, smart way, and when occasion offers displays a power of sarcasm that is quite entertaining.—Congregational Herald, Chicago.

"Why stand ye here all the day Idle?"

BRO. GRANT:—I suppose so many appeals have been made already for help in this Western field, that any thing further that may be said will be unavailing. Be that as it may, I feel like pressing this matter upon the attention of some who are doing comparatively nothing in the East. The opportunities of sounding out the word of the Lord are numberless. School-houses scattered all over the country, and good attentive congregations to fill them. Our sentiments are new in most places, and a desire to hear is always manifested wherever I go. All that is necessary to secure respect and attention is, to have respect for ourselves and our faith, and firmness in defending the truth. I cannot fill half the appointments that are given out by friends. As to calls for preaching, I do not pretend to answer scores of them. There is one thing certain, I cannot perform all this work, and somebody will be responsible if it is not done. Brethren need not expect to get rich, but they will not be permitted to want. Who has sufficient love for Christ and his cause to be willing to forsake comfortable homes and kind friends, and the conveniences of the East, and come here and fight for the Lord? Brethren, the Lord is coming, and thousands here will not be warned. My address is Vandalia, Fayette Co., Illinois.

Thoughts on the Times.

This Christmas morn is one of deep thought, with which I see and hear so much that is unlike the humble religion of Christ, that my mind goes back to nearly sixty years since, and so many thoughts crowd my mind, I want to write some of them. In my youthful days I was brought to feel the need of saving grace to save me from the ways of sin, and from the wrath to come; and if I needed it then, so I do now, to save me from the evils that are in the world. When I embraced religion, and God forgave my sins, it was the purpose of my heart to walk in the fear of the Lord all the day long and keep his commandments, that I might have a right to the tree of life. For awhile the peace of God ruled in my heart; and I supposed that every one, who professed religion, felt the same. I thought a preacher of the gospel was a very holy man. I supposed they would walk in the good way as they preached to others, and that every christian, who might happen to get out of the way, would at once confess his sins and get back into the good way again. But alas! I found that some had done wrong and were trying to cover their sins instead of confessing them; although they did nothing very bad, they were losing the peace of God out of their heart, and brotherly love began to grow cold. O what a trial I thought that was! but how small that, in comparison to what I have known since. I have known professed christians violate the commands of God, and do things that they would on the Sabbath day preach to others to be wrong. That made me lose confidence in preachers.

I have also known church members to lie, and deceive their fellow creatures, and yet hold regular standing in the church. That caused me to think but little of churches; or at least it gave me to see that the nominal churches were not what they should be. I looked at such things until I was like a Peter looking at the waves; and if the good Lord had not saved me, I should have sunk in the waters. At length I saw a good people trying to do something in the missionary, temperance, and abolition cause. I then hoped for better days; but it was only for a short time that they were willing the Lord alone should lead them; they must get incorporated; the political world must take hold and help them; and where are they now?

About twenty years ago, a class of people started on Bible truth,—seemed anxious to purify themselves by obeying the truth, and getting ready to meet the Lord. I felt well then. I saw they had light on Bible truth, and notwithstanding the mistakes they made, I am to-day indebted to them for the light that I received on the prophetic word. I soon found new trials in those times, but my trials have done me good. I have learned that it is better to trust in God, than to put confidence in princes. I now try to read the Bible for myself, asking God to give me the Spirit by which I can understand it: and I find God's word is not like the lying newspapers of our day; nor like the false telegraphic dispatches we have; but his word is truth, and I desire to be sanctified through it. The perilous times thicken around us; my brethren all feel and see this.

A short time since, I left my old Granite State and came to this city. I saw many people here, yet I saw but a few who appear to fear God and work righteousness; but in the crowded streets are seen the boasting politician, the profane officer, the reckless soldier; and is not the professed minister of the gospel here, eating and drinking with the drunken?

Visit with me the Insane Asylum. Is it the maniac, the insane drunkard, the deranged father, the [illegible] mother, etc., etc. Go a little further, and we see the Capitol, the treasury building, and many other magnificent buildings, and not one of them completed. Men are at work on them, altering and repairing; although built of marble, decay is written on them all. They are not like the building that is fitly framed, having a chief corner stone, which will go together without the sound of an axe or hammer. I have seen many speeches and messages written, but have not seen one that has a message from God to the people. When I hear the Senator utter his well a rranged speech, and call on God to sanction what he has said; and before he gets to his place of abode, take the name of God in vain, I think, can there out of the same mouth proceed blessings and cursings? Truly, my brethren, the present state of things causes me to say,

"O come, Lord Jesus, quickly come,
Regenerate this sphere,
And bring back Eden as it was
With holy atmosphere."

Washington, D. C. P. P. CLAY.

For the Crisis.

May I not tell it?

Had I been upon a dying bed, and a dear friend had come and raised me up, might I not tell it? Had I been lost in the woods, and given me up to die, and one had found me and piloted me out to home and friends, might I not tell it? Were I childless, and one had given me blooming sons and daughters, might I not tell it?—then may I tell what such a Friend (Jesus) hath done for us here?

Two comely daughters and a son, with two middle-aged pilgrims, have been waited upon through the "birth of water" into the "newness of life," brought to light in God's holy word; others are in embryo, struggling for life. Weary pilgrims have been revived; the word of God, which is sweeter than honey in the honey-comb, has been served to us so purely that its sweetness never seemed so sweet. Youthful pilgrims have been encouraged to come up and help bear the ark of God, to the great relief of the fainting. A "candle-stick" has been placed here in which may "the candle of the Lord" ever burn until its light shall shine all over these sandy plains and barren wastes, and point out every wandering sheep; likewise a fresh supply of little tapers lit at God's candle, which have been so blessed here in leading the befogged children to the only source of light—the word of God. And how they have rejoiced in the light when they have found it, and praised the taper that led them to it!

The servant whom God sent here to do this work for him was the one he sent before "from far at his own charges" (equally cheap now) "whose praise" through grace "is in all the churches"—Bro. H. L. Hastings. He is one of those liberal souls who are made fat; who devise liberal things, and by liberal things he stands. May all God's "kings and priests" attain this high position through grace. We entertained the friends without meat, tea or coffee, and "were not ashamed." Thank God! So much for self-denial in God's servants. "Go thou and do likewise." Pray for us, fellow pilgrims. In humble gratitude, as ever, yours, E. S. WILLARD.

Hammonton, Atlantic Co., N. J., Dec. 9th, 1861.

P. S. Our Bro. arrived on Saturday morning and left on Monday morning. We wish now, as "the church of God" in Hammonton, "to follow the depressed valley route" across the "desert" marked out by Jesus and his tearful followers, so beautifully pencilled in the following from Eld. S. A. Chaplin:—

"I have been reflecting a little on our relationships to the 'Household of Faith,' and thought how pleasant it would be to live in a community where all are servers of Jesus—where the truth is regarded as more precious than jewels, and in a clime where we all could enjoy uninterrupted health; but alas! we might as well hunt for the individual who never wept, as for such a society and such a place in this sin-ruined world. Instead of surroundings so desirable, One who was himself 'a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief' has told us, 'in the world ye shall have tribulation;' and the apostles in their reconnoissance and survey of the road leading to the 'kingdom of God,' have only found a 'narrow way' leading 'through much tribulation' as the only possible route, and they have located accordingly. An 'innumerable multitude' of weeping pilgrims have found the 'path,' and have followed the footsteps of a sorrowing One who carried a heavy cross and experienced bitter experiences as he traversed the straitened track. The 'horrible desert of this world' is threaded with this only way to the 'incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance.' Men have tried, and tried, and tried to locate a more pleasant pathway to God's kingdom,' but the 'desert' is so wide, and the 'death river' on its boundary so long, and the bleak coast of perdition (the intermediate state)

'Over the river,' so nearly surrounds
'The vale of tears,'

that it is finally conceded by all, sooner or later, that the only chance is to follow the depressed valley route to where Jesus and his tearful followers have crossed. I self that 'the time is short,' that the 'midnight' sables hang over the difficult last miles, and that the 'Lamp' alone can guide.

God has cast the lot of a few travelers here in this part of the desert. The snow of many winters is on the heads of some that with trembling sometimes 'look up,' and sometimes down at the turbid billows that undermine their feeble footsteps, and that have just closed in black ripples over where companion pilgrims went down. Some that are younger feel faint and weary, and would fain slumber a short nap among the 'serpents of burning bites' that infest the desert. With great fear and trembling for myself as I catch the sound of the billows, I feel for my poor pilgrim friends, and would point them to the only 'pass' through the coasts of perdition, 'beyond the flood.'—the resurrection to life, through which a crucified Lamb first passed.

Some may wonder why we are not more interested in some thorn and brier patch of this desert. But our eyes have seen a glimpse of a 'delightsome land,' through the vista, where the 'life stream' and 'life trees' are. I want to meet the 'little troop of pilgrims,' that breathe the malaria of this clime, there. And if by any feeble efforts of mine they can be assisted, and Jesus accept me, I should esteem the loss of a few days as 'infinite grace.'"

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Springfield, Mass., Dec. 31st, 1861, of congestion of the lungs, Widow SUSANNAH MUNGER, aged 77 years and 8 months.

She was a great sufferer, and was twenty-two hours dying. A large circle of friends were present to witness her sufferings. I was in Connecticut holding meetings when the news came of the sudden sickness of my mother, which made it duty for me to leave the meetings and go home to see her die. Being her oldest child, she was very anxious to see me before she died. I found her ready and willing to go. She had given orders concerning her few things and her funeral services with as much composure as if she was going on a journey. It was a great relief to us, that she had her senses till the last, anp was fully prepared. Her hope was in the resurrection. The last few hours of her life were most distressing. It was hard to stand and see a mother in the agonies of death so many hours, but it was harder to be called upon to pray for death to be let loose on its victim, and end the suffering. But this was insisted upon by her repeatedly, and we had to comply with the request of a dying mother, as crossing and hard as it was. Prayer was offered about one minute, the pain ceased, and death struck his victim. In less than two minutes she gasped and fell asleep, to the joy of all present that had heard her death groans for twenty-two hours. In this case, death was a relief, so much so, that we had no cause for weeping. God seemed to bring us up to that point for some wise purpose, not yet revealed. We spent the new year's day in depositing our last parent in the bosom of the earth, that will soon be renewed, and then our mother, together with our father, who died last year, will live again. This is our hope. This was their hope. And this is the only christian hope that has a Bible foundation.

The funeral service was attended in the Methodist church, in compliance with her request, and the sermon was preached by Bro Peck, the Methodist preacher, to a large number of mourners and friends. His comforting word was on the certainty of a resurrection of the same body, which he made clear from Scripture proof. We were all satisfied with the discourse, and that we must strive to live the life of the righteous, if we die their death. In so doing, we shall have the resurrection of the righteous which is unto eternal life when Christ comes to give life from the dead. HIRAM MUNGER.

Died, in Pittsfield, N. H., Dec. 27th, 1861, SALLY J. DAVIS, in the 74th year of her age.

She was born in Pittsfield, and at the age of eighteen was converted, and by her own natural brother, Eld. S. B Dyer, was baptized and united with the F. W. Baptist church in Nottingham. She was indeed a "mother in Israel" and a lover of the truth, and received much comfort in the hope of the Savior's second advent, and of life and immortality through him "at the resurrection of the just." For about thirty years she maintained family devotions, and prayed with her husband and children, before her husband was converted.

She was the mother of thirteen children, twelve of whom, together with five sons-in-law and four daughters-in-law, were present at her funeral, making in all twenty-one children. All of them profess the religion of Christ except William, her youngest child. O may that mother's prayers be answered, and she be permitted to meet all her dear children in the "everlasting kingdom."

A discourse was delivered by the writer, founded upon 1 Thess. 4: 18,—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Died, in Portland, Me., of consumption, Dec. 28th, 1861, JOHN DRESSER, aged 49.

Bro. Dresser was converted to God in 1842, and became established in the faith of the coming of Jesus, and the everlasting kingdom soon to be realized. He has since advanced step by step, as light has increased, until he believed that we had come to the fulfillment of Joel's prophecy, 3: 19–14. He believed God's everlasting kingdom was soon to be established on the ruins of these tottering kingdoms, when the saints will take the kingdom and possess it forever. He looked for immortality through Jesus. He believed he ——"Should sleep beneath the ground

Till the last joyful trump shall sound;
Then burst the grave in sweet surprise,
And in the Savior's image rise."

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the steamship Canada, we have European news from Liverpool to the 28th ult., and Queenstown the 29th.

When the Canada left Liverpool a state of suspense prevailed, and the greatest anxiety was felt relative to the advices per the Africa, then due, in response to those from England by the Europa.

ARMY AND NAVY PREPARATIONS OF ENGLAND.—The Army and Navy Gazette says: Another battalion of infantry sailed for Canada on Saturday last, and three more will sail in the course of the present week. Until hostilities are actually declared no further body of troops are likely to be placed under orders. In that event the authorities might naturally look to the fine regiments now in the Mediterranean garrisons, the Ninth, Twenty-second, Twenty-fifth, and One Hundredth, which could be sent across the Atlantic without delay from Gibraltar. The infantry regiments at home are to be strengthened.

Recruiting for the army is now going on in earnest.

The Fourth company of Royal Engineers are under orders to embark for Canada. The force of Royal Engineers in British North America will consist of upwards of 700 men, and will include the Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Fifteenth, Eighteenth and Thirty-fourth companies.

The government having decided on forming a reserve of troops at Bermuda, for operations in North America, the Fifth company of Royal Engineers are to hold themselves in readiness to embark at an hour's notice.

In a letter written by the command of the Queen, it is stated that the only consolation she can hope to find in the rest of her life, under her sad and hopeless bereavement, is to endeavor to carry out the wishes and intentions of her beloved husband.

AUSTRIA.

It was rumored that a considerable reduction of the Austrian army was contemplated.

BERLIN, Dec. 29. The government of Prussia has addressed a despatch to the Minister of Prussia, at Washington, in reference to the arrest of Messrs. Mason and Slidell, condemning the proceedings of the commander of the San Jacinto.

ITALY.

There was a vague rumor that an attempt had been made to assassinate General Guyon at Rome, and that one of his aids had received two poinard wounds.

It was reported that the French Ambassador to Rome had proposed to the ex-King of Naples to take up his residence in France.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT.—The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia North American says

"According to the best sources of information open to me, I am induced to believe that the imperial government urges on rather than seeks to moderate or impede the action of the British government, and that a solution of the present difficulty, which should leave matters in statu quo and the ports of the South still blockaded and about to be hermetically sealed, would be, in spite of the tone of M. Thouvenal, received here with something of a feeling of disappointment. I do not pretend to state this absolutely, but such is the impression left upon my own mind from what I hear and see around me in a very wide and varied circle of society."

Austria has notified our Government that her opinion of the Trent affair is, that it was against recognized law on such matters, and it is thought that all the European powers will apprise us of what we have already admitted—that we were not justified in seizing Mason and Slidell in the manner they were taken.

The Emperor of the French has lent the British government 2000 pairs of snow boots for the use of the troops which are now crossing the Atlantic on their way to Canada—"than which (says the Liverpool paper) nothing could be more considerate or friendly.

CHANGE IN THE ENGLISH FEELING.—Willmer & Smith's (Liverpool) European Times says that "a very sudden and gratifying change has come over the public mind during the last fortnight relative to the misunderstanding which has arisen between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States." This change, it says, is due to the sobering effect of Prince Albert's death, to the President's message, and M. Thouvenel's dispatch.

The belligerent course of the Times is rebuked by many of the leading presses of the kingdom. A deputation from three large religious bodies, in favor of peace, had been sent to Lord Palmerston, and memorials to the same effect had been transmitted to him from manufacturing towns. Many sermons, deprecating war, had also been preached.

THE INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH PROJECT.—Mr P. McD. Collins, who is now at Washington, makes a very favorable report concerning the progress of the trans-mundane electric telegraph project, which he has done so much to promote. The Baltimore Sun says

"By advices from the Russian government he learns that the Kasone-Amoor telegraphic line is in progress of rapid completion. It will be completed to Omsk, 2500 miles east of St. Petersburg, early next spring. The next section will be completed to Inkaatah, 1500 miles further, in the course of the year. Next spring Col Romanoff will commence, under the direction of the Governor of East Siberia, a line of telegraph from the mouth of the Amoor to Inkhowth, by way of the river bank. Thus from both extremes of the line the work is to be prosecuted.

On the American continent, the line of telegraph now in operation between the Atlantic and the Pacific will be extended to Portland, in Oregon, by the next summer. Thence it will be prosecuted along the coast to Sitka, and, and, by way of Behring's straits, to the mouth of the Amoor. Upon the whole route there are but forty miles of submarine telegraph. Upon its completion all the telegraph lines in the world will be united. Branches of the Kasone-Amoor line will be extended to Japan, India and China."

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, Jan. 7th. The World states that Gen. McClellan, for the first time in several weeks, appeared out of doors to-day, being able to ride in his carriage. He has nearly recovered his health.

In connection with the rumors respecting the leakage of news from Washington to the rebels, it is stated that the daughter of a high official is one of the guilty parties.

It is now understood from the movements of the rebels, that they are aware of the destination of Burnside's fleet. The story goes that it was talked of in the family of the official alluded to and by his daughter was communicated to her lover who is a rebel.

The young lady left town recently and has not yet returned. Her father, it is understood, will shortly leave for Europe for the benefit of his health.

The destination of Burnside's fleet has been changed because of the knowledge acquired of the point at which it was aimed.

The lady criminated by holding treasonable correspondence with the enemy, is the daughter of a neighbor of Gen. Thomas and not a member of his family, nor in any way connected with him.

New York, Jan. 11. The World's Washington dispatch says there is immense activity in every military department and although a movement on the Potomac is not expected immediately, events may make a march on Centreville a military necessity.

The Time's Washington's dispatch says: "The bankers of New York, Boston and Philadelphia arrived here this (Friday) morning. The New York bankers were before the Committee of Ways and Means in the morning, and presented a new scheme for managing the finances of the Government and country. They desire to have the bureau located in New York instead of Washington, and to be managed by Commissioners appointed by the President.

The Herald's Washington dispatch contains the following: "Gen. McClellan did not go out to-day on account of the very damp weather. He transacted considerable business at his private residence, however, and is as active in mind as ever, but is not yet sufficiently strong, physically, to attempt to encounter the ardous duties he formerly assumed. He regrets the unkind and unnecessary clamor of the day, for a forward movement as contrary to sound policy and good sense, and feels a self-confidence that in good time, not far off, the honest people will be satisfied if the politicians are not.

Washington, Jan. 13. Mr. Cameron has resigned the office of Secretary of War. Mr. Stanton has been appointed as his successor. Every one here is pleased with his appointment, and also with the announcement that Hon. Cassius M. Clay, Minister to Russia, is to return home and take a General's commission in the army.

Mr. Cameron has been appointed to succeed Mr. Clay at St. Petersburg, and his ample fortune will enable him to maintain the dignity of the position in a creditable manner.

Wheeling, Jan. 8th. A special dispatch to the Intelligencer, from Cumberland, says that a detachment of Gen. Kelley's forces, commanded by Col. Dunning, of the Fifth Ohio regiment, left Romney last night at twelve o'clock, and attacked the rebels, 2,000 strong, at Blue's Gap, east of Romney, at daylight this morning. The rebels were completely routed, with the loss of fifteen killed, two pieces of cannon, their wagons, etc., with twenty prisoners, including one commissioned officer. Our loss is none. It is rumored here this afternoon that the rebels are in full retreat from Hancock.

SAFETY OF MASON AND SLIDELL.—Speculations are rife regarding the safety of these notorieties, who, as will be recollected, left Provincetown on the 1st instant, in the height of a hurricane. The general impression was that the Rinaldo, the English steamer which conveyed them away, was to leave them at Halifax. The New York World says:

"The Rinaldo may have steered for St. Thomas on leaving Cape Cod, but such a course would seem uncalled for and singular. She sailed, as the British consul in this city states, under sealed orders, which Captain Hewitt, her commander, was to open after leaving port. The Rinaldo had a heavy armament of guns, which would naturally tend to disable the vessel in a storm. They were also mounted on the main deck, a fact which would still further tend to incapacitate the vessel for weathering a severe storm. Two of her cannon weighed over 10,000 pounds each, and the remaining fifteen were all 32-pounders. The Rinaldo is, or was, a screw steamer, with engines of 200 horse power, manned by two hundred hands. If the steamer took the St. Thomas route for England, and arrived safely at the former port, we shall probably not hear of the fact until ten or twelve days longer."

WHAT A SOUTHERN UNIONIST SAYS.—A letter to the Cincinnati Gazette, written from Nelson's division in Kentucky, contains this passage:

"I recently had the pleasure of meeting a Union man, or refugee, from Nashville. He is a thorough Southerner in all things, but unswerving in his devotion to the Union. 'You Northern men,' said he, 'have fallen into a fatal error. You hope to conquer the insurgents by a conciliatory course. You are simply sacrificing the lives and property of your Southern friends. The South will scruple at no course to accomplish their end. Meet them with their own weapons—fire and sword—and awe them into obedience to the laws. Not one of them disavows the fact that this is a rebellion instituted for the purpose of overthrowing our government. For the accomplishment of that end they will pour out their blood like water. Let them but succeed and their arrogance will know no bounds. The veriest serf of Europe might then pity you Northern men. Your moderation but prolongs the struggle and lessens your chances of success.'"

New York, Jan. 13. The Times' Washington dispatch says that Adjutant General Finnell of Kentucky is in Washington. His news is cheering. Gen. Buell is universally popular, and it is believed invincible in arms. Gen. Finnell anticipates a great battle this week, and the advance of Gen. Buell's entire army into Tennessee within thirty days. Arms and clothing are to be sent along to equip the thousands of loyal Tennesseeans who are known to be ready to join the army as soon as it reaches the State.

The Post says a letter has been received here which states that a respectable person made a prisoner in Elsto river, says that a party is on foot in favor of settling the question at issue by Commissioners, and that both Davis and Stephens are in favor of it, but the Rhett party frowned it down.

The capture of Port Royal and the fire at Charleston were stunning blows to the people of South Carolina and Georgia.

DEATH OF COL. SAM COLT OF HARTFORD.—Col. Colt, the celebrated revolving arms manufacturer, died at his residence in Hartford, Conn., Friday the 10th, at 9 o'clock A. M., of paralysis of the brain. His health has been very precarious for over a year. Few men have had a more eventful history, or have played the game of life with greater success than he. He has been noted for an energy which has seldom had its parallel, and which bore him over numerous and, to most men, insuperable obstacles, from indigence to the possession of a fortune which has been estimated anywhere between five and ten millions of dollars. It is but a few years, comparatively, since he commenced the manufacture of his revolving pistols with a capital not exceeding $5000. He had at the time of his death over a million of dollars invested in the buildings and machinery forming his establishment at Hartford, and his business during the past year was immense. Boston Journal.

For the Crisis.
The Grave's Side.

Back from the grave's side, where the loved are laid,
'Mid clustering flowers and ever-sweeping shade,
Rises the mother's sad and plaintive moan,
Telling her sorrow for the loved one gone.

Fair was that face that now in dust is laid,
Lovely the smiles that in bright dimples played;
Sweet was the care and burden that I bore,
Dark was the hour when grief my heart's chords tore.

Weary are days, unbroken by that smile;
Lonely the hours that care does not beguile;
Sadly I feel my little hindrance gone,
Lonely, I now may undisturbed work on.

Dreary my nights, all silent as the tomb,
Thicker the darkness, nothing breaks its gloom;
Waking, I find my little loved one gone,—
Tears wet my pillow, for I am all alone.

Others look kindly, and with common-place
Strive from my mem'ry mournful thoughts to chase;
But on my heart their freezing comforts chill,
Words are too poor this aching void to fill.

O for one glance at that bright sunny face,
O for one greeting, one long, dear embrace;
O for that meeting which my heart can fill,
O for that gentle voice, I seem to hear it still.

Ah, all is dark, and desolate and drear,
Sadly and wearily I weep and wander here;
O for a day to lighten these dim eyes,
O for some comfort, new-brought from the skies.

Peace! weeping one, Christ liveth, thou and thine
With him shall live, and in his glory shine;
This withered bud, unfolding then shall bloom,
Bright with heaven's radiance, [illegible]

Providence, R. I., Aug. 28th, '61.

For the Crisis.
A Glance at our World—No. 3.

Again, go to the hospitals designed for the unfortunate. There are, almost without exception, miserable creatures stricken by the providence of God and afflicted, sick with every disease in existence, injured by every cause conceivable,—bruised and broken by falls, jammed between stones and large timbers, dug from the earth scarcely alive, cut and stabbed with knives, wounded with pistols, and beaten by their fellow men, or disfigured with excrescences and painful protuberances on various parts of the body. Visit the public houses for the poor, and you find an assemblage of the aged and infirm, the crippled and deformed, the ignorant and vicious; and commonly great complainers, perhaps not without a cause, for often this charge is given to the lowest bidder, and he designs to make money out of the affair. Any body can infer how it may be with these poor creatures, their latter days made up of the most bitter repinings. Go with me to the Asylum for the Insane, and you find another class of sufferers, of various ages and both sexes. Fathers are there raving maniacs, who, if they had cast their care on Him who is able under all earthly sorrow to console, they might have exclaimed, "The Lord giveth and taketh away, still blessed be his name." And so of the mother. If she had had confidence in God, she might have brought up her children and blessed her own family, and been saved in the kingdom of heaven. Various causes have operated in bringing them there, some, doubtless, purely unfortunate.

Oh! what a gloomy panorama does our present world present. If a ray of sunshine flits for a moment on our pathway, it is soon followed by a dark, portentous shadow. The past is forever gone. The dim future, big with events, comes pressing on, bearing down before its mighty force nations, dynasties and thrones. We read with interest of a dreadful battle-field, and shrink from its reality; yet to-morrow it is gone. We listen unmoved at a steamboat disaster, when two or three hundred are swallowed up in the mighty deep. Men at the present time seem to be reckless of life, and will rush into the deadly fray with horrid oaths. This world may fitly be christened a world of dreams. The bloody fields of Marathon and Waterloo may win a name in story and become as household words, but Calvary and Sinai are unknown; and the unutterable agony of Christ in the garden of Gethsemane is void of interest.

Can large monopolies remove the ills of existing society? Can they elevate the degraded, relieve the poor, or promote equality? If they can, they must go out of their way to do it; it is not natural work for them; they are heaping up riches for the last day; they create great machines for collecting money and exclusive interest; they form great magnets that draw money from every source, and, eventually, would have every thing poor around them and servilely dependent upon them for bread. Monopolies and financiers are men of policy. First, they must get rich. Second, every thing they own must go up in the market; stocks, merchandise, lands, houses and rents. Jobbing, ingenious mercantile tricks, and the like, are the means they employ, and all the profit of it accrues to themselves; and the same proportion in a reversed order is the lot of all the poor operatives. The following I copy from the Social Reform, and as a true description of the present state of society, is well worthy of a perusal by every candid individual.

"While the few rich are becoming more and more rich, the unnumbered many are becoming poorer. Our modern world of industry is a veritable hell, where disorder, discord and wretchedness reign, and in which the most cruel fables of the old mythology are more than realized. The masses, naked and destitute, yet surrounded by prodigality of wealth, seeing on all sides heaps of gold which by a [illegible] cannot reach; stunned [illegible] of gilded equipage, or dazzled by the blandishments of court attire, their appetites excited by the magnificence of heaped-up luxuries of every climate and all arts; provoked by all that can gratify desire, yet unable to touch one jot or tittle of it, offer a terrible exemplification of Tantalus tormented by an eternal hunger and thirst after fruits and waters, always within his reach, yet perpetually eluding his grasp. . . . . Look you again to that not far distant alley, where some ten distressed, destitute and depraved families are nestled under the same rickety and tumbling roof. No fire is there to warm them, no clothes to cover their bodies. A pool of filth sends up its nauseousness, perhaps in the very midst of their dwelling; the rain and keen hail fall on their almost defenceless heads; the pestilence is forever hovering over their door-posts; their minds are blacker than night with the black mists of ignorance, and their hearts are torn with fierce lusts and passions; the bright sunlight blotted from the firmament, and life itself turned into a protracted and bitter curse."

Look you at this, we say, and think that unless something is done better than what we now see, it will grow worse! Oh heavens, it is an oppressive, a heart-rending thought! Is unbelief in divine inspiration a remedy? Unbelief will make a man reckless, and in some instances may prompt him to make the most of his life by carefully observing nature's laws and so guard against a great many evils. But can it put off or bribe death? or effectually prevent the days of darkness, for they are many, and surely it has no hopes beyond the present life. But unbelief has nothing conservative in it. It can scarcely find a motive for self-denial; it goes for enjoying life, and has no higher hopes. "Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." No motive to virtue but its own pride. It usually forms a bad opinion of men, and by so doing, will lack sympathy for them;—and in the same proportion the springs of charity will dry up and the selfish principles will prevail.

It is a question of doubt, in my mind, if there can be a medium between Deism and Atheism, except they ascribe to God the feelings and qualities of the devil; for there is no way of accounting for a good God's tolerating the injustice and barbarity of some, and permitting the suffering and misfortune of others, except it be for hope's sake; and it be his design to reward virtue and devotion to him, with an immortal and glorious life in his eternal kingdom, and in mercy deprive the impenitent of existence forever after this life and the second resurrection.

Can Death afford a remedy? Death can end the sufferings of the afflicted and miserable of this life, but does not introduce them into positive joy. Death relieves, but imparts nothing: it deprives of every thing, leaves all in ruins. But says the skeptic, is not death the gate to endless joy? No, death is rather a desolation—the "dead praise not the Lord; the dead know not anything." "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable;" and "if Christ be not raised then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "These all died in faith, not having received the promise;" and other passages of equal strength might be adduced, all showing to a demonstration that in death man hath no pre-eminence over the beasts; but all go to their quiet home, there to be at rest till the angels shall be commissioned to gather them from every land, even those way-worn pilgrims who were tried, afflicted, and bore it all patiently, knowing that Christ their great and glorious Commander passed through it all, and in death's pleading attitude said, "Forgive them, they know not what they do."

Yes, you impenitent, he is now pleading for you; but those tones of pity cannot always flow. Soon he will cease pleading; then it will be too late—too late.

For the Crisis.
Western New York.

This section is probably but little known to most of the readers of the Crisis, except that it contains a certain village called Dansville, in which, is a celebrated water cure, called "Our Home," where people are taught abstemiousness, self-denial, and bodily purification, three things as necessary to prolong temporal life, in this age of aches and pains and doctor's bills, as inward purification is to secure a hope of eternal life in the world to come.

Since my return from New England in Sept., I have spent much of my time in visiting and preaching the near coming of Christ in places where present truth is seldom heard, and I thank the Lord I can truly say, I have thus far found great readiness to hear, the meetings being largely attended and much interest manifested. My Sunday appointments prevent me from holding meetings for any length of time in the "regions beyond." Local matters would be of but little interest to most of the readers, but generally the interest in the truth is on the increase. Meetings can now be held and good steady congregations had, where two years ago. the very name "Advent" was a bugbear. It is a fact that in former times there has been too much of the "come if you dare" spirit among our ranks, and I fear it prevails now to some extent. Wherever you find a company or individual brought out by this kind of spirit in the preacher, you will find their religion to consist in maintaining a quarrel with the "sects," and when this cannot be kept up, like fire without fuel, their religion dies. In nearly every place I visit I find a very erroneous opinion generally obtained concerning our doctrine and practice. Our object should be to get the people to receive the truth in their hearts and follow Jesus, and not to set themselves up as champions of certain doctrines, daring the churches to come up to this slaughter. We should be bold to speak the truth, but boldness and bravado are entirely different. The truly bold may be meek likewise, a very essential element in christianity; but bravado and meekness cannot dwell together.

I find now and then a minister among the denominations who claims to hold to and preach the near personal coming of Christ, but I find their preaching of it avails nothing because of the immortal soul theory which they retain. Said a minister to me on one occasion, "I believe that Christ is coming personally sometime, but I cannot see as it is any additional motive to repentance." "True," said I, "it is not additional, for it is, in connection with kindred truths, the only motive urged in Scripture." Yes, truly, without this we should be without hope, and it were better to "eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

"Brethren, pray for us."

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

BRO. GRANT:—I hail the Crisis with joy, and peruse its weekly columns with delight; for as cold water is to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country; yes, from my own home, the home of my childhood; where I have spent many happy hours; where I first found the blessed Savior; where I have known many joys with my brethren and sisters; where I have passed through many trying scenes, and where lies the sacred dust of those I have followed to the silent tomb. Yes, my own country, America! loved name! I love thee still, and although thou art now deluged in war and bloodshed, and many hearts have been made sad, yet good news does come from thee over the briny deep, through the World's Crisis and Second Advent Messenger. Brn. and Srs., it is good to know you are still holding on to the blessed hope of soon seeing the King in his beauty. I am still on my way to the promised land—

"Home of our fathers, now specially nigh!"

I shall probably spend the winter in this province. Pray for me, my Brn. and Srs., that while I tarry here God may be with me, and enable me to do some good in his blessed cause: for this I only wish to live. Have tried to do what I could in comforting the saints, and exhorting the sinner to seek the Savior. Truly, the harvest is great, but the laborers are few. I pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth more laborers into his vineyard in this region. Souls are perishing for lack of knowledge, and there is but little time to work. There are a few here expecting the Savior will soon appear. I find them true and faithful friends, and in the morn of the resurrection they will be rewarded for their kindness to the widow. Says Jesus, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in. . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." To such it will be said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." I find my blessed Lord to be a present helper in all times of need; in sunshine and shade, his Spirit is the same and his children one. Blessed be his dear Name! his love and Spirit form the golden tie that binds us together. May it ever be ours to enjoy in this world, and a meeting in the world to come where clouds and storms, sorrows and tears, parting and death, will never enter to mar our happy union. O, hail! blessed day, morn of glory bright, dawn upon thy weary, way-worn children, and give us rest from all our sorrows!

Dear Brn. and Srs., I hope to meet you again on earth; when the Spring-time comes and the singing of the birds is once more heard in our land, I hope to sail over the briny waves and safely land on my American shore. Then some of you will see me among you again.

Hillsburgh, N. S., Dec. 22, '61.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

MY DEAR BRETHREN:—Knowing that the children of faith have an interest in the welfare of the church and the cause of Christ, I therefore venture a few lines, hoping they may do some good.

Our Conference in this place has finished. When we commenced we found the brethren low in their minds, with a desire to be better; and it was soon evident the Lord was alive and ready to hear prayer. Although but few came together at first, union and love combined to inspire us with hope that the meetings would result in good to our brethren and the people. Saturday was extremely cold, so we were disappointed in not seeing as many of the brethren from the region as we expected. But the meetings increased in interest, as Bro. Mooney and myself preached the word of life. Saturday evening, the Spirit's power was manifest, while we had a good congregation to hear; and the spirit of exhortation prevailed so as to extend the meeting to a late hour. Sunday was pleasant, and the people crowded the Hall. The word had free course, while all ears seemed to be open to hear the difference between formal, lifeless religion, and a skyology heaven; and the life-giving, pure, humble, self-denying, world-separating religion, with a tangible, permanent home, the Eden of glory—earth restored, their incorruptible inheritance, with eternal life forever. This, with the signs of the times and the state of the nations, was listened to with good attention, and it was a favored time for Bible truth, with the Spirit to apply it to the heart, so as to make some at least feel certain the day of redemption was approaching.

Our last meeting was Sunday evening, and the best. After preaching, the soul-refreshing testimonies were abundant, showing that the Spirit of God had reached the heart, making truth more a reality than before. Some felt almost persuaded to leave all for Christ. This surely was a season of strong determinations and good wishes. Love abounded, and the whole effort of the meeting gave abundant encouragement to labor for the salvation of men.

Our brethren made provision, and were a little disappointed that they had no more to wait upon. The meeting has resulted in good to those of like precious faith in this region. To God be all the glory. Amen.

It is blessed to see a waking up among the children in this evil time. It is blessed to see others fall in love with the truth that has done us so much good. Nothing will do as a substitute. It may bring reproach, but it will eventuate in glory and eternal life! In love.

Northwood, N. H., Dec. 25, '61.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN CHRIST: I am striving to do the will of God; am looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of Christ, who shall change our vile bodies and make them like his glorious body. What a blessed thought! to have these sickening and toil-worn bodies made like Jesus. It is blessed to think of the reward that is to be given at the appearing of Jesus. I love Jesus, and love to serve him, and live where I can hold sweet communion with him, knowing that he is mine and I am his. I am glad in God that this state of things is almost at an end. I am weary of this sin-cursed earth, and heart-sick.

"I have heard of a beautiful world,
Of a country bright and fair,
And my heart is sick of the present earth,
And I long, oh! I long to be there."

For almost seven years I have been deprived of walking; but I am looking forward to that morning when the lame shall walk, the blind see, the deaf hear, and the dumb sing. Praise our God for such a glorious prospect! I can willingly and gladly bear anything in this world, for the hope of a glorious immortality at the resurrection of the just.

"Give joy or grief, give ease or pain;
Take life or friends away,
But let me find them all again
In that eventful day."

I am glad in God this morning while I write, that we are almost home. Dear children, how cheering is the christian's hope as we journey through this world of sorrow and tears! What a blessed hope is ours! it is big with immortality! I do believe that in a very little while, and we shall see the King in his beauty, and hear him say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." Such a blessed prospect is heart-cheering and hope-inspiring. Soon,

"There the loved of earth shall meet,
Whom death has sundered here;"

and I can by the eye of faith look forward to that bright morn and see the saints of God ascending to meet their Lord in the air; and I behold my dear and beloved mother. I can greet her on the fair banks of deliverance, to part no more.

Dear children, be faithful. A little while and the kingdom is ours. Pray for your unworthy sister, who is striving for the kingdom.

Selections.

The one Thing Needful.

The religion that the world is dying for, is not a treasure—valued and cherished, indeed—but cherished under a glass case, in the best room, carefully dusted, and visible only on days of festival. We want a religion that is an atmosphere, wrapping us about, above, below, going down into the lungs in deep-drawn inspirations, to purify and energize—filtering into the blood to tint and quicken—spreading out in the skin to protect and adorn—piercing noisome cellars to dispel the noxious, death-dealing vapors—mounting into the parlors, and bed-rooms, and kitchen, to keep them sweet and beautiful—permeating and interpenetrating all things—a savor of life unto life.

We want a religion that softens the step, and tones the voice to melody, and fills the eye with sunshine, and checks the impatient exclamation, and the harsh rebuke—a religion that is polite; deferential to superiors, courteous to inferiors, and considerate of friends—a religion that goes into the family, and keeps the husband from being spiteful when the dinner is late—keeps the wife from fretting when the husband tracks the newly-washed floor with his muddy boots, and makes the husband mindful of the scraper and the door-mat—keeps the mother patient when the baby is cross, and keeps the baby pleasant—amuses the children as well as instructs them—wins as well as governs—cares for the servants besides paying them promptly, projects the honey moon into the harvest moon, and makes the happy hours like the eastern fig tree, bearing in its bosom at once the beauty of the tender blossom, and the glory of the ripened fruit—a religion that looks after the apprentice in the shop, and the clerk in the store, and the student in the office, with a fatherly care and motherly love, setting the solitary in families, introducing them to pleasant and wholesome society, that the lonely feet may not be led into temptation, forgiving occasional lapses while striving to prevent them, and supply so far as may be, the place of the natural guardians, by a vigilance that attracts, without annoying.

We want a religion that shall interpose continually between the ruts and gullies and rocks of the highway of life, and the sensitive souls that are traveling over them.

We want a religion that bears heavily, not only on the "exceeding sinfulness of sin," but on the exceeding rascality of lying and stealing—a religion that banishes short measures from the counters, small baskets from the stalls, pebbles from the cotton bags, clay from paper, sand from sugar, chicory from coffee, otter from butter, beet-juice from vinegar, alum from bread, strychnine from wine, water from milk-cans, and buttons from the contribution box. The religion that is to save the world, will not put all the big strawberries at the top, and all the bad ones at the bottom. It will sell raisins on stems, instead of stems without raisins. It will not offer more baskets of foreign wines than the vineyards ever produced bottles, and more barrels of Genesee flour than all the wheat-fields of New York grow, and all her mills grind. It will not make one-half of a pair of shoes of good leather, and the other of poor leather, so that the first shall redound to the maker's credit, and the second to his cash; nor, if the shoes have been promised on Thursday morning, spin out till Saturday night. It will not put Jouvin's stamp on Jenkins' kid gloves, nor make Paris bonnets in the back room of a Boston milliner's shop, nor let a piece of velvet that professes to measure twelve yards, come to an untimely end in the tenth, or a spool of sewing silk, that vouches for twenty yards, be nipped in the bud at fourteen and a half, nor the cotton thread spool break, to the yard-stick, fifty of the two hundred yards of promise that was given to the eye, nor yard-wide cloth measure less than thirty-six inches from selvedge to selvedge, nor all wool delaines, and all linen handkerchiefs, be amalgamated with clandestine cotton, nor coats made of old woolen rags pressed together, be sold to an unsuspecting public for legal broadcloth. It does not put bricks at five dollars per thousand, into chimnies which it contracted to build of seven dollar materials, nor smuggle white pine into floors that have been paid for hard pine, nor leave yawning cracks in closets, where boards ought to join, nor daub ceiling that ought to be smoothly plastered, nor make window blinds with slats that cannot stand the wind, and paint that cannot stand the sun, and fastenings that may be looked at, but are on no account to be touched. It does not send the little boy, who has come for the daily quart of milk, into the barn-yard to see the calf, and seize the opportunity to skim off the cream, nor does it surround stale butter with fresh, and sell the whole for good, nor pass off the slack baked bread upon the stable boy, nor dust the pepper, nor "deacon" the apples. It does not put cotton gathering threads into the skirt, to succumb on the slightest provocation, nor content itself with basting seams at the beginning, and the end, trusting to Providence for the security of the intermediate stages.

The religion that is to save the world, pays its debts. It does not borrow money, with little or no prospects of re-payment, but concealing or glossing over the fact. It does not consider that forty cents returned for one hundred cents given, according to the gospel, though it may be according to law. It looks upon a man who has failed in trade, and who continues to live in luxury, as a thief. It looks upon a man who promises to pay fifty dollars on demand, with interest, and who fails to pay it on demand, with or without interest, as a liar.—Selected for the Crisis by C. H. Fosdick.

Salt.

Some modern agricultural writers have doubted the necessity of giving animal salt. The following remarks as to the effect of salt upon health, by Prof. James F. Johnston, of Scotland, may be relished by those who still put salt in their own puddings, and allow their cattle a little now and then:—

"The wild buffalo frequents the salt-licks of Northwestern America; the wild animals in the central parts of South Africa are a sure prey to the hunter, who conceals himself behind a salt spring and our domestic cattle run peacefully to the hand that offers them a taste of this delicious luxury. From time immemorial it has been known that without salt man would miserably perish; and among horrible punishments, entailing certain death, that of feeding culprits on saltless food, is said to have prevailed in barbarous times. Maggots and corruption are spoken of by ancient writers as the distressing symptoms which saltless food engenders; but no ancient or unchemical modern could explain how such sufferings arose. Now we know why the animal craves salt; why it suffers discomfort, and why it ultimately falls into disease if salt is for a time withheld. Upwards of half the saline matter of the blood (57 per cent,) consists of common salt; and as this is partly discharged through the skin and the kidneys, the necessity of continued supplies of it to the healthy body becomes sufficiently obvious. The bile also contains soda as a special and indispensable constituent, and so do all the cartilages of the body. Stint the supply of salt, therefore, and neither will the bile be able properly to assist the digestion, nor the cartilages be built up again as fast as they naturally waste."—Published by request.

Physical Suffering in Death.

There seems to be a great diversity of opinion as to the amount of actual suffering in the final struggle of death. This, of course, must depend very much on the [illegible] of the constitution. "In many cases I have witnessed," says the late Dr. J. C. Warren, "I have felt a deep interest in ascertaining whether the approach of death was accompanied, as was commonly supposed, with a degree of suffering. The laborious respiration, the frequent groans, the convulsive struggles of the patient, lead his friends to believe that he is undergoing great distress. In such a state the physician may generally arouse the patient from an apparent stupor, common in those cases, sufficiently to make him comprehend the question, "Are you in pain?" The answer is, "No." "Have you any particular suffering?" "No." "What do you feel?" "I cannot tell." Such are the answers which I have always received to my questions. If the patient is not in a condition to answer such questions, he cannot be in a state of suffering. Whatever may be the physical agitation of the chest, face, limbs, or of the whole frame, they are not recognized by the sentient principle.

THE BLESSINGS OF THE BIBLE.—What an illustrious book is the Bible! It rises like a stream in the desert land—its source is the skies, and its fountain in the valleys of the earth. It has rolled on, century after century, enriching every land with verdure and beauty, reflecting all the glowing sky above it, diffusing "whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are of good report," around it. It shines into the casement of the widow, like light of the [illegible] makes her heart to sing with joy and enables her orphans to lift their eyes to the wide shore of the eternal sea and to say; Immensity is our home; eternity is our lifetime; the mighty God that built the universe is our Father, our portion, our friend. It plants in man's heart the hope of joy, the halo of glory and immortality. It erects in man's conscience the rule of right and wrong. It is emphatically the standard of christianity. Wherever that standard is unrolled, there freedom has its noblest footing.

A "Try" Company.

BRO. GRANT:—To elicit an interest in behalf of children, I wish to propose the formation of a Try Company or Society, and hope every little boy and girl will join it. The conditions are total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors and tobacco in all its forms. We propose for the company the following questions:—

1. What tribe or nation do we read of in the Bible who did not drink wine or strong drink?

2. Which was the most musical family spoken of in the Bible?

3. When do the righteous and wicked receive their reward?

4. Who is the oldest man spoken of in the Bible?

5. What is compared to a looking-glass?

How many will try and answer these questions? Will not some one from every Sabbath School send a short letter to the Crisis with their answers, or any other subject they choose to write upon? Let us know what you desire most, and if it is in our power, and for your good, we will do all we can to gratify you. D. N. SMITH.

The Try Company.

There is a hopeful company,
We're just about to start,
And we invite you all, young friends,
To join us hand and heart.
So come and add your name at once,
Nor wait till by-and bye,
For 'tis a thing worth joining this—
Our company, "The Try."

Some companies there are, you know,
That cost a deal per share,
But all that you need pay for one,
Is—earnestness and prayer;
And some end so disastrously,
They make folks very cross,
But here you will be sure to gain,
And cannot suffer loss.

And some there are that only crave
The learned or the grand,
And others that alone admit
The wealthiest in the land;
But in our glorious company
We dare object to none;
The meanest, dullest, poorest, worst—
We've room for every one.

Then in our brave "Try" Company
Your every power invest,
For this, whatever others may,
You'll find will pay the best;
And we will meet another year,
If God our lives should spare,
And we'll promise a good dividend
To all who take a share.

"Bear ye one another's Burdens."

"How tired you look, little girl! Isn't your pail very heavy?" "Oh yes, ma'am, it is pretty heavy, but I shouldn't mind it so much if it didn't make my hands smart so." And the burden-bearer, a girl perhaps ten years old, showed the palms of her hands, red as blisters. "Poor thing! Give it to me a little while; I'll carry it for you, and rest you." I saw by the face of the kind young lady, as she lifted the pail, that it was heavier than she expected, but I heard no exclamation about the exceeding weight. Common politeness prompted me to step forward and relieve her of the unaccustomed burden; but I refrained, for two reasons. First, I knew I must turn at the second corner; and, next, I wanted to see if the lady would persevere in carrying so large a pail through the crowded street. She did. When I turned the corner, she was in the midst of interesting inquiries about the child's brothers and sisters.

I went on my way, thinking of the commandment which she was obeying, "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." She was an utter stranger to me, but I felt that I knew her. I felt sure that the heart which prompted such acts of wayside kindness was the home of kindly affections.—Tract Journal.

For the Crisis.
The Prodigal's Lament.

See now the penitential tear
Bursts from his weeping eyes,
As long he sits, while none are near
To mark the rising sighs.
Behold! so silently and sad,
Comfortless and alone,
He views the rags with which he's clad,
And fondly thinks of home:
He thinks of his kind Father's love,
Brother's and sister's dear;
That once with them his feet did move,
Unstain'd with guilty fear.
But now how sadly chang'd the scene,
Behold his wand'ring feet
Sent forth to feed the hungry swine,
With nought himself to eat.
And as he strews with liberal hand
The dry and with'ring husks,
He thought, "and must I in this land
Die in want and thirst?"
But hark! and hear him quick decide,—
"I will to Father go,
And tell him I have wander'd wide
In misery and wo.
I'll say I've sinned against kind Heaven
And in thy worthy sight,
And beg that I may be forgiven,
And walk in virtue's light.
Unworthy to be called a son,
I fain would share a place
With those thy servants, who their home
Like me have ne'er disgraced."
And now he starts, with falt'ring step,
Toward his early home,
And soon his father dear he met,
Who knew his erring son.
"Dear father! O forgive thy child,"
Quick'y he spoke aloud,
"I've forfeited th' approving smile
Of thee, and of my God."
"Enough, my son," his father said,
And kissed him o'er and o'er;
"By day, by night, my soul hath prayed
To see thy face once more.
And now bring forth the shining robe,
And clothe him all around,
For this my son to me was dead,
Was lost, but now is found.
Still more than this, bring forth the ring
And put it on his hand,
With joyful music shout and sing,
Make merry in the land;
And bring the shoes of finest sort,
And put them on his feet,
Then kill the fatted calf in haste,
And let us joyful eat.
For this my son was lost indeed,
Was dead, but now is found;
Bear forth the news with utmost speed,
And tell it all around!"
This is the way the Lord receives
A poor, repenting son;
His sorrows quickly he relieves,
And woos him back to home.

A Child working for Jesus.

In passing through a street in Belfast one day I was told that a little boy was very ill. I called. He was a stranger to me. I found him in bed.

"What ails you, my dear boy?" said I.

"O my sins, sir! I cannot bear the weight of my sins."

"Do you feel that you are a sinner?"

"O, sir, I am the chief of sinners.

"And what are you doing?"

"I am praying to Jesus."

"And what are you asking Jesus to do for you?"

"To take away my sins."

He was coiled up in bed, his hands firmly clasped. Even while I spoke to him, and pointed him to the Lamb of God, he continued in earnest prayer. When I called again he was full of joy. He had found the Messiah. I asked him,

"Is there anything you would like to do for Jesus?"

His reply was, "I would like to bring all my brothers and sisters and the whole world to him."

I called again soon after. He was there, but not alone. A number of his companions, little boys, had gathered in. What did this child do? He was not ashamed of Jesus, or afraid to tell what he had done for his soul. He appealed to his companions about their souls. He then told them what he felt, and how he felt; what Jesus had done for him. He proposed to pray for them, and they all knelt down. I heard that prayer. It was most simple, touching and earnest. Before I left, one of the boys was enabled "to believe and give his heart to Jesus."

The little fellows embraced each other. How they spoke of the love of Christ; of the power of his Spirit; of their own joy! How, in the presence of all, they encouraged each other to stand firm and cleave to Jesus!—Ulster Revival.

My Closet.

'Twas first in my closet, convicted of guilt,
I fell at his feet—low in penitence knelt,
Confessed there my error, my sin and my shame,
Entreated his mercy, first called on his name.

Alone with my Savior, the sinner's true friend,
Whose mercy is boundless, whose love knows no end,
He bade me but love him, and banish all fear,—
'Twas first in my closet my God answered prayer.

When wearied with troubles and trials of life,
When tired of viewing contention and strife,
How sweet with my Jesus, my Savior to meet,
In my temple of prayer, my secret retreat.

When o'erclouded with mist the way seems to mine eye,
And the pathway of duty I cannot descry,
I've but to my closet in faith to repair,
And he'll guide me all safely in answer to prayer.

When tempted by Satan to slight for a day
The sacred retreat where I've chosen to pray,
I wander bewildered a prey to each snare,
Until in my closet I seek God in prayer.

Alone with my Father I've nothing to fear,
But can pour all my sorrows in his willing ear,
With loving attention he stoops to impart
Sweet peace to my mind, and new joy to my heart.

O! give me my closet—all else I'll forego,
The place best beloved on earth that I know;
O! give me my closet—my Savior is there,
And ever stands waiting to bless me in prayer.

Primitive Christians.

Christian friends who are in doubt regarding their duty in the matter of bearing arms, may perhaps be interested to learn what the general course was anciently. For the benefit of such the following article was prepared. If not entirely out of date, it may be worthy of publication:—

THE TESTIMONY OF GIBBON THE HISTORIAN.

"The christians were not less averse to the business than to the pleasures of this world. The defence of our persons and property they knew not how to reconcile with the patient doctrine which enjoined an unlimited forgiveness of past injuries, and commanded them to invite the repetition of fresh insults. Their simplicity was offended by the use of oaths, by the pomp of magistracy, and by the active contention of public life; nor could their humane ignorance be convinced that it was lawful on any occasion to shed the blood of our fellow creatures, either by the sword of justice or that of war; even though their criminal or hostile attempts should threaten the peace and safety of the whole community. It was acknowledged that, under a less perfect law, the powers of the Jewish constitution had been exercised, with the approbation of heaven, by inspired prophets and by anointed kings. The christians felt and confessed that such institutions might be necessary for the present system of the world, and they cheerfully submitted to the authority of their Pagan governors. But while they inculcated the maxims of passive obedience, they refused to take any part in the civil administration or the military defence of the empire. Some indulgence might, perhaps, be allowed to those persons who, before their conversion, were already engaged in such violent and sanguinary occupations; but it was impossible that the christians, without renouncing a more sacred duty, could assume the character of soldiers, of magistrates, or of princes.

This indolent, or even criminal disregard to the public welfare, exposed them to the contempt and reproaches of the Pagans, who very frequently asked, what must be the fate of the empire, attacked on every side by the barbarians, if all mankind should adopt the pusillanimous sentiments of the new sect? To this insulting question the christian apologists returned obscure and ambiguous answers, as they were unwilling to reveal the secret cause of their security; the expectation that, before the conversion of mankind was accomplished, war, government, the Roman empire, and the world itself, would be no more. It may be observed that, in this instance likewise, the situation of the first christians coincided very happily with their religious scruples, and that their aversion to an active life contributed rather to excuse them from the service, than to exclude them from the honors of the state and army."—EDWARD GIBBON'S History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire: Chap. XV. Sect. IV. Vol. I. pp. 551–553. Harper's. 1852. 6 vols. 12mo.

I believe christians ought to-day to stand about where Gibbon said they did stand then. But professors of religion seem far from it. They make political speeches, seek office, vote and fight. Which class are apostolic?

TESTIMONY OF JUSTIN MARTYR, A. D. 140.

"Now that the Gentiles should repent of their wickedness . . . I prove by repeating a few words from the prophet Micah 4: 1, etc. And many nations shall come and say, come, let us go up to the mountain of the Lord. . . And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. And nation shall not lift up sword against nation, and they shall not learn WAR any more, etc. etc. I am not ignorant, gentleman, that your doctors do own that all the words of this passage do relate to Christ; and I also know that they affirm that he is not yet come; or if they own that he is come, they say it is not yet known who he is; but when he shall appear in glory and splendor, then it will be known who he is. And then they say those things will be accomplished which are mentioned in this passage, as if there was nothing to be collected from this prophecy as yet. They are ignorant wretches, and do not understand what has been proved from all the scriptures, that a twofold advent of Christ was foretold, in the first of which it is said that he was to be a mean, despicable, inglorious and suffering mortal, and to be crucified; but that in the second he shall come from heaven encircled with glory, when the man of apostacy, (2 Thess. 2: 3, 4) having spoken upon earth great things even against the Most High, shall dare to commit many unjust things against us Christians, who, since we have learnt from the law and the word that came forth from Jerusalem by the apostles of Jesus, the right way of worshiping God, fly to the God of Jacob and to the God of Israel; and we, who WERE involved in WAR and MURDER and all manner of WICKEDNESS, do each of us, from every quarter of the world, turn our instruments of war, our swords, into plowshares, and spears into instruments of husbandry; and as husbandmen cultivate the ground, so we cultivate and practice piety, justice, humanity, faith, and that hope which proceeds from the Father through him who was crucified," etc.—JUSTIN MARTYR'S Dialogue with Trypho, the Jew. Part II. §CIX, CX. Brown's Translation. pp. 232-234. 8vo. Cambridge. 1846.

Justin was one of the oldest and ablest writers in the church. He may not have applied the prophecy correctly, but was he mistaken about the facts?

TESTIMONY OF TERTULLIAN, A. D. 200.

"If then (as I have elsewhere declared) we Christians are expressly commanded by our Master to love our enemies, whom then have we left to hate? And if when hurt we must not return the evil, for fear of being like the rest of the world, where shall we find a man to hurt? If we would not revenge ourselves [on our persecutors] in the dark, but as professed enemies engage you in the open field, do you think we could want forces? . . . We are but of yesterday, but by to-day are grown up and overspread your empire; your cities, your islands, your forts, towns, assemblies, and your very camps, wards, companies, palace, senate, forum, all swarm with christians. Your temples indeed we leave to yourselves, and they are the only places you can name without christians. What war can we now be unprepared for? And supposing us unequal in strength, yet considering our usage what should we not attempt readily? We whom you see so ready to meet death in all its forms of cruelty, was it not agreeable to our religion to be killed, rather than to kill? . . . The Christian sect therefore certainly ought to meet with kinder treatment than it does, and to be tolerated among other lawful societies, because it is a sect from whom nothing hostile ever comes like the dreadful issue of other unlawful factions. . . But for us who are stark and cold dead to all the glories upon earth, what occasion can we have for caballings? And in good truth, nothing is further from our soul than the thoughts of mixing in STATE AFFAIRS, or in any private designs; for we look upon ourselves as citizens of the world."—TERTULLIAN'S APOLOGY, chap. 37, 38. Reeve's Translations, pp. 323–327. 8vo. London, 1709.

TESTIMONY OF ARCHELAUS, BISHOP OF MESOPOTAMIA.

"He seems to have condemned all war as unlawful, for, relating that some Roman soldiers, charmed with the piety and generosity of Marcellus, were induced to embrace the Christian religion, he says that they immediately forsook the profession of arms."—LARDNER'S Credibility. Vol. III. p. 257. 8vo. London, 1838.

WANTS.—Virtue wants more admirers; Wisdom more suppliants, Truth more real friends, and Honesty more practitioners.

Religion wants less said about the theory, and more done in the way of practice.

Philanthrophy wants a residence, and fidelity an asylum.

Pride wants to be discarded, and modest diffidence introduced.

For the Crisis.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER THREE.

It is quite extensively held among believers in the Bible, that the Old and New Testaments—as codes of law, were given to regulate and govern all the inhabitants of the earth; consequently men are continually trying to work over and harmonize them with human governments. Legislators "daub their partition walls" with this "untempered mortar," and lead the masses to think their laws are framed by, and in agreement with Christ's law. In this error is found the cause of all the confusion of ideas on the subject. Let us examine closely, and we find that the Lord did not talk with, nor of, all men, when he conversed with Abram and covenanted with him and his seed.

When the sons of Jacob sold Joseph into Egypt, and the Lord brought the whole family down there—seventy souls—to sojourn, and blessed them, and multiplied them, and miraculously preserved and raised up Moses,—sent him finally, after his exile, to deliver Israel from the Egyptian yoke,—took him into Sinai and delivered that wonderful code of law—all men were not dealt with. The work was wholly for the Lord's people, for them who recognized the God of Abraham as the only true God, and who entered into covenant with him according to his direction. It was for them as a people, a compact. All other men were left out entirely. Yet an effectual door was left open for all who were willing to come under God's plan of government, be his willing children, and subject to his form of chastisement. This door was the act of circumcision for any heathen who wished to join the Lord's family. Unless they took this position they were held as God's enemies, and those who deliberately broke away from the family of the Lord, and joined the heathen, were also treated as rebels—God's enemies. But a distinct family was to be recognized until Christ, the promised seed of Abraham, should come, though "they be a rebellious people," as they often proved to be.

Let us take a look at the state of things in the days of Samuel. In Samuel's old age, after he had served his office under God all his days, in judging Israel, all the "elders of Israel gathered together to Samuel" and said, "Now make us a king to judge us like all the nations."—1 Sam. 8: 5. To this the Lord responded to Samuel, "They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me; that I should not reign over them." So the Lord told Samuel to give them a king, yet to "protest solemnly unto them, and show them the manner of the king that should reign over them." Then the king is described, and the trouble, and war, and other evils that should follow, yet they said, "Nay, but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles."

Here is an exhibition of the ambition and pride of the human heart in its fallen state. The great mass of our race had gone from God to follow their own ways; had turned from God's law and chosen rulers of themselves, builded cities, established nations, crowned kings, prepared defenses and implements of war, with a show of grandeur and glory that tempted the family of Israel, who were under God's especial direction and training. The Lord had seen all this long before, and made mention of it, as seen in Deut. 17: 14,—"When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and dwell therein, and say, I will set a king over me, like all the nations that are about me; thou shalt in anywise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose, one from among the brethren shalt thou set king over thee. . . . But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses . . . . Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away, neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. And it shall be when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites; and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life, that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them, that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left." Such is the character of the king the Lord would choose. Such would make a good king. Israel was established a kingdom. Their first king proved an apostate, and many who followed were very wicked, yet the kingdom was under God's direction. He corrected and punished the people frequently, watching over them and instructing them, for he had established the throne, and promised with an oath to David, the second king, that he would "raise up his seed (referring to Christ) after him, and set him upon his throne, to reign over the house of Jacob forever." The burden of the prophets language is directed to this promised seed,—his character, work, humiliation, atonement, and reign.

For the continual apostasy of Israel, the great corruption of its kings, God removed the crown and the glory in the days of Zedekiah, saying,—"Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Ezk. 21: 26. Here ended the independence of the kingdom of Israel. God subverted it,—brought its crown to the dust, and thenceforth exalted the heathen to power. Israel had proved recreant to trust. The Gentiles take the charter and rise to rule during the remainder of this mortal world,—"until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." This can only refer to Christ at his second coming, to "take to him his great power and reign." By the Lord's direction the empire of Babylon was extended to universal dominion; but it was not thereby a divine government. God had formerly established one, and now suspended it until "David's greater Son" should "rise to reign," and ordained that the Gentiles should have dominion until the "times of restitution."

In Dan. 4th we are told that "the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men." This principle is clearly seen in the 2d and 7th chapters of Daniel, and the history of their fulfilment. But why should the Lord so order and control, that wicked men should have dominion and power? Because (in consequence of sin) the race of men are rebels—will not obey God, will not live in conformity to his law. He will offer mercy, pardon, and "eternal salvation to all who will obey,"—will give his Son to effect this; and such proclamation must be made, such a class of men gathered out of the race, instructed, chastened, disciplined, made instruments of influence and usefulness, in carrying on this work. Therefore God will have some order, some rule, some government, to keep society alive until this is accomplished, and the time come for a divine government to be established under Christ. I. C. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

The Hope set before us.

There is no truth more fully expressed in the sacred Oracles than that which declares the unchangeable character of Jehovah, in him the fountain of equity and judgment finds its seat; in him all might, majesty and dominion, with all power, find residence; he is the Almighty, and who can withstand him?

The apostle Paul, when addressing his brethren in Corinth, declared his trust to be in God who raiseth the dead thus confessing his faith in the resurrection of the dead, he indirectly declares his want of faith in the notion of a reward in death, contrary to the monster error now prevalent. His whole life seemed to be one of disputation for the truth as it is revealed in the writings of Moses and the prophets, and on all occasions be manifested a desire to establish what Jehovah had already caused to be written: so we find that he "dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in unto him, preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ, with all confidence, no man forbidding him." We also read of him as declaring, "But as God is true, our word (or preaching) was not yea and nay; for all the promises of God in him (Christ) are yes, and in him amen." I find by comparison that however much use may be made of these words, there is, alas! too lax an appropriation of them; hence the endless differences and shades of difference that obtain as to the fulfillment of the promises of God. But it does seem that the more plainly a promise or a doctrine is declared, the greater the difficulty with those who desire a way and a righteousness of their own.

Take for examples two of the prominent doctrines set forth by such as to the condition of man in death, and the future condition of this earth which we inhabit. In the first place, it is affirmed of mankind that they have within them an entity which they call the soul; that this soul is both immaterial and immortal; that it is the immortal spirit of man, the life and the intellectual principle; that in consequence of its immortality it will exist as long as God lives; that consequently death does not interfere with its being, for in spite of death it lives on, and the only thing death does for it is either to give it wings to mount above the stars, or sink—no one knows where; though some are bold enough, having studied the mythological notions of a past and dark age, to affirm that it goes to hell, and this hell is in the heart of the earth, and that the probabilities are that Vesuvius and other burning mountains are just so many mouths of this place of destiny. This belief, or rather vague notion, has obtained great currency in the (so called) church and out of it. Professors of nearly all denominations profess the belief in the soul's immortality. Those styled wicked, believe it, infidels believe it, Deists believe it, and sceptics of all grades and shades believe or think they believe it; and because the thing has such popular position, it is argued it must be a true doctrine. But, thank the Lord, we don't depend upon these persons for a solution of the question—"If a man die, shall he live again?"—not, does he continue to live, but, shall he live again? Revelation tells the story. "Baxter's Saint's Rest" does not. Revelation tells us of the true land of Beulah. "Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress" does not. Revelation points to the resurrection of the dead as the time for rewards or punishment. All the so called orthodox works that lay claim to any merit, point mankind to the time of death. And so on this, as on many other doctrines, we might catalogue a host of contradictions as real as can be.

This view of man's nature leads to, and not only to but into errors equally great, because they blindly lead, not a few, but many, too many, into an entire denial, practically, of those promises of God which centre in and find a fulfillment through Jesus Christ; and this appears to me to be as great a sin as can well be practiced; for if we desire to be found in Christ, we must believe God to be true, and that what he has promised will be fulfilled. As the promises of Jehovah are pointed, specific, and certain, we are not left to guess his determination; all who are content to grope through the world by the swallowing of all their teachers tell them, without comparing their words by the words of God, are in just that position in which they may (if not already so) be taken captive at the will of Satan. It therefore becomes a very serious matter, if we hope for eternal life, to know all God has revealed as to its obtaining. It is to be sought for; hence not in possession. It is to be given; hence it is not in us. It is to be obtained consequent on our union with Christ the life-giver, hence not derived by natural descent, for all who are in Adam are the creatures of a vapory life that appeareth for a little while and then vanisheth away. The Oracles of God present this matter so plainly that if we will be wise in God's wisdom we need not err. It is a truism that "to err is human"; and knowing it to be so, we must drop all dependence on the learned and the so called great, if we would be esteemed of God and have that righteousness which is not of ourselves. And however humiliating it may be, we must ever bear in mind that, if accepted of God, it will be through believing the truth and obeying it.

Having briefly referred to the doctrine of inherent immortality, and by some few references to Scripture shown what it is, and how obtained, I now come to when it is obtained, and the condition of the recipient subsequent; and this will introduce the second proposition as to the future condition of this earth we inhabit.

The Scriptures are abundant in testimony on this subject. They offer to us all that is necessary for a right, easy and proper understanding as to God's determination and purpose; not only as to his fitting it originally as the abode of man, pronouncing it "very good," but as to his purpose in the times beyond this present state of trial for life. When God the Almighty brought into existence this planet, Earth, it was in connexion with others, whose order it was to give light by day and night, and thus rule. The historian also tells us "he made the stars also." He also caused "the waters to bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life,"—margin, "soul." He also caused all that had life to bring forth to the multiplying of their kind; and all this was not simply to exhibit his Almighty power, but with special reference to the wants of man, who afterwards, as the crowning glory of all creation, was made in the image of God,—not in his image as an immortal being! As man, God made him, and called him a living soul—not a word here about his immortality, either of body or soul,—as man he stands responsible to his Creator; as man he shall "receive for things done in the body, according to that he hath done, whether good or bad," and this is, when we all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ: this is not at death, nor in death, but when the power to "execute the vengeance written," and rewarding of the faithful and obedient shall be given to Christ, whose prerogative it is to judge the secrets of all hearts.

Seeing then that God after having made man, and after giving him range of earth for which he was made, with permission to do thus and so, and seeing further, that in all this there was special reference not only to the then present, but what should afterwards be brought about by the "seed of the woman," God gave man for his inheritance Earth, and never promised him other abode; it was every way adapted to his wants and necessities, and pronounced "very good"; had God intended to transfer Adam to a place beyond the stars, or beneath the earth, he would have then made it known as he did other things to which he stood related. By disobedience man lost the favor of God, and to dust he returned; and by the obedience of ONE we are assured of a restitution of all things God hath promised by the mouth of all the prophets since the world began. And now the question is, what has been promised a restoration? And here we are at no loss to know, if we will submit our mind to the mind of the Spirit; for "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." God spake by Moses and said, "Truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." And again it is written, "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." This oft-repeated expression, "As I live," and the knowledge that it emanates from One who changeth not, gives assurance doubly sure that the time will come when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord": and can we for a moment think that all this is without an object? Not so; for in the mind of Jehovah the future is well and definitely planned, and the same in outline has been made known to us.

All this may be admitted on the one hand, and on the other practically denied. It is believed that by the missionary enterprises of this and other countries, this good time promised is to be brought about; the simple converting of those called heathen [illegible] by the efforts of the various parties whose names end in ism. I for one cannot endorse such things, for I know, if I know anything of these matters, that this is not God's way. I read, "For the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh: he will give the wicked to the sword, saith the Lord." Were I to see in what is called Christendom a beginning of these things, I should hope for a further spread of good. But what do we see? Just where there is what is styled preaching the gospel, there do we find less love of the truth; for in high places, where the keepers of the people's consciences rule, there we find the greatest opposition to the simple, unadulterated truth on these matters. Loud and very pious professions are made, and great sums of money are spent to introduce among the Feejee Islanders, or the dominions of King Dahomey, or Central Africa, or the Sandwich Islands—every where, EVERY WHERE, efforts have been and are being made to introduce the gospel; and when they have introduced it, what is it? (this is presuming the gospel is introduced.) Why, instead of teaching the people "the meek shall inherit the earth," that they "shall dwell therein forever"; the good things promised to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and a host of like worthies; that the land wherein they were pilgrims and strangers should eventually be theirs for an everlasting possession; that Jesus the Christ shall occupy the throne of David in Mount Zion, which is in accordance with Isaiah's prophecy, and the Angel's announcement; that this King is to be King over all the earth, and with him is to be associate rulers; that the promises of Jehovah made unto his people Israel, that he would bring them into their land that he gave unto their fathers; that he will build them, and not pull them down, and will plant them, and not pluck them up, and that all this shall assuredly be done with his whole heart and whole soul;—these, with a host of like promises, are passed over by such teachers (who greatly need to be taught), and in their place the chimerical notions of their own creations are offered; and however unpalatable it may be to our sympathies, it is nevertheless declared by the prophet of Jehovah,—"Woe to them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter! Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!"

In view of the promised good to come upon this earth, now burdened with the curse; in view of the beneficent reign of Jesus; in view of the restitution of all things promised a restoration;—is it not sufficient to inspire thoughts pure and holy? is it not sufficient to cause us truly to count all loss if we may only obtain the glory, honor and incorruptibility of that age? Then shall the name of Jehovah be great, and blessed, and glorious, when it is announced, "Let the whole earth be filled with his glory." "Ye that fear the Lord, trust in the Lord; he is your help and your shield." "The Lord hath been mindful of us; he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel, he will bless the house of Aaron, he will bless them that fear the Lord, both small and great." "The heavens, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but THE EARTH hath he given to the children of men." "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Death shall feed on them, the worms shall cover them; but the upright shall have dominion in the morning.

With these thoughts before us, how can we refrain from praying, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Let those who have come up through great tribulation inherit the earth, and all things. O for that glorious and ever bright day! the day that shall forever dissipate the dark clouds of error and superstition, and shall crown with glory and cover with immortality all who have believed and obeyed the gospel. The promise is to none others.

Human Ghostology.—No. 4.

V. GHOSTS GOING TO HEAVEN.—That theory which claims that death transforms the saint into an angel, and transfers him to an angel's home, is subversive of the doctrine of a future resurrection; and either denies, or makes of no importance the second mission of Christ to earth. If an angel's home can be gained without a resurrection, if eternal life and immortal glory can be obtained without a resurrection, what need of a resurrection? If saints go to Christ at death, why need he ever come again? This theory makes death the door to glory. But did the inspired servants of God present death in this light? Nay, verily!

[illegible] acting imprudently at the rock. Because of this, Moses was told that he should not enter the land of Canaan, but should die before reaching it. That is, according to ghostology, God was to chastise Moses by not letting him enter Canaan, but sent him straight to heaven. Would Moses not have been pleased with such chastisements? Would it not have been offering a premium for misdemeanor? Again: we see Moses climbing the rugged mount to get one glimpse of the land before dying. But Moses could have saved himself that trouble and labor, if he had only known that his keen-eyed ghost was immediately to soar over that land, and—

"View the landscape o'er."

How much of a chastisement would it be to a man who was laboring for a hundred dollars, to be told, that in consequence of a misstep which he had made, he should not have the hundred dollars, but should have a million dollars? Just as much as it would have been to Moses, who was laboring to enter Canaan, to tell him, that in consequence of a misstep on his part, he could not enter Canaan, but might go to glory. It amounts to this, if death is the door to glory!!!

2d. Hezekiah, a man who had "a perfect heart," was informed that he should "die, and not live." Isaiah 38: 1. If he had believed that death was the door to glory, this would have been a cheering message to his soul. But "Hezekiah wept sore." Would a saint weep thus told that he should immediately go to heaven? Is an entrance into heaven to be dreaded? But hark! he prays to have death deferred. Thus, if death is the door to glory, he prayed that he might have the privilege of staying out of glory a little longer!!! In answer to his prayer, God "added to his days fifteen years." That is, if death is the door to glory, God permitted him to stay out of glory fifteen years longer.

3d. Daniel, "a man greatly beloved," and an inspired prophet of God, received intelligence that he was to be put to death with the wise men of Babylon. Dan. 2: 12. If Daniel had believed that death was the door through which his [illegible] should fly directly to glory, would not the information have elated his heart with transporting delight? But how did it affect him? He goes to praying that he might be empowered with wisdom to reverse the decree that required his death! If death is the door to glory, Daniel is certainly praying to obtain the chance of staying out of glory! Is glory thus to be shunned? Finally prayer prevails, and Daniel's wisdom removes impending death; that is, if death is the door to glory, God gives Daniel wisdom enough to shut the door, or glory against himself!!!

4th. Was death regarded as the door to glory when Jesus raised Lazarus? John 11: 44. If so, how cruel for Jesus to command him to leave those shining realms; to leave the harp, the crown, the palm, the society of angels; to come back to this wicked world. Strange too, that Lazarus did not tell some pleasing stories about his "four days" journey in heaven!

5th. Paul tells us that a holy man by the name of Epaphroditus, "was sick, nigh unto death: but God had mercy on him" in healing him. Phil. 2: 27. If death is the door to glory, what kind of "mercy" would it be to a saint, to shut that door against him just as he is entering? Just as the saint is walking up to pass through the door of glory, God shuts the door square in his face, and calls that "mercy," does he? Is it an act of "mercy" to keep saints out of glory?

6th. Christ and his apostles wrought miracles on sick saints, and on dead saints. If death is the door to glory, those miracles were for the purpose of keeping saints out of glory, and calling saints out of glory who had already got there! Who dare charge this upon Christ and his apostles?

7th. If death is the door to glory, what a novel way Paul took to keep from going through this door into glory, at the time his foes were seeking his life, when he was "let down in a basket;" thus making rapid strides away from the door of glory, in a basket!!!

8th. Says the apostle James, "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church" to pray for his recovery, and "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." James 5: 14. What! just as sickness is carrying the saint to the door of glory, a command to pray that the door may be closed against him? Why this constant aversion to death upon the part of the saints, if it is the door to glory? Why this constant anxiety to defer death? Simply because it is an "enemy," an unlovely, unwelcome "enemy." It is the door to the land of darkness, "the land of the enemy;" and the resurrection is the door out of that land.

9th. When Hymeneus and Philetus preached that "the resurrection is past already," it had a tendency to "overthrow the faith of some;" but should the believers of ghostology subscribe to this doctrine, and deny a future resurrection in toto, it would not "overthrow" or even impair their faith. Their door of glory would still be left them, and according to their theory, they would be as well off without a resurrection as with one. If ghosts go to [illegible] ture resurrection overthrow the christian's faith?

10th. John saw a splendid looking old lady riding upon the back of a scarlet-colored beast, having in her hand a golden cup. It so happened that the old lady got drunk, and in a drunken freak she declared that a dead man is alive when dead, even more alive than before; and that a dead saint is in heaven while in the grave, and she has ever since stuck to it with insane tenacity. As she has gone reeling and staggering through the earth in her fit of intoxication, she has managed to induce "all nations" to drink to intoxication from her "golden cup" of theology, a prominent ingredient of which was ghostology. Thus early the old lady exercised a sufficient influence over the mass of mankind to induce them to believe her lie. This state of things was hinted prophetically by the Savior, in the parable of the virgins. "While the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."

When Christ went away, the church was interested in his return; they were all awake upon the question. But as he tarried (or remained) long, they began to slumber upon the question, and in their sleep they dream that they have a ghost within them that will go to the Bridegroom at death, and that therefore it is not necessary that the Bridegroom should ever come. But amid this "midnight" darkness, the stirring cry is heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" It not only arouses the church to see the nearness, but also the necessity of the Bridegroom's coming. It calls to mind the doctrine of Paul; "When Christ who is our life shall appear, THEN shall ye also appear with him in glory"; thus negating the notion of going to glory at death. It refreshes our minds with the Savior's promise, "I will come again and receive you unto myself." When will he "receive" us? When he shall "come again" —not before. He never promised to "receive" a ghost, but the promise is to the saint. Our "High Priest," Christ, is now in the holy place, "heaven itself." We are not allowed to enter this holy place in the antitype any more than in the type; therefore we are waiting for the High Priest to come out to pronounce the blessing upon us.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 22, 1862.

"I would like the Crisis."

In our travels, we often hear the remark, "I would like the Crisis, but I do not feel able." We ever feel saddened at such remarks, from the fact that such individuals are deprived of the rich pleasure that others enjoy while reading the heart-cheering contributions from the various writers for the columns of our paper. We really think the Crisis is just such a paper as all who love Christ and his appearing would be pleased to read, and feel anxious to contrive some way by which they can have it.

It costs only four cents per week. Now is there not some way by which this amount can be saved, without any loss of health or happiness, and at the same time be better off financially? We think we can devise a plan by which, in most cases, all this can be accomplished.

Please hear us with patience, while we make a few suggestions on this point.

Do you use tea?—"Yes." Coffee?—"Yes." Tobacco? We hear many affirmative responses. Can't you get along without these? We have used none for eighteen years, and we do know that we are better off without than with them, and this, we believe, is the experience of all who have made a thorough trial of persevering abstinence from these stimulating and poisonous articles. Many do not see a well day for no other cause than the use of these. We may not be able to convince such, because they think they cannot live without these things.

Let us look for a moment at the amount of money thus paid out for those things which slowly undermine and ruin the health, especially in those persons who have a nervous temperament. We frequently meet such, whose nerves are in a very trembling condition. How much do you pay out in a year for tea, coffee and tobacco? When travelers buy their tea and coffee at eating houses, they pay from three to six cents a cup. We will suppose yours costs only one cent a cup, including sugar and milk, which is certainly a low estimate. Most drink two cups in the morning and as many at night, while many do the same at noon. But suppose you only use it once a day, then your two cups would amount annually to $7.30! This will pay for a copy of the Crisis for one year, and give you a surplus of $5.30, which, if applied to the Tract Fund, would scatter eight thousand four hundred and eighty pages of valuable reading matter among those who are famishing for the word of life. [illegible] you not deny yourself of these unhealthy narcotics for the sake of accomplishing such glorious results? Will you?

Again, if you use only two cups twice a day, which is a moderate estimate, then you can pay for the Crisis with this wasted money, and have $12.60 left for charitable purposes, which would scatter twenty thousand one hundred and sixty pages of tracts! while you at the same time would be much better off physically, and probably morally also, for those who use these stimulants have temptations to encounter that those do not experience who abstain from them. They have a direct tendency to awaken the animal passions, and produce evil imaginations, which are an "abomination" in the sight of the Lord.

If to the tea and coffee, you add tobacco, you have, taking a moderate estimate, two cents more per day, or nineteen dollars and ninety cents, besides paying for the Crisis one year. This surplus would send to the poor and needy forty-one thousand eight hundred and forty pages of useful tracts, which might be the means of saving many souls.} What do you say, brethren and sisters, shall the money be saved or wasted? Shall we practice self-denial and honor the Lord and his cause? or self-gratification, and thus rob God, and injure our own constitutions? Self-denial is repaid in sweet peace of mind, to which he is a stranger who practices the self-indulgence.

In ten years, according to the first estimate, seventy-three dollars would be expended! according to the second, one hundred and forty-six dollars!! and in the third case, two hundred and nineteen dollars!!!

Brethren and sisters, let us reform, and be free from all bad habits. Those who have not done it, have but a faint idea of the rich comfort they might feel if their chains of bondage were broken. Come, declare your independence to-day—now. Say, "By the help of the Lord, I will use these narcotics no more for ever." Who has the resolution to say I will do it? Say the word, and be firm in your purpose. Then sit down and send at once for the Crisis, which, we trust, will be worth more to you in one year than all the tea, coffee and tobacco, you ever can use.

Let us, who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ, set examples worthy of imitation by every child in the land. Let us avoid the "appearance of evil." We hope to hear glad tidings from many declaring their victories over all bad habits. Who will speak first? who will begin the good work, and commence now?—G.

Discussion with Loveland.

Our late discussion with J. S. Loveland, at Willimantic, Ct., on the evenings of Jan. 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th, was one of considerable interest, and we trust profitable to the people in W. It was held in the Spiritualist meeting-house.

QUESTION: "Do reason and revelation assure us of a continued conscious existence after the death of our physical bodies?"

Mr. Loveland was formerly a Methodist preacher, and is an interesting speaker, well posted in the Spiritual philosophy, and labored earnestly to prove that man does not die. Had he succeeded, he would have proved that the one who deceived our first parents in the garden of Eden told the truth, although the Bible declares he was a liar. We were saddened to see such fine talents devoted to the defence of fables and "doctrines of devils;" but this only proves the truthfulness of the prophetic word, which affirms "that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits."

The following are some of his assertions; "Spirit is unorganized life." "If man is not a spirit, God is not." "Verbal revelation is inferior to reason." "It is impossible to ascertain whence we came." "Men are progressing to a higher state." "The Bible is not an infallible standard." "There is no proof that man may be made unconscious by a blow upon his head." "There is no evidence in the Bible that the breath of life ever leaves the body." "Men can think without brains." "Men live after they have put off the body." "There is no plain declaration in the Bible that the body is raised." "There is no evidence that Lazarus was dead, or any other one that Christ pretended to raise from the dead." "God is the cause of sin; sin had its origin with him." "Spiritualism comes to rescue the Bible from infidel hands." "Job teaches there is no future existence for man."

All the spirits and Spiritualists, so far as our information extends, deny the resurrection of the dead and all who hold to the immortality of the soul, to be consistent, should do the same. They as universally deny that Jesus is our Savior, or Son of God, more than any other good man,—and deny that he is ever coming again personally. They claim that his death had no more to do with our salvation than the death of any martyr. They deny that he was begotten of the Holy Spirit, as the Bible affirms, but say he was Joseph's son. They teach that he was a great medium, and pretend to much reverence for him, while at the same time they trample upon his word.

It is very evident that their sentiments are rapidly gaining ground and becoming more popular every day; and many honest souls are being deluded by this masterpiece of Satanic delusion. Some popular ministers, called "reformers," who are not yet identified with them, are pulling down all barriers between their churches and Spiritualists, by adopting a platform of fellowship which allows at their communion those who believe Christ is not our Savior, in any other sense than that he set a good example for us to follow in our social relations. Thus Satan is continually ensnaring the unsuspecting, by mixing up error and truth in such proportions as to paralyze the power of the latter. By assuming holy names for their spurious professions, many are decoyed away from the hope of the gospel, and blinded by honied words and heartless forms of godliness without the power. It is enough to make one weep day and night to see the success of Satan's artful wiles in these last days. O what can be done to rescue the falling and the fallen! Where are the men of God, that will stand up for Jesus and his word in these last hours of peril? Now is the time for action, to cry aloud and spare not. Now is the time for live men to show themselves on the side of truth, utterly regardless of the speech of people, the finger of scorn, or the purse of gold. Ye men of God, come forth from your hiding places, and with apostolic boldness "contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints."—G.

PERSONAL.—While at Willimantic, we were favored with a visit from our dear Bro. H. F. CARPENTER, of Danielsonville, Ct. We were glad to learn from his own lips that he has not declined the unanimous call of the Poultney church, but is only delaying his removal there for a little season, till he can complete some well devised plans of labor in other fields. He is one of the true men, whose heart is in the work of the Lord, seeking the welfare of the flock of God. Let us pray the Lord to send out more such men, who cannot be swerved from the right by the scoffers' frowns, nor the flatterers' favors; who will deal as faithfully with the rich as the poor, "taking the oversight" of "the flock of God," "not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind." —G.

THANKS to Sr. Lawrence for the excellent "Selections" forwarded. And we would say to all our readers, if they find any choice things in other papers, please clip them out and send them to the Crisis, that we may help scatter them. Send short ones. If you find any thing nice for the children, or for the health department, please forward.—G.

Materialism.

It is the practical effects of every doctrine that must determine its value; and the same may be said, to a certain extent, in determining its truthfulness. If the teaching of materialism—or the denial of spiritual existence—is more capable of meeting the practical wants of the human heart, or in other words, if it is as capable of fulfilling the demands that are vital to the highest well-being of mankind, then it is true, and in the highest sense good; and if so, it is no Sam-Patch leap to say it is, and must necessarily be, found in the Scriptures. But to the contrary of this, we assert without fear of contradiction, that the Scriptures everywhere abound in teachings upon this subject, which fairly and rationally interpreted must, to the most common and indeed to any unsophisticated mind, prove fatal to materialism. And further, we claim that upon a true and proper appreciation of these instructions, depends much of the realization of what belongs to the well-being of our higher and better nature.

In proof of this position we may mention, among other things, the fact that materialism, legitimately carried out, ends in Socinianism,—denying both the pre-existence and proper divine nature of Jesus Christ. We do not mean to say in this, that all who hold the one choose to be known as holding the other. There are many who have these matters confounded, holding a tenet, and never during their life-time once thinking of the legitimate end to which they would lead, logically carried out. It is on this wise that we can account for many most truly pious, God-fearing persons, holding to doctrines which, if once fairly presented, once carried to their logical terminus, would overwhelm them with astonishment. But this is the necessary result of sectarianism,—an ism that has for its foundation-stone, the magnifying some one point to the diminishing of another. To deny that there were christians among such, would be most popish and cruel indeed. It is with such that "ignorance is bliss"; for once made intelligent upon the doctrines they hold, repentance and reformation must follow.

But another and most painful effect of the teachings of materialism, is the palpable want of spirituality. And though so painful, we need not marvel, for how can we enjoy spiritual influences, and at the same time perhaps vehemently and persistently deny the fact of spiritual existence? The practical effect to which we now refer, may be developed by the perverted reasonings of the cold intellect, or incidentally, by the practice of the less profound thinkers, but no less honest professors of the faith. For as surely as effects follow a cause, so truly will the practical life of a religionist make manifest their ideal of christian life. It is on this account that among such as hold in part or wholly the doctrines legitimately belonging to materialism, are often persons that speak very highly of the Word, of fixed laws in the Divine economy, of good works, and of faith, objectively considered, but it is seldom they have much to say of the subjective influence of faith, and prayer, and of communion with God. This they cannot appreciate, because the media through which God communicates is denied. The result, as often witnessed, is a severe dogmatism, great familiarity with such texts of Scripture as are supposed to teach their doctrines, an overweening love of religious controversy, and sometimes a painful tantalizing—and perhaps we should say blaspheming of divine things,—as in the instance referred to, when a man talks of pocketing the Holy Ghost, and be a man of "good standing" in a sect. In fine, the effects are to produce that type of Christianity that is hard, sterile, and ungenial—having its location in the head, but doing little for the heart.

But from these statements, we turn to the consideration of some scriptural testimony bearing upon the subject. Among the numerous passages that might be quoted, we call attention to the following:— "And he answered, fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."—2 Kings 6: 16, 17, compare with ib. 2: 11. "The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels."—Ps. 68: 17. To such as profess to be materialists "in the largest and fullest sense of the word,"—who ask, "How can we know anything that cannot be demonstrated by our physical senses?" we have to ask, why the aforesaid young man could not see the multitude of the heavenly host about him, until God miraculously opened his eyes? Or is it pretended that his material eyes had an infirmity about them that required a miracle for their healing? But if so, why did not the Assyrian army witness the same phenomenon? and if so, why do we not witness the presence of spiritual beings now-a-days? We think it is because, at this time, "the just shall live by faith," and not because the promise of God has failed us, in that He has said, "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear Him, and delivereth them." Ps. 34: 7. Of these angels it is said by St. Paul, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"—Heb. 1: 14.

"And I will pray the Father, and He shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.—John 14: 16, 17. "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—Ib. 26. "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you."—Ib. 16: 7. "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Rom. 8: 16, compare with 1 Cor. 6: 20. "God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."—John 4: 24. "Now the Lord is that Spirit."—2 Cor. 3: 17. "They brought unto them many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick."—Matt. 8: 16. Out of Mary Magdalene he "cast seven devils."—Mark 16: 9. "And devils came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he rebuking them suffered them not to speak: for they knew that he was Christ."—Luke 4: 41. "The devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine. And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine: and, behold, the whole herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters."—Matt. 8: 31, 32. But we forbear. "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." When materialists will inform us how seven material bodies could enter into the material body of Mary Magdalene, and a legion* could enter into the man in the tombs, and all this in a manner utterly precluding the possibility of being seen by material eyes, then we are prepared, if need be, to answer the question as to how we may know anything that cannot be demonstrated to our physical senses!

That each of these spirits possess the qualities of a distinct personal entity, is proved by the narratives themselves. In no other way could they know, speak and act, after the manner recorded. Affirmations to the contrary would to our understanding be obnoxious alike to Scripture and common sense. Yet in all this, let it be remembered, we do not affirm that spirits are an emanation from, or a part of the immortal and divine nature of God. The conditions necessary to their being and felicity, constitute altogether another question. Neither does it follow that the delusions of Spiritualism are not delusions. Materialism we count to be the extreme of this question on the one hand, and the mystical diabolism, (called Spiritualism) on the other. May God help us to discern the truth that lies precisely between the two extremes, and save us from the pollutions of either error!—M.

* Legion in Roman Antiquity was a body of infantry, consisting of different numbers of men at different periods, from three to five thousand.—Webster.

DO NOT FAIL to read the article in another column headed "Inquiry," by H. Munger. We hope his common sense remarks will be heeded by all our correspondents and contributors. Let there be one paper in the world in which no writer is ashamed to sign his own name. Let us be familiar, and throw off all unnecessary restraint. Our paper will be far more interesting to our readers if they can see every one's name associated with his article. Let us have no false delicacy in this matter. It is our family paper, and we wish you to feel as much at home in our columns, as by your own fireside with your familiar friends.—G.

Letter from a Spirit.

Every week, several letters are published in the Banner of Light, purporting to come from departed human spirits. The following is an extract from one who pretends to be EDDY W. LOCK, who says his father lives in Quincy Market, Boston. The letter is dated Oct. 21, 1861. We give the extract to our readers, that they may see the works of the demons in these last days. It seems strange to us, that they should so far succeed as to make any one believe that these communications do actually come from departed human spirits.—G.

This spirit says:—

"I've seen ever so many funny things here, since I's a spirit. I've seen God, and I've seen the Devil, and—I have—well, I have, now! Why, they looked like folks—just like folks, only one was good, and the other want. Well, I have seen 'em! They said so, any way. I asked who it was, and they told me. They were in a crowd of other folks, that looked just like 'em. The Devil looked as though he was mad with everybody; he looked real wicked. He did n't have any tail nor any horns. Folks don't have. I'm happy—better than I was, 'cause, when you do mischief here, you don't get licked! Nobody licks you here. God looked good—like an angel, and the devil looked as though he didn't know any thing. You needn't laugh so much, for I did see 'em. I asked somebody to show me God, and the devil, and they showed me these men. They were in a crowd of folks. They said I wouldn't see any other God or devil, and I haint, but I've seen some that look just like 'em. The devil didn't say anything to me, nor God didn't either. There are lots more look just like 'em, and they told me all good folks were God, and all bad folks were the devil. My teachers told me so; and if you don't learn the first time, they don't whip you, nor suspend you—nor nothing. You learn just when you are a mind to. We don't get sick here, nor have any medicine to take, either. I see funny things all the time, here, and don't have to pay for going. Everybody can learn in every school, here. 'Taint like the school you have here. Everywhere is a school, for folks that don't know enough. If you see anybody that looks as though they know more than you do, you ask 'em, and they tell you, and may be you never see that one again.

May I go? Where 'll tell my father and mother this was? Is it a meeting? 'Taint a prayer-meeting! I don't know what a circle is. Well, I'm going, now. Good-by."

For the Crisis.

Correction.

BRO. GRANT:—In my article on the Maine Mission, in the Crisis of the 11th inst., I am made to say the mission had made an "outlay of seventy-five dollars for a sleigh, harness, robes, etc." It should read, "seventy-five dollars for a horse, and twenty-five dollars for a sleigh, harness, robes, etc."

I. C. WELCOME.

For the Crisis.

Minutes of the 14th R. I. Quarterly Conference.

CENTRAL MILLS, Coventry, }
Dec. 25th, 1861. }

Wednesday, 2 o'clock P. M. None of the Ministers or members of the Conference arrived this afternoon. Some of the people of the place came out to meeting but the Hall was not open. Eld. E. Bellows and the Clerk arrived in the evening, when there was preaching to a small but attentive congregation.

Thursday, 9 o'clock A. M. Moderator had not arrived. Eld. E. Bellows was chosen Mod. pro tem. Prayer by Eld. Reynolds. Report of the last Conference called for and read. Bro. Babcock would have the report of the River Point church altered so as to express their disapproval of christians using carnal weapons. The amendment was annexed to the report. "The church however does not approve of using carnal weapons, believing the uniform to be the mark of the beast." With the amendment the Minutes were received. Adjourned until 9 o'clock Friday morning.

Friday morning, 9 o'clock. Prayer by Bro. B. Roberts, Bro. Bellows in the chair. This meeting is the annual election of officers. Bro. P. C. Rodman was re-elected Moderator. The Clerk declined re-election because he did not expect to be able to attend the conference for the ensuing year. Bro. H. F. Carpenter was nominated and elected Clerk of the conference. Bro. J. P. Babcock declined re-election on the ground that his work was so confining he could not attend the conference. Bro. H. F. Carpenter was nominated and elected Treasurer. Delegates were called upon to report.

Danielsonville church. H. F. Carpenter delegate. He was happy to bring a better report than he did before. Enjoying themselves better than they have been for a year past. Those difficulties have been settled. Where unchristian feelings have been held, confessions have been made. The effect was, God's blessings have been poured out upon them. The Spirit of God was in their midst. The church is in a healthy state. They expect to hold out to the end. Sunday School continues through the winter. It is interesting. A word is given out and each scholar finds a verse in the Bible in which the word is contained.

River Point church. Omens of good. Preaching two or three Sabbaths a month. Prayer meetings interesting. Three converted. Seven united with the church. Sabbath School interesting. Some Sabbath children converted. Church had seventy members.

East Killingly church. E. Bellows delegate. Had been in a low state. In the last two weeks quite a change. He had been laboring with them that time. The result had been, four or five backsliders have been reclaimed. The great object of his laboring with them had been to get them upon higher ground spiritually. Some converted to Christ.

Lafayette church. Report by letter from R. R. Perry. "Our numbers are few, but a majority of them are striving to gain eternal life when the Life-Giver comes. There is a good degree of interest in our meetings."

Foster church. The Clerk delegate. Conference meetings interesting. Preaching every Sabbath. Some firm, and some rather wavering.

Bro. Bellows said there were but a few ministers at this conference. The conference required every church to be represented here. Shows a lack of interest. Conference appointed to commence Wednesday 2 o'clock. He arrived at 6, and was the first one. If the conference should be appointed to commence Thursday, they would get to it Friday. Some preachers not interested enough to come. Hard times. He had but $1,00 when he started. Cost him 80 cts. to come. Glad he was here. Hoped there would be a better representation of ministers and churches at the next conference.

Eld. D. A. Jones said his great object had been to labor where the people were poor. Had been in Maine the past season. The church in Yarmouth is in a very good condition. Visited Stark two or three times. Had a very good time with them. Eld. J. Hemenway had stirred them up before, and some were converted under his labors. Meetings very interesting. In Bangor they are all torn up. Cummingsism has divided them. Interest increasing. Some growing in grace. He thought he should return to Maine perhaps another spring. In Western Conn. the churches are in the best condition they had been in five years. In Pleasant Valley not as good condition as could be hoped. In Bristol is a strong band in prosperous condition. Meetings well sustained. He was encouraged. Ministers generally too ambitious. Do too much work themselves. The secret of our greatest Reformer was,—instead of doing all the work himself, he worked the churches.

The ministers present who belong to the conference were E. Bellows, H. F. Carpenter, B. Reynolds, B. Roberts, and M. R. Phetteplace. Eld. D. A. Jones was with us and participated in the exercises. Although few in number we had some blessed and refreshing seasons. May the church be profited by this meeting of the conference with them. The conference adjourned to meet at Danielsonville the last Wednesday in March, 1862, at 2 o'clock precisely.

M. R. PHETTEPLACE, Clerk.

Report of the Yearly Meeting.

Our meeting at Blooming Valley, Crawford Co., Pa., I trust, will be a profitable one to the church and community. Bro. Blain of Buffalo did most of the preaching, Bro. S. M. Darrow, of Union Mills, Pa., and myself spoke each once. We had some good times in prayer and conference. The principle of love and union seemed to characterize our proceedings in business matters, and hope by the blessing of God, that good may be the result. Bro. Canfield and Blackmer were appointed Elders to the church there; Brn. Cowen, Hall, and Harroun, Deacons; Bro. Davison, Treasurer, and Bro. Ongley, Clerk. After some business relating to the church here, the report of the Evangelist was called for, accepted, and voted to be published, etc. He was also requested to still act in that capacity the present year, as much as possible, and means be provided for that purpose; but to spend a portion of his time with the church at home. Bro. Darrow was also requested to meet with the church as often as he could and speak to the same. (Bro. D. has lately come into the blessed truths we advocate, and feels it his duty to get some to fall in love with the truth.) It was voted to break bread every four weeks, and as much oftener as duty may demand. The business meeting then closed, and adjourned to meet again (the Lord willing) the first Sunday in A. D. 1863. We then partook of the Lord's Supper, in which quite a large company partook of the elements which are left for us to do till He (our blessed Savior) should come again. There were but a few brethren from abroad on account of the rough going; but still our large house of worship was well filled, especially last evening. Bro. Blain is to tarry with us a few days.

EVANGELIST'S REPORT.

Report of Evangelist in Northwestern Pennsylvania for the year 1861, commencing last March:

Traveled with horse and on foot, 3327 miles. Away from home 168 1-2 days, attended 161 meetings, preached myself 124 times, the balance, 37 times, by Brn. Newman and Darrow, who traveled with me in Ohio, etc.

Received for the above services in cash and sundries, - - - $136,40
Expenses paid out, $18,78
Books and tracts given away, $12,09. Amount, - - $30,87

Balance for the benefit of family, etc., - - - - - $105,53

Preached in forty-four places, eight in Crawford county, ten in Erie county, two in Warren county, two in Venango county, Pa.; three in Ashtabula county, one in Union county, seven in Portage county, one in Geauga county, two in Summit county, Ohio, and five in Chaut. county, N. Y. Held two grove meetings, preached once on the door steps of a Court House, attended two funerals, baptized eight souls. Endeavored to do the best I could in presenting the blessed truths of the Bible, and leave the result till the judgment.

JOHN T. ONGLEY, Evangelist.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH." —The church of Thessalonica, the most commended of all the churches to which Paul sent epistles, is considered by the author of this work a model church. In a series of eight chapters he treats of Christ's church as a unit, the connection between the character of a church and its founders, primitive missions, their results, and other correlative subjects, which are presented in their practical relations. It contains pointed rebukes, too often merited, aimed with effect at the devices witnessed in large towns and cities, to make a church popular with the votaries of fashion.—Phil. Observer.

The Thrice Bereaved.

Bro. Grant:—The obituaries in the last two numbers of the Crisis of Bro. and Sr. Grabiel's three little ones, all taken in one short week, wakened the deepest sympathies of my heart. It seemed to me that an affliction so deep needed most truly the manifold grace of God. And my earnest prayer is—Father! pour balm into those wounded hearts. The few lines subjoined were called forth by that sad bereavement.

"Insatiate foe!" not satisfied to thrust
Thy cruel shaft once in our aching hearts,
But, while the wound was bleeding, still again
Send forth another, and a third one still,
Piercing so deeply, that frail nature sinks,
Pouring out moans of deep-felt agony!
One week ago, our darling prattlers lived,
And it was Spring-time round our hearts and hearth,
But now 'tis Winter—drear and desolate.
Their little voices hushed, their laughing eyes
Sealed by that icy hand, and they are gone—
Gone from our loving care and kind embrace,
Gone—yes, all gone, to their last dreamless sleep.
Could human nature bear such depth of wo?
Our Father, God! To thee, to thee we turn
In this sad hour, and listen to the voice
That comes from heaven. "The trump of God shall sound,
And those who sleep in Jesus will come forth
To life eternal. Death shall be destroyed,
And he who hath its power." Praise to thy name!
Hope gilds this cloud, this deep, dark cloud of ours,
And grace divine sustains our sinking hearts.
The time draws near, Jesus will shortly come,
And raise our precious children from the tomb,
To die no more! Praise, everlasting praise
For hope so blest, to cheer our stricken hearts.

A. C. Judson.

For the Crisis.

Inquiry.

Bro. Grant:—Is it not possible to get people to sign their names to articles they write, instead of one or two letters? But few remember, if they once knew, what these initials stand for. It is nearly as necessary to have the name and place of the writer, if they would have their letters read, as it is for an editor to have them to know where to direct. There are many new subscribers who complain of their papers having so many anonymous letters in them. One old subscriber said it seemed as though some people thought it was something cunning and smart to keep back their name; but to him it looked flat and silly. Another said, "I hope the time will come when our brethren and sisters will stop writing who are ashamed of their names on articles." Many do not read articles when they do not know who writes them. More than one half of the readers of the Crisis look at the letters and pick out such as have a full name signed to them. I want to know whose letter I am reading. Last campmeeting, some one knew me very well from my letters, and was glad to see me for the first time. He also said he had written a number of articles, and perhaps I recollected reading them. I replied, "what name was signed to them?" "No name." The initials were S. P., or some two or three other letters, I forget what; but he will not forget what I told him about my never caring to read a letter that had no name to it, or getting acquainted with a person that was ashamed of his name.

When we read a letter from a stranger, we want to know what their name is, and where they live. In this way, many profitable correspondents have been introduced and good done, when those underground letters will have no effect,—not even get read. Every campmeeting, more or less persons come to me to inquire if such and such persons are on the ground, for they have read their writings, and they want to see them. Such writers as these signed their names, or they would not have known who to inquire for, nor should I have known to whom to direct or introduce them. As we have got a paper we are not ashamed of, I hope you will not publish a letter in it from any one that is afraid or ashamed to sign their whole name. Let us come out boldly into the light and face the world. Such soldiers are worth something for such a war as ours. Face the enemy with our own uniform on, and not be ashamed of our Captain, or company, or cause.

Correspondence.

From Eld. F. Douglas.

Bro. Grant:—Mrs. D— and myself are stopping for the present in this city. We left Oswego two weeks ago, to obtain the medical treatment of Dr. Newton of New York. Mrs. D— has had two treatments and derived much benefit therefrom. Since she was first obliged to give up walking, (one year ago last March), she has not stood on her feet without being held up. She cannot now even use crutches, yet Dr. Newton's treatment, we believe, will soon enable her to walk with them, and finally in a few months cause her to walk naturally. As many of the brethren would like to know what the result of our visit is likely to be, this will inform them. We have great reason to hope that the object sought will be obtained. In this affliction, patience has had time and scope for its perfecting work; yet how sensible we are that much more might have been wrought.

The Advent brethren now worshiping in Botanic Hall, east Broadway, N. Y., have excellent meetings. Bro. Storrs preached for them the two past Sabbaths, and though I differ with him as to a partial resurrection, yet the subjects were practical and very instructive, being based on a working out salvation. I am pleased to know that Bible truth is taking hold of many hearts heretofore greatly prejudiced. Its roots have penetrated the depths of my heart, and I trust are having their growth in outspoken fervor and living testimony.

For the present I shall be obliged to seek some honest employment to defray necessary expenses. Though my temporal future looks dark, yet Hope whispers courage! courage! by and by all will be well. Ye who have access in prayer, pray for us. Corresponding friends will please direct to Jersey City, N. J.

Obituary Notices.

Died in Windsor, Vt., Nov. 27th, 1861, of inflammation of the stomach, Mrs. Abby C. Severance, wife of Geo. Severance, aged 43 years.

She endured great suffering during the ten days of her sickness, and was unconscious for the last twenty-four hours. In early life, she became a follower of Jesus, and united with the Congregational church, but for the last year she has been led to search the Scriptures for herself, and was at the time of her death a firm believer in the sleep of the dead, and was looking for the coming of her Redeemer. She left a family of five children and husband, who deeply mourn her loss. She was a good wife and mother, always doing for others and forgetful of self; and in the language of scripture, "She hath done what she could." May she rest in peace until she hears the voice of her Savior at his appearing and kingdom, is the prayer of her afflicted husband and family. G. S.

Died, in Athens, Dec. 17th, 1861, Sister Maria E., daughter of Isaac and Hannah Fellows, aged nineteen years, ten months.

This beloved daughter and sister in Christ, after suffering eight days of erysipelas, sweetly fell asleep in Jesus. She experienced religion about one year since, but through neglect we fear of some of the servants of God, had not been baptized, yet we trust she lived a prayerful life, and will reap her reward in the kingdom. In this death, our brother and sister are bereft of a kind and obedient daughter, the family of an affectionate sister, and her associates a kind, sympathizing friend. We associate no more with her here. But if we die as she died, having hope of a resurrection to immortality and eternal life, then we shall live to die no more.

May this affliction be sanctified to the good of all. The writer was called to address a large congregation on the mournful occasion. Text, 2 Sam 14 14. Chas. Stratton.

Died, in Hawley, Mass., Dec. 20th, of consumption, Charles S., only son of widow Mary Mayhew, aged five years and seven months.

Doubtless there are but few among the number left in widowhood, whose lone hearts have been consoled in so great a measure by the tender sympathy of fatherless children, as has been Sister Mayhew's, in her loneliness and poverty, by the love of the little boy who is now resting in the grave. He lived five years and some months from the day of his father's death, and has been as a little solace to his bereaved mother amid her tears. Being obliged to work very hard to keep her two little ones with herself in a family, the question has often been proposed that she leave her children in the hands of other tutors, but little Charley would ever look up into the anxious face of her whose tender heart yearned so deeply over the welfare of her darling child, and exclaim, "Mother, I shall never leave you—no, never! I shall help you all I can."

But death at last, with his fatal fangs, has fastened upon the once robust form of the child, and separated him from his mother's and little sister's society. His prattling voice will cheer them no more. While standing by the bed of the dying boy and witnessing his distress, we could firmly say,

'Tis not the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms.

Nay, 'twas an enemy come to drag the sweet child through the dark valley and shadow of death. Oh! who that was eye witness of that solemn scene, can ever have a heart to say that "Death is the gate to endless joy?" Never before did eternal life look so inviting, the resurrection so glorious, or death so terrible, as when we viewed this scene. We could but ask,

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And trample o'er the just?"

May God's blessing of submission rest and abide with the sorrowing mother and her little daughter.

We have laid him away, we've laid him away,
In the dark, deep grave to sleep;
But we'll meet him again on a future day,
When we shall cease to weep
For Charley.
On the other shore, on the other shore,
Where there'll be no more sorrow and pain,
We'll meet the loved to part no more,
And on the throne of Christ will reign
Our Charley.

Savoy, Jan., 1862. L. A. Mirick.

Died in Keene, N. H., Jan. 6, of dropsy on the brain, Georgie, son of Dr. J. B. and C. M. Walker, aged eleven months and eight days.

Dear Bro. Grant:—It seems as though we long to see our Lord and Savior more than ever. When will he come and take us home, where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt and feared no more? We know that all things work together for good to them that love the Lord. Pray for us, that this affliction may work for our good. We were very sorry that you could not come and attend the funeral and minister words of comfort to us on the occasion, for it seems as though our hope was more precious now than ever before. J. B. & C. M. Walker.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Aug. 29th, 1861, Nancy E. Scott, daughter of G. M. and Anna Scott, aged nineteen days.

"Farewell, thou sweet and cherished one,
In heaven again we'll meet,
To sing the praises of the Lamb,
And worship at his feet.
O! hour of fate, when from the skies,
With notes of deepest dread,
The far resounding trump of God
Shall summon forth the dead."

M. C. Jones.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamer Arabia we have news from Liverpool the 4th inst., and Queenstown the 5th.

The Arabia has on board troops for Canada, comprising two batteries of the 5th Brigade of Artillery.

FRANCE.

The Emperor on New Year's day delivered an address to the Diplomatic Corps. He received, as usual, various State bodies. In response to an address from the Senate, he said he counted on that body to assist him in perfecting the constitution, and at the same time maintaining intact the fundamental basis on which it rests. To the Legislative body he merely expressed the hope that they would see in the recent modifications of the constitution a new proof of his confidence in their intelligence and patriotism. To the clergy he gave assurances that they might count on his protection and lively sympathy, telling them that they knew how to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. This expression has given rise to the idea that a serious attempt is about to be made to settle the terms for the evacuation of Rome.

ITALY.

On New Year's day the Pope received Gen. Guyon and the French officers. Gen. Guyon spoke of their devotion to the Pope. The latter thanked Gen. Guyon for the sentiments expressed, and said the French soldiers at present in Rome would not permit the fulfillment of any irreligious or impolitic act. He concluded by bestowing the Apostolic benediction on the Emperor Napoleon and the Imperial family.

The National Roman Committee placarded bills in Rome declaring that the issue of Roman consuls by the Papal Government, after the 26th of March, 1863, would not be recognized by the Italian Government, as from the moment the Italian Parliament declared Rome the Capital of Italy, the temporal power of the Pope would be legally terminated.

The Italian Chamber resumed its sitting on the 3d inst.

Ratazzi communicated the speech made by the King to a Parliament deputation, in which he expresses the hope that the Italian cause will make greater progress in the coming than in the past year.

PRUSSIA.

The King, in addressing the Ministry on New Year's day, said the year commenced with a serious aspect throughout the world, rendering it the duty of Prussians to be prepared for any eventualities.

The King also said, in reply to congratulations from the army, that Prussia could calmly behold whatever events may arise from the state of things in non-European countries, because his army stands ready formed and armed.

Turin, Jan. 5th. Garibaldi, in accepting the Presidency of the Genoa Rifle Association, said—"Hasten to prepare to take up arms, because the moment approaches for giving fresh proofs of your bravery."

Diminution of the Turkish Race.—A letter from Dr. Dwight in the Missionary Herald says:

"I shall have some interesting and deeply instructive statistics to present in my report, if I live to complete this tour, respecting the gradual diminution of the Turkish race in this country—the drying up of the Euphrates—but here I will speak only of Diarbekir in this respect. Several entire quarters of Diarbekir, that were formerly Turkish, have now passed into Christian hands, and the process is still going on. Christians, that is, Armenians, Jacobites, and Protestants, are continually buying Turkish houses, but never does it happen that a Turk buys a Christian house. Around the outskirts of the city there are extensive Turkish quarters, all in ruins."

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Washington, Jan. 14. The War Department has received intelligence that a dispatch from Col. Garfield, dated Pointsville, Ky., 8th, confirms the report of the dispersion of Humphrey Marshall's force. It says Marshall's whole army is now fleeing in utter confusion. They burned a large amount of stores. We have taken 15 prisoners.

Another dispatch from Col. Garfield to Gen. Buell, dated Prestonburg, 11th, states that he left Pointsville Thursday noon, with 1100 men, and engaged Marshall's force, 2500 strong, with three cannon posted on the hill. We fought them until dark, and drove them from all their positions. This morning we found 25 of his dead on the field. The enemy's loss cannot be less than 60. We took 29 prisoners and a quantity of stores. The enemy burned most of his stores, and fled precipitately during the night. To-day I have crossed the river and occupied Prestonburg. Our loss is two killed and 25 wounded.

It is said that arrangements are making by the various railroad companies for the running of a daily express train between Washington and New York, and New York and Washington, for passengers only, through in eight hours, and making no stoppages between the two cities.

New York, Jan. 14. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says the Committee on Ways and Means have completed the army bill. The amount asked for is $487,000,000.

Louisville, Jan. 17. The Journal's Mumfordsville correspondent says the rebels are driving and killing the cattle in ponds and the watering places on the route of the advance of the Federal army, to render the water unfit for drinking.

Cairo, Ill., Jan. 17. Advices from Cape Giradeau state that the expedition which left there for Dallas and Bloomfield, returned this morning, bringing 23 prisoners, among them Capt. Day of Jeff. Thompson's army.

Reports from Paducah say that a heavy cannonading was heard up the Tennessee river this morning.

Washington, Jan. 17. The steamer King Philip returned from the flotilla last night, and reports that the Anacosta yesterday bombarded the rebel battery at Cockpit Point, with what result has not as yet been ascertained. The rebels fired four shells at the steamer, which did no damage.

Information has been received that the rebels have abandoned Roanoke Island, in Pamlico Sound, and it is also said to-day that they are preparing to evacuate Yorktown, but the latter is not generally credited.

Fortress Monroe, Jan. 17. It is confidently asserted to-day that Gen. Wool sent notice to Gen. Huger at Norfolk to remove the women and children from that city.

The Minnesota to-day took down her topmasts and spars, and will, it is said, proceed to Elizabeth river to-night with the frigate Cumberland. The Pensacola is also lying here, and every evidence of active naval operations is apparent.

Great Victory in Kentucky.

Cincinnati, Jan. 20. There was a battle at Somerset, Ky., on Saturday between Generals Schoeff's and Zollicoffer's forces, lasting from early morning until dark. Zollicoffer was killed and his forces entirely defeated. Loss heavy on both sides.

Louisville, Ky., Jan. 20. Gen. Thomas telegraphs to headquarters, that Friday night Zollicoffer came up to his encampment, and attacked him at 6 o'clock Saturday morning, near Webb's Cross Roads, in the vicinity of Somerset.

At half past three o'clock, Saturday afternoon, Zollicoffer and Bailey Peyton had been killed, and the rebels were in full retreat to their entrenchments at Mill Springs, with the Federals in full pursuit.

The rebels in dispersing had crossed the Cumberland in a steamboat and nine barges at White Oak Creek. The loss of the rebels was 275 in killed and wounded. They left all their cannon, Quartermaster's stores, tents, horses and wagons which fell into our hands. The 10th Indiana regiment lost 75 in killed and wounded. Nothing further of the Federal loss has yet reached here.

The victory in Kentucky is of the utmost importance. Somerset is near to the Cumberland Gap, where the railroad which connects the States of Virginia and Tennessee crosses the mountains. If the Federal troops should push on and secure this pass, it will cut off all communication between the rebel army in Virginia and Kentucky, and open the way for the advance of Gen. Buel upon Bowling Green. Great anxiety will be felt to learn the particulars of the battle and the result. If the army of Zollicoffer is destroyed, it is a severe blow to the Confederates.

General Zollicoffer, was a native of Tennessee. He held various State offices from 1843 to 1851. In 1853 he was elected to Congress, and continued a member of that body for three terms. He edited the Nashville Banner prior to his election as a Congressman.

Bailie Peyton is a son of the ex-member of Congress from Tennessee.

San Francisco, Jan. 17. The Legislature has adjourned to the 21st, to allow time for the water to subside at Sacramento, the whole city being under water from three to eleven feet deep. The people are driven into the second stories of their houses, and are unable to build fires or cook food. Cooked provisions in large quantities were sent from here by two steamers on Sunday. The water has materially subsided, but the weather is still unfavorable. The whole valley portions of the State have suffered severely from this unprecedented inundation. Millions of dollars worth of property have been destroyed.

ITEMS.

Eruption of Mount Vesuvius. This phenomenon appears to have recurred with great violence. A stream of lava, twenty-four feet deep and three-fourths of a mile wide, is pouring down the side of the mountain. It is reported that six thousand inhabitants of the district near which the eruption has broken out are now fleeing from their homes. The foolish Bourbons, who "learn nothing and forget nothing," are said to consider the eruption of Vesuvius as a manifest demonstration of Providence in favor of Francis II. the exiled King of Naples.

☞ We are informed that Gov. Sprague of Rhode Island has received a telegram from the Secretary of War, asking how many men he could furnish at six days' notice, for thirty days, to be used to garrison the fortifications around Washington. The Governor replied two thousand men and a battery. He left on Friday night for Washington, and will return as soon as the troops are required.

— They are building a railway under ground through the city of London. Deep down beneath gas pipes, and water pipes, and sewers, a large artery will in future drain the overflowing surface of that mighty city. The first portion of this great work, extending from Paddington to the Victoria station, will be opened by the first of May next.

— At the siege of Sebastopol there were 253,042 rounds of cannon ammunition expended. There were 100 mortars and 266 guns of various sizes used in that siege, and of the whole number only 41 remained serviceable after the fall of Sebastopol.

— Persons who have lately been through Platte county, Missouri, say that every slave, as soon as he learns the stranger is from Kansas, asks the question: "Is the ice strong enough to cross on?"

— The trifling sum of $5,000,000 will be required to meet the expenditures of New York city for 1862.

— The total indebtedness of the South to our Northern merchants and manufacturers is about $300,000,000.

— The amount of money already advanced by the banks to the Government is $125,000,000.

— The total amount of gold now in the country is estimated at $275,000,000.

— The amount we expended in Europe for firearms last year was $22,000,000.

For the Crisis.

Signs of the Times.

With strange, perplexing times are these
To stir each soul and pain the mind,—
Blasphemy, fraud, a church at ease,
Predicting peace to all mankind!
Are not these days by Scripture shown,
When "wicked men wax worse and worse,"
Causing the pure in heart to moan,
While sinners all seem more perverse?

Hear the groans of dying nations,
Empires falling, kingdoms wasting;
"God seems working desolations,"—
Is his day of vengeance hasting?
The wall of princes, rulers, ruled,
Shows wasted strength, crushed ambition,
While demagogues, with those they've fooled,
Madly hasten to perdition.

Rebellion, scoffing, unbelief,
Lying, treason, murder, strife,
Blaspheming God, peasant and chief
Making but sport of human life;
Robbing the poor the rich to crown,
Prelates and pastors reap their gain,
By shunning truth with pious frown,
While the suffering cry in vain.

See the mighty armies gathered,
With all the earth their battle field;
Those who ruled, and killed, and flattered,
Their haughty claims each now must yield.
Oaths and treaties, unions broke,
The final conflict rushes on;
Old time runs out, and God hath spoke—
"All kings shall bow to David's Son."

But while these tokens cause dismay
To all the sinful rebel ones,
They cause those joy who "watch and pray,"
God is their Father, they his sons:
These they expected,—promised sign
To all the faithful little flock.
Christ gave to show his harvest time,
And He is their foundation Rock.

Lord, let "thy kingdom come!" we pray,
Bring the "new earth," Eden restore,
"Thy will be done," thy sceptre sway,
O'er the redeemed reign evermore.
All christians, now "lift up your heads,"
Redemption's nigh, rejoice and sing
With saints who leave their dusty beds,—
Glory to Christ! our Savior, King.

Hospital Rambles.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that it might be interesting to a large class of the readers of the Crisis, (as many of them will probably never visit a hospital, but at the same time have friends, perhaps a husband, son, or brother in the army West, who, if not at this especial time, may at some future period be an inmate of some one of the many in and around St. Louis,) I have thought I would write sketches of the state and condition of things as I find them among that brave and suffering class of men—the sick and wounded soldiers. The good Lord has opened the way for me to visit and distribute books and tracts. Bro. Hastings (God bless him!) furnishes me, (see his letter in the Crisis to Sr. N. of B., Ill.) They are received with gladness, especially a bundle that Bro. Blain sent me from Buffalo, on the doctrine of the "state of the dead" and "punishment of the wicked," etc. Sold one to the Captain of an Iowa regiment, one "Death not Life," one of each of Bro. Grant's on "Soul," "Spirit," "What is Man?" and others that he selected, to the amount of fifty cents. Gave me a gold dollar and refused the change. "No," he said, "keep that for your per centage." Another took three of Bro. Grant's, and handed me forty cents, with the same answer.

I want more of those of Bro. Grant's. Indeed, brethren, any of you send me books, and if you are able, club together your five cents, and pre-pay the postage. Money is a thing almost impossible to get, and when Brother Hastings' books came, he paid the postage himself, all but thirty cents; that was all the money I had. Again I say, God bless him! I took them, and, with one dollar and sixty cents in my purse, I started alone for the big and wicked city of St. Louis. I showed the conductor the amount of worldly wealth that I possessed, and told him my errand. He let me go free. Paid twenty-five cents out of my little store for carrying myself and big basket of books to the heart of the city, where I was kindly welcomed by Sr. I. C. Bywater, (Bro. Bywater was absent) who made me "feel at home." May the Lord reward her. Their only son, Porter Bywater, died last June; death caused by excitement in St. Louis; was a Major in the U. S. army. Thus having a home, I dined, took my basket on my arm, and started out on my mission.

Now, friends, if you feel an interest in going with me, I shall be most happy of your company in

My Hospital Rambles.—No. 1.

Out into the busy, bustling streets, crowded with soldiers and civilians, officers of all degrees of rank, privates, who are "nothing but privates"; out among the rich and the poor. Here goes the rich, overbearing, pompous "Secesh," full of good living, wine and rebellion. There comes a wagon of Mo. refugees, drawn by oxen, filled with a flock of little half starved, nearly naked, barefoot, hatless, bonnetless children, who, with father and mother, have "left all to follow"—the Union soldiers. Poor creatures! houseless, homeless wanderers, like our Master,—not where to lay their heads. The horrors of this war, who can tell? Here goes "a lady," sweeping the pavement with her long dress, glowing in silks, gold, and "fine feathers." She cannot see the poor. Let her pass. But right in her wake comes one of earth's daughters of sorrow. Did you note that mild, sad face, so full of tears and sad memories? Her clothes were black. Did you notice that? They have their own tale to tell. Death has been there. Perhaps the husband of her young love has been killed in battle, or the bright-eyed boy that she loved so well. Cannot tell! no, cannot tell how they died, when, where, or who, but death has been there. There comes a company of soldiers, raw recruits, healthy, bright-faced boys. So many homes made desolate.

At last here we are. Do you see this stone front? A large, splendid hotel formerly, now a receptacle for the sick and wounded soldiers. Up these broad steps. "Take off your hat, sir!" says the guard. Of course that is not to me, only to the gentlemen that accompany me. Step this way and get our "permits." How exquisitely clean the floor! how white the curtains! how quietly every thing is conducted! No loud voices, or noise of any kind. You will please take notice of one thing; it is this: the politeness and gentlemanly conduct of all in these buildings, from Mr. Jas. F. Yeatman, President, to doctors, officials, nurses, and doers of good generally. Do you see that pleasant looking gentleman, in whose face goodness and kindheartedness look through every feature? That is Mr. Yeatman, the presiding genius. I must speak with him. His extreme urbanity in receiving people, particularly ladies, puts one entirely at their ease. There, he has readily granted me a "permit." Do you wish to see it? "Dr. Mills will oblige by allowing Mrs. N. M. Henry to visit the Hospital on —— Street. Jas. F. Yeatman, President of Sanitary Committee." There it is, brief and to the point. Now we can go. Here is a guard. "Got a permit?" "Yes, sir." "All right!" Make your bow to him. Now we are fairly under way. You must go through just so many forms.

But I have extended this to as great a length as is advisable, and as long articles are uninteresting, and very rarely read, and as I shall visit scenes with you which are distressing, soul-harrowing (but true) and of deep interest, for the present we will stop; and next week commence our visits from bed to bed, ward to ward, hospital to hospital. In the mean time I remain your Sister in the blessed hope.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

Bro. Grant:—I have reason to thank God that I have been so much favored these eight years as to receive the weekly visits of such a worthy messenger as the World's Crisis; and I hope to have them continued while time shall last.

Dear brethren and sisters, let us all read, and not only read, but take counsel by the exhortations of "the beloved disciple." How much he wrote about loving one another! I need not stay to quote extensively from his writings. Those who are not familiar with his teachings may just take their Bibles and turn to the first epistle of John, and read it through. There is the kind of love christians will have,—no getting away from that. I will just read a few of the many rich and holy expressions of the "Beloved":—"Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren. But whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth."

Let us renew our strength, and not be deceived by Satan when he tells us we were never converted, or never have met with a change of heart, or that God does not own us now and never has! When we are pondering over the need of more faith, more grace, more light, amid the surrounding darkness, let us keep right on our way with an eye open. Let us bear our afflictions with patience. O for the grace of patience! I do constantly sigh for mercy, grace, and peace. No peace to us comparatively till our change come, with the good old fathers and mothers that have long been bound by death in cruel bondage.

I have till now been very careful about inviting ministers to come to this place to hold meetings, or a meeting, on account of so much coldness and lifelessness among professors. I feared they would not be sufficiently remunerated for their trouble and expenses. But I have for many weeks, and I might say months, been apprised of it as a duty to request one of the servants of the true and living God, through the Crisis, to come to Plymouth, Vt., and hold a few meetings, or one at least. If there are any whom the Lord will send, let him come. Come in His name, and come in the strength and power of the Son of God. The great and terrible day of the Lord hasteth—it hasteth, and but few are prepared for the event. There is a chance for meetings this winter. Nearly all the places where religious worship can be held are vacant, and the people are content so to let things remain.

And now, dear brethren and sisters in the Lord, I write a word, a wish, to you; also my thanks for favors presented by you from the faithful hand of kind Providence. Many of you do not write as much for the Crisis as you used to do. I want to see your names at the bottom of your contributions. I always search my paper over to see if there is not a familiar name. In a late number of the Crisis, I saw Sr. Maria's name attached to some "Lines,"—"Thoughts of the Departed." Has Sr. Maria Mathews gone to her home in West Danville, C. E.?

I am a lone wanderer on this barren wild. I wish once more to listen to the melodious sound of the "gospel of peace"; yea, an Advent sermon. Who can come? Will you pray for me and mine that we fail not of having an "abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom." From one of the poorest and weakest of his little ones.

Plymouth, Vt.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

Dear Brn. Grant and Morgan:—After a space of time that I have been waiting for certain reasons, I have again resumed my work of recruiting soldiers for the army of the north-west. I feel delicate to report my success, as I seek not for a great name, but I know that there are those who are anxious to know what I am about. I did not start out as soon as I should, as I wanted to see how the ark would move at Strawberry Point, under Bro. Sheldon's labors, which was far better than I expected; as the day of good success had passed by when Bro. Sheldon was there first. If he had staid, success would have united with us.

I immersed three the day Bro. Sheldon left, and four have since united with us, and a number will join as soon as convenient. I then went eight miles from home and staid there a week, and four were baptized. I then started for Cascade, where I am now recruiting and having very good success. Cascade is situated on the North Fork of the Maquoketa river, 25 miles west of Dubuque, with about 1500 inhabitants, four meeting houses, and a variety of sects and parties. Some four years ago, Eld. James Taylor came here, preached and organized a Christian church, which, under his labors, numbered twenty-two. Since he left, two years ago, they have been destitute of preaching until Eld. Moses Chandler came here, last May, which resulted in quite a stir on doctrine, and set some to investigating, while others fought and evil affected the minds of many against the truths we hold dear. I came and preached four times to them in July. I should have staid then, but for the want of long evenings, until something was done, as I believe it is always best to strike while the iron is hot. Prof. Hudson came here in September, staid one week, and left the impression that a scholar believed that endless life was only obtained through the Life-Giver.

Subsequent to his visit, I commenced the last of November and staid two weeks. I found the church affairs bad. Some had moved away, some backslid, while but few still held on to the old ship. I tried to gain the confidence of the people and set things in order. The result of this visit was, eight were baptized, and fourteen united with the church, which makes about twenty-five members, with a comfortable meeting house.

I left and went home, staid one week, and commenced again the 14th of this month; have baptized three since I returned, and hope to have some more good news to send on soon. A school teacher came to me Sunday night, and said he wanted to be baptized,—had been sprinkled, but was not satisfied with it. He could not attend to it during the week, so by the light of the moon one beautiful night, with a multitude of well-behaved people, we repaired to the water, where three took the oath of allegiance to the government of Jesus Christ, hoping to share in the glories of his kingdom.

Cascade, Iowa, Dec. 18, 1861.

From T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—I promised to write again in reference to my labors here; and as you want "short articles" I will try to be as brief as possible. I have tried to preach eight times since I wrote last. On Saturday, 21st inst., I baptized three young women who have begun the christian warfare. The occasion was one of much interest. They came up out of the water shouting, "Glory to God!" On Thursday evening last, Bro. Jones, of the "Christian Connexion," assisted me in organizing a New Testament church of eight members. There are at least half a dozen more who will unite with us shortly. It is the desire of the church that I should take the oversight, which I shall endeavor to do as far as I have ability, and it does not conflict with my duties as Evangelist. Bro. Jones organized a church about one week previous, of about sixteen members. He has determined to sound the alarm, by making the near approach of the Messiah a prominent subject of preaching. The field is vast here. The labors of Bro. Blain and Sr. Henry were not in vain in the Lord, for now by a little watering God has given the increase. I hope I shall have an interest in the prayers of the church, for I have much to contend with,—the opposition of sectarians, and the bad influence of false brethren. But I feel that He that is for me is more than all that are or can be against me. I hope to have more of interest to write you soon.

Near Vandalia, Fayette Co., Ill., Dec. 28.

From G. W. Place.

Bro. Grant:—I would like to request, through the Crisis, some brother of like precious faith to come this way on his pilgrimage and preach the truth, for it has never been preached here as we believe it. I am alone (except my family) in faith, but I feel willing to do all that is in my power to help the cause in this place, and let man hear that never heard before. If some brother could come here and preach the Apostolic doctrine, I believe that much good might be done. Write me, or come to my house.

Then, Now, and Hereafter.

They once were mine—entrancing scenes,
Toward which e'en now fond memory leans
With tearful eye, and almost prays,
O give me back my youthful days!
I saw the spring in flowery vest,
With shining dew-pearls on her breast:
She wore the clouds, that airy sail,
As bridal beauty wears her veil.
In summer saw o'er slope and lea
The sportive lights and shadows flee;
Looked deep in heaven's mysterious blue,
Which world's above went moving through;
Anon, beneath the mirror tide,
I gazed upon the mountain hight,
Immersed in waves of golden light,
Before the gaudy foliage fell
O'er cliffy peak or sinking dell;
And often, as I wondering stood
In Nature's awful solitude,
A voice of stillness seemed to say—
Youth's transient visions fleet away.

* * * * *

Those years are passed; upon my brow
The frosted locks are growing now;
The youthful bands with whom I played,
Are sleeping 'neath the yew-tree's shade;
The mother, on whose breast I lay,
Is coffined yonder in the clay.
Two marbles chronicle the date
When children passed "death's iron gate."
And if I wait, the grave for me
Is pausing, as once, Job, for thee.

* * * * *

But I have heard One soon will come
To break the bars that bolt the tomb;
And that much dust o'er which we tread,
Shall angel's deathless forms be made
They say, beyond fate's farther shore
"No tempests beat, no billows roar;"
They tell me Paradises bloom
Beyond the deserts and the tomb;
That over there, Jerusalem
Is walled around with costly gem;
That hearts ne'er break, that griefs ne'er sigh,
That tears are wiped from every eye;
That the eternal raptures there,
The pure, the good, the holy share,
Then, heavenly Father, me, I pray,
Give youth eternal in that day.

Thoughts on Life.

Life is to the material body what the flame is to the lamp. Adam, the lamp complete, is made of the dust of the ground, Gen. 2: 7; but the lamp is not lighted until the breath of life is breathed into his nostrils; he then becomes a living soul, or lighted lamp. But because of his disobedience, he is doomed to die, or his light is destined to be put out, and so this putting out of the light, or dying, has passed upon all men, after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Rom. 5: 12, 14.

The resurrection to life from the dead is virtually a relighting by Christ of these extinguished lamps; when the righteous, or those who, by patient continuance in well doing in this life, have sought for glory and honor and immortality, are to be rewarded with eternal life, or their lamp is not to be extinguished the second time, while those of the opposite character are to have their light extinguished a second time, which is "the second death;" and this "second death" is not the result of what is entailed upon man as the Adamic penalty, but the penalty of individual sinning. Ezk. 18: 4. C.

Selections.

The War.

Southern papers give most discouraging pictures of the condition of the great rebel experiment. The torch of the incendiary is passing from city to city like an avenging sword. At Richmond the theatre and some other buildings have been destroyed. At Nashville a number of valuable stores and a large quantity of public property shared the same fate. The Richmond Examiner of the 2d tells us that "the year closed under gloomy auspices, with a check at Dranesville and a rumored disaster in Missouri; the year which yesterday began has opened with evil tidings," (the surrender of Mason and Slidell.) The chagrin of the rebels at the action of the North in avoiding a war with England, knows no limit, although they endeavor to conceal it in frothy tirades about the national disgrace of the Union. Their hope of an alliance with Great Britain has ceased, and with that hope goes also that of recognition by any other nation. In their army, too, there appears to be an element of weakness of the most fatal character. By their own confession there is much drunkenness among the officers and vacant idling by the men; regimental drills have fallen into complete disuse, and the Richmond Examiner says, "We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the army is becoming a name of terror and dread to the minds of our citizens." Large sums are paid for "substitutes" by the better class of men, and in one instance $1,500. Richmond is full of idle vagabonds discharged from the hospitals, and their dread of returning to the ranks is so great that one is said to have committed suicide rather than return to that life of famine, dirt, and idleness.

We learn from rebel sources that our forces at Ship Island have taken possession of Biloxi, on the mainland, commanding the railroad between Mobile and New Orleans, and had threatened to make still further seizures. They also say that Fort Pickens had been doing something more in the bombarding line, but what damage was done, if any, they have neglected to tell us.

The great expedition, under command of Gen. Burnside, is doubtless ready for sea, but the profoundest secrecy is kept as to its time of sailing and its destination. The rebels are in great excitement concerning it, as they believe it to be intended for invading York and Rappahannock Rivers in the rear of their army, while McClellan makes an attack on their front.—Independent.

A Family Religious Paper.

We copy from an exchange the following paragraph respecting the benefits of a good family religious paper:

"A good family paper is of untold benefit to the children and youth of a family. They are forming characters for life, and for eternity. A religious paper placed in their way weekly, will silently yet effectually influence them for good. It will bring truth before them in new forms. It will furnish them with the means of distinguishing truth and of defending it. It will tend to make them more intelligent, and give stability and enterprise to their characters. It will fit them to go into the world and resist its temptations, and induce them to seek to accomplish something for others. We feel to-day, and have felt every day since our boyhood, the influence of the religious paper which paternal love and paternal wisdom furnished for the family. It imperceptibly modified and corrected our wrong views, and caused us to look intelligently and religiously at the aim of life. And we can hardly conceive how, in this age, any one can do without a family religious paper. Better deny the body in some respects, than deny the mind and the soul this blessing. Better withhold from the children some other thing rather than this. Put down a Family Religious Paper not merely as a luxury, but as one of the conveniences, the necessaries of life, and provide accordingly."

Judicious Commendation.

"Father," said Isaac Ford, as he came where his father was sitting in the shade of a large chestnut, conversing with a neighbor, "I have raked up all that hay."

His father gave him a slight nod, and went on talking with his friend. Isaac was disappointed. He had exerted all his strength in performing the work assigned him by his father. He had done it very well. He expected that his father would express some surprise at his having finished it so soon, and would have given him some words of commendation. He called his father's attention again by saying, "I have finished raking up the hay—what shall I do next?"

"You may go to picking up stones in the sheep pasture."

Isaac went away with a sad countenance. His feeling of disappointment was well nigh changed into a sense of injustice.

Mr. James noticed it, and said to Mr. Ford, "Do you never praise your children when they do well?"

Mr. Ford hardly knew what to answer, and therefore was silent.

"I think we often err in not praising our children when they deserve it. A parent's commendation is a great stimulus to well doing on the part of the child."

"Is there no danger of their substituting the love of praise for a sense of duty as the principle of action?"

"Not if the parent is judicious in his commendation. The principle of commending well-meant though imperfect endeavors is sanctioned by our Lord in the parable of the talents, and in the account of the final judgment."—New York Observer.

$2,000,000 per Day.—A Cash Item.

It is proper to hear all sides in regard to the war, and we therefore give the following, without indorsement of course, as specimen-talk of the grand, dissatisfied, stay-at-home army, who say:

—Arm and equip, as the law directs, 750,000 men, and then, at a cost of $2,000'000 per day—do nothing.

—Have it generally understood that we have a "grand naval force of 264 vessels and 24,000 seamen" ready to unite with all our other armed hosts to crush out the rebellion, and then tell "our dear Southern brethren" that just at present we shall, at a cost of $2,000,000 per day—do nothing.

—Let our loyal merchants, who lend the Government money to buy powder, go to Alexandria and elsewhere to collect debts from rebels and then be told, right in sight of their own property, on the shelves of these traitors, that, under existing circumstances, we shall wait, at $2,000,000 per day, and—do nothing.

—Let us alternately smile and get mad at the surrender of Mason and Slidell, at the coldness and indifference of all the great powers of Europe, at the possibility, in fighting, of having two irons in the fire, and then, after several grand reviews at $2,000,000 per day, resolve to—do nothing.

Let us not forget the unparalleled patriotism and generosity of our banks, in helping the Government to almost an untold amount of money; be thankful that their courage held out so long; and then resolve, money or no money, that as it costs only $2,000,000 per day, or seven hundred and thirty millions of dollars! per year, we will—do nothing.—Independent.

How to Admonish.

We must consult the gentlest manner and softest seasons of address; our advice must not fall like a violent storm, bearing down and making those to droop whom it meant to cherish and refresh. It must descend as the dew upon the tender herb, or like melting flakes of snow; the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon and the deeper it sinks into the mind. If there are few who have the humility to receive advice as they ought, it is often because there are few who have the discretion to convey it in a proper vehicle, and can qualify the harshness and bitterness of reproof, against which corrupt nature is apt to revolt, by an artful mixture of sweetening and agreeable ingredients. To probe the wound to the bottom, with all the boldness and resolution of a good spiritual surgeon, and yet with all the delicacy and tenderness of a friend, requires a very dexterous and masterly hand. An affable deportment and complacency of behaviour will disarm the most obstinate; whereas if, instead of calmly pointing out their mistakes, we break out into unseemly sallies of passion, we cease to have an influence.—Morning Star.

For the Crisis.

Haste thee onward, old Time!

Haste thee onward, old Time! in thy rapid flight,
And bear us away to the realms of light,
For we long to rest in that happy home,
Where the saints of all ages with joy shall come;
Where the wail of the captive is heard no more,
And the pilgrim's wanderings all are o'er;
Where the sunlight of Eden earth's gloom shall dispel,
And the meek, holy ones in its radiance dwell.

Haste thee onward, old Time! for the earth is drear,
And suffering and woe are our portion here;
And trembling and sad is our pilgrim song,
As we hasten to join the holy throng;
And our closet walls might witness bear
To the tears which fall unhindered there,
While we lift our hearts to the mighty One
For strength to endure till His work is done.

Haste thee onward, old Time! for the night has been long,
And the pilgrims have wept 'mid oppression and wrong;
Our hope's been deferred, and the world has grown cold
While we've waited and longed for the morn to unfold;
And some we have loved are now sleeping in dust,
And others have turned from the path of the just;
And perils and dangers surround our path,
For we've reached the hour of the Tempter's wrath.

Haste thee onward, old Time! bid the moments fly,
For the morn of redemption is drawing nigh;
Stay not, for the weary are yearning for rest,
And hasting to reach the bright home of the blest.
Oh! welcome the day when the journey shall end,
When the King in his glory the heavens shall rend,
To gather his jewels, his chosen and tried,
And seat them in glory enthroned by his side.

"This is for your Health."—Paul

Keep your Mouth Shut.

Some months since, Bro. Hastings put a work in our hands showing the importance of breathing through the nostrils instead of the mouth, especially when we sleep. We consider the instruction received from the work of great value, and would recommend our readers to procure a copy if they can. The following extract from the Scientific American will give the reader some idea of the work.—U.

IMPORTANCE OF SLEEPING WITH THE MOUTH SHUT.

We have received a very curious pamphlet from George Catlin, the famous painter and investigator of the habits, customs, character and ethnology of the Indian tribes. Mr. Catlin observed, many years ago, that those tribes of Indians who have not been corrupted by contact with the whites, have remarkably fine figures, perfect teeth and robust constitutions, and are free from most of the diseases which prevail in civilized communities. Naturally anxious to learn the cause of this superiority, he was led to make inquiries and observations in relation to it, and after a long series of investigations he has come to the conclusion that it is to be attributed to a very great extent to the manner in which Indians breathe, they breathing at all times through the nose, while whites breathe very much through the mouth. His pamphlet is entitled "The Breath of Life," and it bears the motto—

{ All Life (on Earth) is Breath. }
{ All Else (on Earth) is Death. }

The following extracts embrace Mr. Catlin's most interesting facts, and they will give a good idea of the course of his reasoning:—

THE WAY THE HABIT IS ACQUIRED.

"When I have seen a poor Indian woman in the wilderness, lowering her infant from the breast, and pressing its lips together as it falls asleep in its cradle in the open air, and afterward looked into the Indian multitude for the results of such a practice, I have said to myself, 'glorious education! such a mother deserves to be nurse of emperors.' And when I have seen the careful, tender mothers in civilized life, covering the faces of their infants sleeping in overheated rooms, with their little mouths open and gasping for breath, and afterward looked into the multitude, I have been struck with the evident evil and lasting results of this incipient stage of education; and have been more forcibly struck and shocked when I have looked into the bills of mortality, which I believe to be so frightfully swelled by the results of this habit thus contracted and practiced in contravention to nature's design."

BREATHING THROUGH THE MOUTH NOT NATURAL.

"We are told that 'the breath of life was breathed into man's nostrils'—then why should he not continue to live by breathing it in the same manner? The mouth of man as well as that of brutes, was made for the reception and mastication of food for the stomach, and other purposes; but the nostrils, with their delicate and fibrous linings for purifying and warming the air in its passage, have been very mysteriously constructed, and designed to stand guard over the lungs—to measure the air and equalize its drafts during the hours of repose. The atmosphere is nowhere pure enough for man's breathing until it has passed this mysterious refining process, and therefore the imprudence and danger of admitting it in an unnatural way, in double quantities, upon the lungs, and charged with the surrounding epidemic or contagious infections of the moment. The impurities of the air which are arrested by the intricate organizations and mucus in the nose, are thrown out again from its interior barriers by the returning breath; and the tingling excitements of the few which pass them, cause the muscular involitions of sneezing, by which they are violently and successfully resisted. The air which enters the lungs is as different from that which enters the nostrils as distilled water is different from the water in an ordinary cistern or frog pond. The arresting and purifying process of the nose, upon the atmosphere with its poisonous ingredients, puffing through it, though less perceptible, is not less distinct, nor less important than that of the mouth, which stops cherry stones and fish bones from entering the stomach.

In man's waking hours, when his limbs and muscles and his mind are all in action, there may be but little harm in inhaling through the mouth, if he be in a healthy atmosphere, and at moments of violent action and excitement it may be necessary. But when he lies down at night to rest from the fatigues of the day, and yields his system and all his energies to the repose of sleep, and his volition and all his powers of resistance are giving way to its quieting influence, if he gradually opens his mouth to its widest strain, he lets the enemy in that chills his lungs—that racks his brain—that paralyzes his stomach—that gives him the nightmare—brings him imps and fairies that dance before him during the night; and during the following day, headache—toothache—rheumatism—dyspepsia, and the gout."

THE DISEASES PRODUCED.

After pointing out that the organs most quickly affected by a wrong mode of breathing, are the lungs and their connections, including the bronchial tubes, the throat, the tongue and the teeth, our author says:

"Besides the list of fatal diseases already given and which I attribute chiefly to the pernicious habit which I have explained, there are other results affecting the senses, personal appearance, and the enjoyments of life, which, though not fatal, are themselves of sufficient importance to demand its correction; such as curvature of the spine, idiocy, deafness, nightmare, polypus in the nose, malformation and premature decay of the teeth, toothache, tic-douloureux, rheumatism, gout and many others, to which the brute creation are strangers, and to most of which the savage races are but little subject."

THE EFFECTS ON THE TEETH.

"The teeth of man, as with the brutes, are wisely constructed to answer their intended purposes through the natural term of life, and would so, no doubt, but from abuses, the principle one of which I consider to be the pernicious habit already explained. The saliva exuding from the gums, designed as the element of the teeth, floods every part of the mouth while it is shut, continually rising, like a pure fountain, from the gums, at the roots of and between the teeth, loosening and carrying off the extraneous matter which would otherwise accumulate, communicating disease to the teeth, and taint to the breath.

"Among the native races they seem to have a knowledge of these facts, and the poor Indian woman who watches her infant and presses its lips together as it sleeps in its cradle, attracts the ridicule perhaps, or pity, of the passer-by, but secures the habit in her progeny which enables them to command the admiration and envy of the world. These people who talk little and sleep naturally, have no dentists nor dentrifice, nor do they require either; their teeth almost invariably rise from the gums and arrange themselves as regular as the keys of a piano, and without decay or aches, preserve their soundness and enamel and powers of mastication to old age; and there are no sufficient reasons assigned yet, why the same results, or nearly such, may not be produced among the more enlightened races, by similar means. Civilized man may properly be said to be an open-mouthed animal; a wild man is not. An Indian warrior sleeps, and hunts and smiles, with his mouth shut, and with seeming reluctance, opens it even to eat or to speak. An Indian child is not allowed to sleep with its mouth open, from the very first sleep of its existence; the consequence of which is, that while the teeth are forming and making their first appearance, they meet (and constantly feel) each other; and taking their relative natural positions, form that healthful and pleasing regularity which has secured to the American Indians, as a race, perhaps the most manly and beautiful mouths in the world.

AN INDIAN'S OPINION OF ENGLISHMEN.

Of the party of fourteen Ioway Indians, who visited London some years since, there was one whose name was Wash-ke-mon-ye (the fast dancer,) he was a great droll and somewhat of a critic, and had picked up enough of English to enable him to make a few simple sentences and to draw amusing comparisons. I asked him one day how he liked the white people, after the experience he had now had; to which he replied, "Well, white man—suppose—mouth-shut, putty coot, mouth open, no coot—me no like um, not much." This reply created a smile among the party, and the chief informed me that one of the most striking peculiarities which all Indian tribes discovered among the white people, was the derangement and absence of their teeth, and which they believed were destroyed by the number of lies that passed over them."

The pamphlet is published by John Wiley, of New York city, and sold for 25 cents. We advise all persons, especially parents, to procure it.

THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

When?

When shall the night be gone,
With all its woe and sorrow?
When shall we gaze upon
A tearless, cloudless morrow?
When shall its golden light
Up in the east be streaming;
When shall its radiance bright
Athwart the heavens be gleaming?

When shall that Sun arise
Whose wings are fraught with healing,
Soft "airs from paradise"
O'er this dark world be stealing?
When shall the robe and crown
To martyred saints be given,—
City of pearls come down,
Uniting earth to heaven?

When shall earth's groaning cease,
Her discord all be ended,
The glad "new song" of praise
With angel-harps be blended?
When shall that "rest" be given,
That for the saints "remaineth,"—
That shout go up to heaven—
"The Lord Almighty reigneth"?

Panting after God.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, oh God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"—DAVID.

It was not a cold indifference that moved the heart of the sweet singer when he traced the above glowing language. How unlike the many desires we so often hear uttered in our social meetings. Ah! my dear brother or sister, it was from the deep soundings of a heart that felt just as you and I must be made to feel, ere we shall have the promise of our divine Lord and Master verified to our longing hearts—"Blessed are they that HUNGER and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." No person dying for the want of bread could be satisfied with wealth or honor where no bread was to be obtained. No famishing traveler on the parched desert, dying with thirst, could be kept alive with gems or gold. The importunate, plaintive cry would be unceasing—give me bread! give me water, or I perish! Away with your pleasures, honors—take your gold—give me bread! If you would save my life, give me a cup of water! Bread and water are more precious to me than all beside! That is hungering and thirsting in a natural sense. Now then, until there is an awakening to the subject of entire consecration by self-examination, and an unlimited confidence in the declaration that without holiness "no man shall see the Lord," so as to bring us to such a state of hungering and thirsting after righteousness as to forsake the world, and feel that without the bread and water of life we must perish,—we shall never be filled. Mark it down in your mind. My brother and sister, looking for the appearing of Jesus, settle it in your mind that the work of preparation must be in a state of constant progression until the chief Shepherd appears. O! ye heaven-favored ones, wake up to the perils that surround you, and seek the only remedy, by faith and obedience, that can save you in the day of wrath about to break upon us. Let me now introduce to the readers of the Crisis a letter written by James Meicle, dated

WHAT WE SHOULD EXPECT AND WAIT FOR.—How are our joys heightened by hope, and that sometimes a hope that is false! And how vainly are our expectations pointed at some future enjoyment, which, when it comes, shall perhaps disappoint us in the enjoyment! Yet for such things we long, though in a manner hankering after our own misery. But how much does it rather become me, if an heir of God, an expectant of bliss, and a candidate for glory, to be waiting for Him who shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation; to be hastening unto the day of the Lord, and crying, 'Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot?' When will these Empyrean heavens divide, to let my Lord descend? When will these celestial doors fly open, that the exalted One may come in all his state, in his own and in his Father's glory, with his holy angels? When shall the starry way of eternal communion be stretched out between the highest heavens and the new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness? When shall I begin to behold Him in all his glory, whom eye hath not seen, and to see thee without a cloud, who art altogether lovely? When shall my soul be revived with the smell of the rose of Sharon in the paradise of God, and sit down with great delight under the shadow of the tree of life, the plant of renown, and eat of thy immortalizing fruit, and drink of thy refined wines? When shall I join my songs with the anthems of eternity, and mingle my grateful notes with the harpers round the throne? When shall the hiding hills, the intervening heights, be molten down by the beatific vision of thy blessed self, and the valley of darkness and deeps of despondency rise into the mount of communion? When shall I enter into the joy of my Lord, walk with thee in white, and be satisfied with thy likeness? Then shall I know thee as I expect, praise thee as I aspire after, and love thee as I would."—Solitude Sweetened.

To my dear brethren and sisters with whom I have labored in word and doctrine, let me exhort you in these last moments of probation to arise and get in a state of readiness. The Bridegroom is coming, and those only that are found ready will be admitted to the marriage supper. Only the bride that "made herself ready" shall see the King in his beauty, and all the beautiful ones with him, within the massy portals of the holy city. Do not trust in a mere theory, a talkative profession, a stupid indifference to a deep-wrought work in the heart. Dedicate yourself daily; every morning before you leave your bed-chamber return thanks to God for preserving your life through the night. Fathers and mothers, keep the sacrifice smoking on your morning and evening family altars. "Pray without ceasing." Remember the closet. Take notice, backsliding commences in the neglect of secret prayer. You may keep up a cold formality around the family altar, but, dear brother, if you want the unction, the joy, peace and blessing, be sure to have the way opened first in secret, and then come round the altar with the family, and thy Father which saw and heard thee in secret will reward thee openly. Amen.

Is Christ your only trust and guide,
And dearer far than all beside,
And pants your heart for holiness?
Then sure you are a child of grace.

I received such a heavenly heartburn in reading the above spontaneous gushing of a disciple longing to be with his Lord and Savior, that I concluded it was too precious to be laid aside, to waste its sweetness on the air of solitude. "O!" thought I, "if he now lived, what holy raptures would burn and glow on the altar of such a sanctified heart! May the Lord in mercy sanctify it to the spiritual benefit of all lovers of our soon coming King, is the fervent desire of thy humble brother in Christ. Amen.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER FOUR.

It is a true saying that "a bad government is better than none." This world of mankind is badly deranged. It must be under some discipline, and if its rampant people will not obey God, they must feel the force of power; consequently civil law must be ordained by which to govern men. God has, as Paul asserts, "ordained the powers that be," not to govern his children, but to keep the wicked in check, that he may gather out a people under the power of the gospel, and that his people may not be wholly eaten up by the wicked. Consequently we find the idea running through all the Bible, that God ruleth in heaven and among the children of men.

When Jesus was personally among men, he recognized human law, saying, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's." And again, "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so." Again, when tribute was demanded, He asked, "Of whom do the kings take tribute?" and readily paid the demand. So also with the apostles. Civil law was recognized by them. They never attempted to throw off, or evade, their responsibility to human government. They urge the followers of Christ to observe such authority. The world of rebellious, envious, ambitious men, could not exist without some system of law, to which must be affixed penalties, with power to enforce law, and execute its demands. God had ordained such authority among the rebel race. See Rom. 13. God intended it for the good of men, and he holds those who take office under this authority responsible for the discharge of their duty, according to their own standards of right, and their oaths of fidelity to them. But remember that this grant of authority on the part of God, "for the punishment of evil doers," and the protection of the innocent, is one thing; while the administration of power and law, the legislating and executing, is quite another. These points are left to men to work out. While they turn away from the fountain of true wisdom, reject the legislation and administration of Jehovah, they must use their wisdom, and work by their skill, have Monarchies, or Republics, Empires, or Duchies, Democratic or Aristocratic, buy and sell men, or acknowledge equal rights for all men; make wholesome laws for the people, and administer them, or make the most unrighteous laws and administer them; or let "truth fall in the streets" and forbid that "equity should enter."

Thus, while God ordains the authority, or power, man exercises his free agency in the use and abuse of it. This is clearly seen in the history of nations, as in individuals. Who dare take the responsibility of saying that the God of heaven has produced all the various forms of government the nations have had, and framed all the laws, ratified all the edicts, changed and amended all the statutes of State? Such a thought would be madness. Take the picture of nations as they are spread out before us to-day, merely of this generation, and attempt to charge God with being the author of the laws and statutes now existing in all nations. What could be more derogatory to his character? It is true that God holds a control over all these, and will so "restrain the wrath of man," so govern events produced by man, as to subserve his work of redeeming a people for his name, and bring final ruin upon all who call not upon him for help. Man's wisdom and might will all be tested, used up, and be finally brought to naught. But it must be kept in exercise "until He comes whose right it is" to take the government upon his shoulder.

With the above view of the case, the apostles and the Savior could readily recognise the authority of the nations, and urge "subjection to the powers that be," and "obedience to magistrates." But how did they do when the laws conflicted with the laws or the commands of God? Did they argue that these statutes of State, or ordinances of councils, were of God, and must be obeyed? No, no. What then? "Whether it be right to hearken unto you, rather than God, judge ye." Thus they kept at God's work; but their rulers forbade them; still they reply, "We must obey God rather than men," and keep at it. But how do they get on in being "subject to the powers that be"? Let us see. "The powers" send an officer after Peter, and lock him up in the strong hold, made "for the punishment of evil doers." Peter tamely submits. He is subject to the power. It did not take six men to tie and carry him to jail. He had disobeyed their edict. But God shows his approbation of this law-breaker, sends down an angel, by the prayers of the brethren, and reverses the power of the locks, and of the rulers, lets Peter out of jail, to go on with his work. The case was the same with Paul and Silas. They were disobedient to evil laws, but passive and submissive to the power of the executioner. This is being "subject to the powers that be", and it requires grace to do this.

The Knowledge of God.

"The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."—Isa. 1: 3.

The following remarks are designed rather as thoughts on the times in which we live, than any disquisition of prophecy, and are used to illustrate, if not by analogy, to predict the certainty of coming judgments on our land, and forewarn those who have been waiting for the Savior and are doubtful in heart, lest they imbibe the martial and vindictive spirit of the times, and thereby suffer the loss, if not of a future life, at least the continuance of the present, which God has promised to his faithful ones who watch and pray always, and are thus accounted worthy to escape the perils of the last days and live to stand before our Lord when he appeareth. The human race, as a great majority, seem to have been the same in all ages of the world. And in scanning the sacred page we are struck by the inconsistency manifested by man in his hypocritical observance of the acknowledged laws which our Creator has laid down for us in the Bible. And designed for both our present and eternal good, he hath declared his word to be a Lamp to our path and light to our feet, and thus by humbly taking it alone for our counsel, we may obtain a knowledge of God, which will be a sure defense not only in every national calamity, but also a saving grace in every spiritual trial; and instead of desponding during dark clouds of approaching judgments, we may rejoice, while the multitude of those who come short of this knowledge are filled with fear and sad forebodings of things coming on the earth; and in anticipating trouble their minds are like the troubled sea whose waters cast up mire and dirt, and in vain resort to their own proud efforts to avert impending dangers, and, trusting to their own resources and wisdom, forget that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

The want of this knowledge of God which we see so prevalent around us, is but the counterpart of that exhibited by ancient Israel which the Prophet deprecates in the words of the text, and exclaims for God in the verse following,—"Ah, sinful nation! a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters! they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward." It was not because Israel did not profess a knowledge of God and conform to the outward requirements of the law, that judgments were pronounced by the Prophet, for at the 11th verse he enumerates their external ceremonies and at the 13th verse says, "Bring no more vain oblations: incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbath, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting." "And when ye spread forth your hands I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers I will not hear: your hands are full of blood."

How like the present time! Although we as a nation have made the loudest professions of christianity and the knowledge of God, we find ourselves guilty of all the inconsistencies and sins for which the Prophet denounced ancient Israel, and for which the judgments of God followed them to their overthrow and extinction as a nation. There are many points of resemblance between them and ourselves; they were a number of distinctive families or tribes confederated together and holding within themselves the Oracles of God, while his visible glory was manifested in their temple; and while they were obedient, and lived in unity and fraternal love, they were impregnable to the machinations of all outside enemies, however mighty or numerous. After the death of Moses, they were governed by Judges selected and appointed of God—till their habits and customs became more and more like the ungodly nations around their border,—till they renounced the rulership of God in the person of their Judges, and demanded a king like the nations around them; and in doing so they made the first step in departing from the knowledge of God. After Samuel, vainly protesting against their sinful desire, by the command of God anoints Saul of the tribe of Benjamin as king, a man who possessed all the evil passions of the kind of a king they coveted; God however suffered him to continue forty years, through a wise purpose, although soon after his inauguration he disobeyed him, and David the typical king of the true Son of promise was chosen to succeed him. David speedily subdued the enemies of Israel on every side, until they arrived at the zenith of their glory and prosperity. But their next false step was in their rulers in the reign of Rehoboam giving a pretext for secession. God had, in blessing the sons of Jacob, given the kingly right to the lineage of Judah, and was now typically fulfilling it in the house of David, but Ephraim claimed the birthright (which may have been supposed a kingly right) by the same promise, and began to consider the house of David, which had become tyrannical in the extreme, an innovation; and both having wandered away from God in heart, secession and the spilling of the blood of brethren was the consequence.

This was their condition when the Prophet denounced their hypocritical religion, and the inconsistency of their appeals to God, while their hands were covered with blood. Again, I say, how like our modern professors of the gospel of peace! who, instead of battling the evils of slavery in persuasive arguments of love, have made each church a political arena, and marshalled themselves as political partizans; and by bitter reproach and the insulting threats of an unchristian press, with which they have identified themselves, have aroused a hostile feeling in their brethren of the South, and after giving them a pretext for secession, are urging on a fratricidal war of extermination, or submission to a proud Roman emblem, which soon must give place to the glorious standard of the Prince of Peace. Surely our professed christian rulers have not the knowledge of God, but, like ancient Israel, are making a mock of his worship and bringing on themselves destructive judgments.

What then is the duty of those who are looking and waiting for the coming of the Lord? There is but one answer: to keep themselves unspotted from the world; to beware of the war spirit! Our calling is not for war and strife, but love, peace, and good-will, even towards our enemies; and thereby show ourselves to be living witnesses of the truth and power of the gospel of our Lord; and thus we shall follow on to KNOW THE LORD, whose going forth is prepared as the morning. We might enlarge here to show that the knowledge of the Lord would so progress and expand till it encircled with a halo of light the definite time question, and cause his waiting people to rejoice with renewed faith, and unite together in the bonds of indissoluble love; but having expressed a few thoughts I will leave it, praying for the increase of the knowledge of God to his chosen remnant.

For the Crisis.

Do you love Jesus?

"Do you love Jesus when his garb is mean,
Nor shrink to let your fellowship be seen?
Do you love Jesus, blind, halt and maimed,
In prison succor him, nor feel ashamed
To own him, though his injured name may be
A mark for some dark slanderer's obloquy?
Do you love Jesus in the orphan's claim,
And bid the widow welcome in his name?
Do you love Jesus, though a sable skin
Enfolds a form his Spirit dwells within?
'As bound with them,' have ye remembered those
Enslaved, oppressed, till brethren are made foes?
Say not, 'when saw we him'—each member dear,
Poor and afflicted, wears his image here;
And if unvalued or unknown by thee,
Where can thy union with the body be?"

BRO. GRANT:—The above, from the Advocate and Guardian, reminded me so fully of the Scripture, "If ye love not your brother whom ye have seen, how can ye love God whom ye have not seen?" I send it you for the Crisis. It is my prayer that we who profess to love Jesus, may remember that every disciple is a member of the body of which Christ is head. It would be well, if we find a lack of sympathy for the members, to examine ourselves closely, to ascertain whether we are members or not. O! to view ourselves as God vieweth. O! to stand where his word and Spirit approveth while in this mortal state, and at last stand spotless through Him who gave his own life to purchase ours.

Introspection.

It is customary for the merchant and for others, at the close of the fleeting year, to examine their accounts of their temporal concerns, to know what they have gained or lost. Alas! how few among this vast multitude have seriously examined how their accounts stand with their Maker and their Judge, to whose awful tribunal they are hastening to receive the destiny of eternal life or death! Many have asked, what will it profit me to continue this business? Few, comparatively, have paused to ask, "What will it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world and lose his life" forever?

It may be profitable for us, who rejoice in redeeming love, to ask ourselves, what have I done the past year as an offering of gratitude for this love to my poor soul, justly condemned for transgression to everlasting death? What is the record of my doings the past year? How will it appear when the books shall be opened to determine the destinies of accountable men? Not merely life or death, but also, whether the reaping of the glories of Immortality is to be bountiful or sparing, according to our sowing. We have talked about "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." What have we done, and what are we now doing, in preparation to "enter in through the gates into the City" of the great King, to see him as he is and be like him and with him forever? What have we done to save our kindred, our neighbors, and dying men with whom we had intercourse, from being "cast into the lake of fire" which is the second death? Has the Son of the Blessed any more trophies of his redeeming love through our instrumentality? Has he himself become more precious to our hearts by the exercise of a holier faith and nearer and sweeter communion with him and with our Father in heaven? Has the blessing of the poor ready to perish, relieved by our charity, rested upon us? Have the sorrows of the afflicted been alleviated by our sympathizing friendship?

The past is gone. Improved or misimproved, not a moment can be recalled. The future is with Him who inhabiteth Eternity. The present moment is all we can call our own, given us to improve better than the past. O for divine grace to help us to do it!

Dear reader, among the number of whom it is recorded, "This year thou shalt die," our names may stand. Are we prepared for the summons? If we have the "good hope through grace," let us know the time, that "it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." "Blessed is that servant whom when his Lord cometh he shall find" doing his Master's will.

Longing for the Advent.

The Church has commenced anew the circle of her sacred seasons. The Christian year has already begun. The solemn hours of Advent are even now spent; and the natal hymn, sung by angels over the plains of Bethlehem, has been again caught up and sent back to heaven by millions of human hearts, rejoicing that unto them "is born a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." And now the Church will accompany her incarnate Lord through all the scenes of his great humility; from the wilderness' conflict and Bethany's sorrow and Gethsemane's agony to Calvary's uplifted cross, kneeling there with meek faith before "that miracle of time, God's own sacrifice complete." She will keep the holy Sabbath of his rest in the sealed sepulchre, and with outbursting anthems celebrate his rising conqueror of death and spoiler of its kingdom, and stand with adoring eyes, as fading from her sight, he ascends back to the throne of the majesty on high, and hear the thrilling promise of the angel, that "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." What a glorious close is this of the manifestation of God's only begotten Son! It begins with the stoop from the eternal throne, it ends with the glorification. It begins with the manger; it ends with the opening heavens. It begins with the worship of the Magi at the feet of an infant in an humble cottage at Bethlehem; it ends with kneeling believers, gazing into the everlasting mansions, after their ascended Lord, who, in words of blessed promise, shall appear again with power and great glory, and establish his eternal and glorious kingdom.

It is this second Advent for which the sacred volume, wherein is recorded the first, closes in earnest entreaty. It is the bright hope which has animated believing hearts through the long line of Christian centuries. The Church has ever stood looking forward into the future, watching and waiting for that advent of her Lord, when he shall come not as before "in great humility," in his infinite condescension laying aside his riches and humbling himself to our humanity; not as before in the low estate of a poor infant, differing from all others only in the hardness of his pillow, but in his own glory, and with all the holy angels encircling him and bearing him on to the throne of his kingdom; not to the assembling of a few shepherds, but to the congregation of all his saints, to witness the sublime consummation of his redemptive work. The Church through the long history of her humiliation and conflict patiently waits the period of his public triumph as the hour of her enthronement also.

This promise of the Lord's coming formed a larger element in the teachings of the apostles than we at first are apt to perceive. Faint as they often were, wearied, perplexed, troubled on every side, dragged before judges, imprisoned, stoned, killed, they still clung to this animating hope. They preached it in their sermons and wrote it in their letters, holding it forth, now as a warning against all sloth and disloyalty, and now as an inspiration in all service and suffering. Again and again their word to those who endured with them the same fight of afflictions was to hold steadfast to the end, for at the bright appearing of the Lord their sorrow would turn to joy, their plaints to praise; their painful struggle would issue in perfect peace, their present warfare in final victory. St. Paul constantly animates his converts with this glorious hope. "When Christ who is our life shall appear," he writes to one and another of the churches which he had gathered, "then shall we also appear with him in glory;" "for our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like his own glorious body." Nay, it is for this hour, which shall also be the manifestation of the sons of God, that the earnest expectation of the creature is waiting, groaning, and travailing in pain till then. St. Peter announces also the same expectation for the comfort of believers under the pressure of their most grievous afflictions and sharpest temptations; exhortating them to rejoice "that the trial of their faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." And again, "Beloved think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." And St. John, though he is so loving a spirit, teaches the present blessed communion of the believer with the Father and the Son, regards it still as an introduction only to the closer fellowship which shall yet be. "Little children," he exhorts, "Abide in Christ, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." And how does he quicken the longing for that hour in every pious heart, when he writes, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." These are but a few of the passages that might be quoted to show how full are the apostolic writings of this great hope.

This, then, the bright appearing of the Lord, is the longing expectation of the Church. The Bride waits the Bridegroom's coming. For this she would hold every believing heart on the watch and ready to enter with her to the marriage supper. And who has not felt its quickening power? However close may be our union with the Lord now, it is to be regarded as a separation, compared with that perfect union with him, when faith shall be turned to sight, and we are with him where he is. And if faith, as one well says, in its real nature, is nothing else than the veiled eye, how shall we not long for the hour when the veil shall be drawn aside and with a clear vision we shall gaze upon the ineffable glory? If now we see that glory of the Lord only as through a glass, who will not aspire to see face to face and eye to eye? Yes, and what signifies this seeing in the glass, if that which appears there, as in twilight, is not one day to break upon us in all its transcendent brightness? Prisoners of hope, we are called now, and we patiently abide the restraint, because we know that the Lord is near and our deliverance is at hand. Soldiers of Christ are, we know, standing in our armor and enduring all needful hardnesses, for we know it is the time of conflict and suffering now, but the victory is sure, the enemy cannot prevail; and we can wait till the appointed hour, when he shall reign whose right it is to reign, Lord of lords, and King of kings, and our voices with "the great voices in heaven" shall swell the triumph-song, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Who feels not the inspiration of such a bright hope? Who can help longing and praying, when he regards his own personal experiences, or looks out upon the throes and convulsions of the disordered and unquiet world around him, for that hour, so long prophesied and waited for, when all that is incomplete shall attain its perfection, when every discord shall be resolved into harmony, every holy desire find full satisfaction; and our faith, which to the children of the world appears as an offence or a folly, shall be justified in the sight of the whole world? Who can help breathing, when he reads his glorious prophecies yet to be fulfilled, and the precious promises yet to be realized, and studies the signs of the times which seem to [illegible] the ripening of the divine counsels, the earnest supplication that the Lord may soon come and bring his mediatorial work to its sublime consummation?

But it is sometimes feared that there is danger in the indulging of this bright expectation. Its tendency is thought to make us careless or impatient; to damp our zeal in Christian enterprise, and give us over to day dreams and idle reveries. And doubtless the danger is not wholly a fictitious one. There may be those who in their conduct and language have given too great occasion for the suspicion. But it is a danger which lies near every great truth. The grandest doctrines of our faith have close beside them the most dangerous errors. They may all be perverted to the falsest issues. But they stand as truths still, not to be gainsaid or concealed because the weak, sinful heart misconstrues or distorts them. They are the good seed of the kingdom, though after it in sown, the enemy comes and sows his tares with it. So with the hope and longing for the appearance of the Lord, the danger which lies close beside it, is a quietness which falls into listlessness or idle fancies which lead to sad delusions. The history of the doctrine abundantly proves its besetting dangers. But it is not for that reason to be abandoned or neglected. It must not be displaced from its true position in the teaching of the Christian Church. The comfort and inspiration which it breathes cannot be disregarded in the rightly dividing of the word of truth. It seems to we have seen a large element in the Apostle's doctrine. It wrought in them as a continual inspiration amid all their exhausting labors and fearful sufferings for the gospel's sake. It was in their [illegible] against all [illegible], and in their [illegible] appeals to the believer's [illegible]

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

When?

When shall the night be gone,
With all its woe and sorrow?
When shall we gaze upon
A tearless, cloudless morrow?
When shall its golden light
Up in the east be streaming;
When shall its radiance bright
Athwart the heavens be gleaming?

When shall that Sun arise
Whose wings are fraught with healing,
Soft "airs from paradise"
O'er this dark world be stealing?
When shall the robe and crown
To martyred saints be given,—
City of pearls come down,
Uniting earth to heaven?

When shall earth's groaning cease,
Her discord all be ended,
The glad "new song" of praise
With angel-harps go blended?
When shall that "rest" be given,
That for the saints "remaineth,"—
That shout go up to heaven—
"The Lord Almighty reigneth"?

Panting after God.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, oh God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"—DAVID.

It was not a cold indifference that moved the heart of the sweet singer when he traced the above glowing language. How unlike the many desires we so often hear uttered in our social meetings. Ah! my dear brother or sister, it was from the deep soundings of a heart that felt just as you and I must be made to feel, ere we shall have the promise of our divine Lord and Master verified to our longing hearts—"Blessed are they that HUNGER and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." No person dying for the want of bread could be satisfied with wealth or honor where no bread was to be obtained. No famishing traveler on the parched desert, dying with thirst, could be kept alive with gems or gold. The importunate, plaintive cry would be unceasing—give me bread! give me water, or I perish! Away with your pleasures, honors—take your gold—give me bread! If you would save my life, give me a cup of water! Bread and water are more precious to me than all beside! That is hungering and thirsting in a natural sense. Now then, until there is an awakening to the subject of entire consecration by self-examination, and an unlimited confidence in the declaration that without holiness "no man shall see the Lord," so as to bring us to such a state of hungering and thirsting after righteousness as to forsake the world, and feel that without the bread and water of life we must perish,—we shall never be filled. Mark it down in your mind. My brother and sister, looking for the appearing of Jesus, settle it in your mind that the work of preparation must be in a state of constant progression until the chief Shepherd appears. O! ye heaven-favored ones, wake up to the perils that surround you, and seek the only remedy, by faith and obedience, that can save you in the day of wrath about to break upon us. Let me now introduce to the readers of the Crisis a letter written by James Meicle, dated

WHAT WE SHOULD EXPECT AND WAIT FOR.—How are our joys heightened by hope, and that sometimes a hope that is false! And how vainly are our expectations pointed at some future enjoyment, which, when it comes, shall perhaps disappoint us in the enjoyment! Yet for such things we long, though in a manner hankering after our own misery. But how much does it rather become me, if an heir of God, an expectant of bliss, and a candidate for glory, to be waiting for Him who shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation; to be hastening unto the day of the Lord, and crying, 'Why is his chariot so long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot?' When will these Empyrean heavens divide, to let my Lord descend? When will these celestial doors fly open, that the exalted One may come in all his state, in his own and in his Father's glory, with his holy angels? When shall the starry way of eternal communion be stretched out between the highest heavens and the new earth, wherein shall dwell righteousness? When shall I begin to behold Him in all his glory, whom eye hath not seen, and to see thee without a cloud, who art altogether lovely? When shall my soul be revived with the smell of the rose of Sharon in the paradise of God, and sit down with great delight under the shadow of the tree of life, the plant of renown, and eat of thy immortalizing fruit, and drink of thy refined wines? When shall I join my songs with the anthems of eternity, and mingle my grateful notes with the harpers round the throne? When shall the hiding hills, the intervening heights, be molten down by the beatific vision of thy blessed self, and the valley of darkness and deeps of despondency rise into the mount of communion? When shall I enter into the joy of my Lord, walk with thee in white, and be satisfied with thy likeness? Then shall I know thee as I expect, praise thee as I aspire after, and love thee as I would."—Solitude Sweetened.

To my dear brethren and sisters with whom I have labored in word and doctrine, let me exhort you in these last moments of probation to arise and get in a state of readiness. The Bridegroom is coming, and those only that are found ready will be admitted to the marriage supper. Only the bride that "made herself ready" shall see the King in his beauty, and all the beautiful ones with him, within the massy portals of the holy city. Do not trust in a mere theory, a talkative profession, a stupid indifference to a deep-wrought work in the heart. Dedicate yourself daily; every morning before you leave your bed-chamber return thanks to God for preserving your life through the night. Fathers and mothers, keep the sacrifice smoking on your morning and evening family altars. "Pray without ceasing." Remember the closet. Take notice, backsliding commences in the neglect of secret prayer. You may keep up a cold formality around the family altar, but, dear brother, if you want the unction, the joy, peace and blessing, be sure to have the way opened first in secret, and then come round the altar with the family, and thy Father which saw and heard thee in secret will reward thee openly. Amen.

Is Christ your only trust and guide,
And dearer far than all beside,
And pants your heart for holiness?
Then sure you are a child of grace.

I received such a heavenly heartburn in reading the above spontaneous gushing of a disciple longing to be with his Lord and Savior, that I concluded it was too precious to be laid aside, to waste its sweetness on the air of solitude. "O!" thought I, "if he now lived, what holy raptures would burn and glow on the altar of such a sanctified heart! May the Lord in mercy sanctify it to the spiritual benefit of all lovers of our soon coming King, is the fervent desire of thy humble brother in Christ. Amen.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER FOUR.

It is a true saying that "a bad government is better than none." This world of mankind is badly deranged. It must be under some discipline, and if its rampant people will not obey God, they must feel the force of power; consequently civil law must be ordained by which to govern men. God has, as Paul asserts, "ordained the powers that be," not to govern his children, but to keep the wicked in check, that he may gather out a people under the power of the gospel, and that his people may not be wholly eaten up by the wicked. Consequently we find the idea running through all the Bible, that God ruleth in heaven and among the children of men.

When Jesus was personally among men, he recognized human law, saying, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's." And again, "The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them, and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors. But ye shall not be so." Again, when tribute was demanded, He asked, "Of whom do the kings take tribute?" and readily paid the demand. So also with the apostles. Civil law was recognized by them. They never attempted to throw off, or evade, their responsibility to human government. They urge the followers of Christ to observe such authority. The world of rebellious, envious, ambitious men, could not exist without some system of law, to which must be affixed penalties, with power to enforce law, and execute its demands. God had ordained such authority among the rebel race. See Rom. 13. God intended it for the good of men, and he holds those who take office under this authority responsible for the discharge of their duty, according to their own standards of right, and their oaths of fidelity to them. But remember that this grant of authority on the part of God, "for the punishment of evil doers," and the protection of the innocent, is one thing; while the administration of power and law, the legislating and executing, is quite another. These points are left to men to work out. While they turn away from the fountain of true wisdom, reject the legislation and administration of Jehovah, they must use their wisdom, and work by their skill, have Monarchies, or Republics, Empires, or Duchies, Democratic or Aristocratic, buy and sell men, or acknowledge equal rights for all men; make wholesome laws for the people, and administer them, or make the most unrighteous laws and administer them; or let "truth fall in the streets" and forbid that "equity should enter."

Thus, while God ordains the authority, or power, man exercises his free agency in the use and abuse of it. This is clearly seen in the history of nations, as in individuals. Who dare take the responsibility of saying that the God of heaven has produced all the various forms of government the nations have had, and framed all the laws, ratified all the edicts, changed and amended all the statutes of State? Such a thought would be madness. Take the picture of nations as they are spread out before us to-day, merely of this generation, and attempt to charge God with being the author of the laws and statutes now existing in all nations. What could be more derogatory to his character? It is true that God holds a control over all these, and will so "restrain the wrath of man," so govern events produced by man, as to subserve his work of redeeming a people for his name, and bring final ruin upon all who call not upon him for help. Man's wisdom and might will all be tested, used up, and be finally brought to naught. But it must be kept in exercise "until He comes whose right it is" to take the government upon his shoulder.

With the above view of the case, the apostles and the Savior could readily recognize the authority of the nations, and urge "subjection to the powers that be," and "obedience to magistrates." But how did they do when the laws conflicted with the laws or the commands of God? Did they argue that these statutes of State, or ordinances of councils, were of God, and must be obeyed? No, no. What then? "Whether it be right to hearken unto you, rather than God, judge ye." Thus they kept at God's work; but their rulers forbade them; still they reply, "We must obey God rather than men," and keep at it. But how do they get on in being "subject to the powers that be"? Let us see. "The powers" send an officer after Peter, and lock him up in the strong hold, made "for the punishment of evil doers." Peter tamely submits. He is subject to the power. It did not take six men to tie and carry him to jail. He had disobeyed their edict. But God shows his approbation of this law-breaker, sends down an angel, by the prayers of the brethren, and reverses the power of the locks, and of the rulers, lets Peter out of jail, to go on with his work. The case was the same with Paul and Silas. They were disobedient to evil laws, but passive and submissive to the power of the executioner. This is being "subject to the powers that be"; and it requires grace to do this.

The Knowledge of God.

"The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider."—Isa. 1: 3.

The following remarks are designed rather as thoughts on the times in which we live, than any disquisition of prophecy, and are used to illustrate, if not by analogy, to predict the certainty of coming judgments on our land, and forewarn those who have been waiting for the Savior and are doubtful in heart, lest they imbibe the martial and vindictive spirit of the times, and thereby suffer the loss, if not of a future life, at least the continuance of the present, which God has promised to his faithful ones who watch and pray always, and are thus accounted worthy to escape the perils of the last days and live to stand before our Lord when he appeareth. The human race, as a great majority, seem to have been the same in all ages of the world. And in scanning the sacred page we are struck by the inconsistency manifested by man in his hypocritical observance of the acknowledged laws which our Creator has laid down for us in the Bible. And designed for both our present and eternal good, he hath declared his word to be a Lamp to our path and light to our feet, and thus by humbly taking it alone for our counsel, we may obtain a knowledge of God, which will be a sure defense not only in every national calamity, but also a saving grace in every spiritual trial; and instead of desponding during dark clouds of approaching judgments, we may rejoice, while the multitude of those who come short of this knowledge are filled with fear and sad forebodings of things coming on the earth; and in anticipating trouble their minds are like the troubled sea whose waters cast up mire and dirt, and in vain resort to their own proud efforts to avert impending dangers, and, trusting to their own resources and wisdom, forget that the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

The want of this knowledge of God which we see so prevalent around us, is but the counterpart of that exhibited by ancient Israel which the Prophet deprecates in the words of the text, and exclaims for God in the verse following,—"Ah, sinful nation! a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corrupters! they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward." It was not because Israel did not profess a knowledge of God and conform to the outward requirements of the law, that judgments were pronounced by the Prophet, for at the 11th verse he enumerates their external ceremonies and at the 13th verse says, "Bring no more vain oblations: incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and Sabbath, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting." "And when ye spread forth your hands I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye make many prayers I will not hear: your hands are full of blood."

How like the present time! Although we as a nation have made the loudest professions of christianity and the knowledge of God, we find ourselves guilty of all the inconsistencies and sins for which the Prophet denounced ancient Israel, and for which the judgments of God followed them to their overthrow and extinction as a nation. There are many points of resemblance between them and ourselves; they were a number of distinctive families or tribes confederated together and holding within themselves the Oracles of God, while his visible glory was manifested in their temple; and while they were obedient, and lived in unity and fraternal love, they were impregnable to the machinations of all outside enemies, however mighty or numerous. After the death of Moses, they were governed by Judges selected and appointed of God—till their habits and customs became more and more like the ungodly nations around their border,—till they renounced the rulership of God in the person of their Judges, and demanded a king like the nations around them; and in doing so they made the first step in departing from the knowledge of God. After Samuel, vainly protesting against their sinful desire, by the command of God anoints Saul of the tribe of Benjamin as king, a man who possessed all the evil passions of the kind of a king they coveted; God however suffered him to continue forty years, through a wise purpose, although soon after his inauguration he disobeyed him, and David the typical king of the true Son of promise was chosen to succeed him. David speedily subdued the enemies of Israel on every side, until they arrived at the zenith of their glory and prosperity. But their next false step was in their rulers in the reign of Rehoboam giving a pretext for secession. God had, in blessing the sons of Jacob, given the kingly right to the lineage of Judah, and was now typically fulfilling it in the house of David, but Ephraim claimed the birthright (which may have been supposed a kingly right) by the same promise, and began to consider the house of David, which had become tyrannical in the extreme, an innovation; and both having wandered away from God in heart, secession and the spilling of the blood of brethren was the consequence.

This was their condition when the Prophet denounced their hypocritical religion, and the inconsistency of their appeals to God, while their hands were covered with blood. Again, I say, how like our modern professors of the gospel of peace! who, instead of battling the evils of slavery in persuasive arguments of love, have made each church a political arena, and marshalled themselves as political partizans; and by bitter reproach and the insulting threats of an unchristian press, with which they have identified themselves, have aroused a hostile feeling in their brethren of the South, and after giving them a pretext for secession, are urging on a fratricidal war of extermination, or submission to a proud Roman emblem, which soon must give place to the glorious standard of the Prince of Peace. Surely our professed christian rulers have not the knowledge of God, but, like ancient Israel, are making a mock of his worship and bringing on themselves destructive judgments.

What then is the duty of those who are looking and waiting for the coming of the Lord? There is but one answer: to keep themselves unspotted from the world; to beware of the war spirit! Our calling is not for war and strife, but love, peace, and good-will, even towards our enemies; and thereby show ourselves to be living witnesses of the truth and power of the gospel of our Lord; and thus we shall follow on to KNOW THE LORD, whose going forth is prepared as the morning. We might enlarge here to show that the knowledge of the Lord would so progress and expand till it encircled with a halo of light the definite time question, and cause his waiting people to rejoice with renewed faith, and unite together in the bonds of indissoluble love; but having expressed a few thoughts I will leave it, praying for the increase of the knowledge of God to his chosen remnant.

For the Crisis.

Do you love Jesus?

"Do you love Jesus when his garb is mean,
Nor shrink to let your fellowship be seen?
Do you love Jesus, blind, halt and maimed,
In prison succor him, nor feel ashamed
To own him, though his injured name may be
A mark for some dark slanderer's obloquy?
Do you love Jesus in the orphan's claim,
And bid the widow welcome in his name?
Do you love Jesus, though a sable skin
Enfolds a form his Spirit dwells within?
'As bound with them,' have ye remembered those
Enslaved, oppressed, till brethren are made foes?
Say not, 'when saw we him'—each member dear,
Poor and afflicted, wears his image here;
And if unvalued or unknown by thee,
Where can thy union with the body be?"

BRO. GRANT:—The above, from the Advocate and Guardian, reminded me so fully of the Scripture, "If ye love not your brother whom ye have seen, how can ye love God whom ye have not seen?" I send it you for the Crisis. It is my prayer that we who profess to love Jesus, may remember that every disciple is a member of the body of which Christ is head. It would be well, if we find a lack of sympathy for the members, to examine ourselves closely, to ascertain whether we are members or not. O! to view ourselves as God vieweth. O! to stand where his word and Spirit approveth while in this mortal state, and at last stand spotless through Him who gave his own life to purchase ours.

Introspection.

It is customary for the merchant and for others, at the close of the fleeting year, to examine their accounts of their temporal concerns, to know what they have gained or lost. Alas! how few among this vast multitude have seriously examined how their accounts stand with their Maker and their Judge, to whose awful tribunal they are hastening to receive the destiny of eternal life or death! Many have asked, what will it profit me to continue this business? Few, comparatively, have paused to ask, "What will it profit a man, if he should gain the whole world and lose his life" forever?

It may be profitable for us, who rejoice in redeeming love, to ask ourselves, what have I done the past year as an offering of gratitude for this love to my poor soul, justly condemned for transgression to everlasting death? What is the record of my doings the past year? How will it appear when the books shall be opened to determine the destinies of accountable men? Not merely life or death, but also, whether the reaping of the glories of Immortality is to be bountiful or sparing, according to our sowing. We have talked about "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." What have we done, and what are we now doing, in preparation to "enter in through the gates into the City" of the great King, to see him as he is and be like him and with him forever? What have we done to save our kindred, our neighbors, and dying men with whom we had intercourse, from being "cast into the lake of fire" which is the second death? Has the Son of the Blessed any more trophies of his redeeming love through our instrumentality? Has he himself become more precious to our hearts by the exercise of a holier faith and nearer and sweeter communion with him and with our Father in heaven? Has the blessing of the poor ready to perish, relieved by our charity, rested upon us? Have the sorrows of the afflicted been alleviated by our sympathizing friendship?

The past is gone. Improved or misimproved, not a moment can be recalled. The future is with Him who inhabiteth Eternity. The present moment is all we can call our own, given us to improve better than the past. O for divine grace to help us to do it!

Dear reader, among the number of whom it is recorded, "This year thou shalt die," our names may stand. Are we prepared for the summons? If we have the "good hope through grace," let us know the time, that "it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." "Blessed is that servant whom when his Lord cometh he shall find" doing his Master's will.

HENRY GREW.

In thy dealings with men be impartial and just; and do unto them as thou would'st they should do unto thee.

Longing for the Advent.

The Church has commenced anew the circle of her sacred seasons. The Christian year has already begun. The solemn hours of Advent are even now spent; and the natal hymn, sung by angels over the plains of Bethlehem, has been again caught up and sent back to heaven by millions of human hearts, rejoicing that unto them "is born a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." And now the Church will accompany her incarnate Lord through all the scenes of his great humility; from the wilderness' conflict and Bethany's sorrow and Gethsemmane's agony to Calvary's uplifted cross, kneeling there with meek faith before "that miracle of time, God's own sacrifice complete." She will keep the holy Sabbath of his rest in the sealed sepulchre, and with outbursting anthems celebrate his rising conqueror of death and spoiler of its kingdom, and stand with adoring eyes, as fading from her sight, he ascends back to the throne of the majesty on high, and hear the thrilling promise of the angel, that "this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." What a glorious close is this of the manifestation of God's only begotten Son! It begins with the stoop from the eternal throne; it ends with the glorification. It begins with the manger; it ends with the opening heavens. It begins with the worship of the Magi at the feet of an infant in an humble cottage at Bethlehem; it ends with kneeling believers, gazing into the everlasting mansions, after their ascended Lord, who, in words of blessed promise, shall appear again with power and great glory, and establish his eternal and glorious kingdom.

It is this second Advent for which the sacred volume, wherein is recorded the first, closes in earnest entreaty. It is the bright hope which has animated believing hearts through the long line of Christian centuries. The Church has ever stood looking forward into the future, watching and waiting for that advent of her Lord, when he shall come not as before "in great humility," in his infinite condescension laying aside his riches and humbling himself to our humanity; not as before in the low estate of a poor infant, differing from all others only in the hardness of his pillow, but in his own glory, and with all the holy angels encircling him and bearing him on to the throne of his kingdom; not to the assembling of a few shepherds, but to the congregation of all his saints, to witness the sublime consummation of his redemptive work. The Church through the long history of her humiliation and conflict patiently waits the period of his public triumph as the hour of her enthronement also.

This promise of the Lord's coming formed a larger element in the teachings of the apostles than we at first are apt to perceive. Faint as they often were, wearied, perplexed, troubled on every side, dragged before judges, imprisoned, stoned, killed, they still clung to this animating hope. They preached it in their sermons and wrote it in their letters, holding it forth, now as a warning against all sloth and disloyalty, and now as an inspiration in all service and suffering. Again and again their word to those who endured with them the same fight of afflictions was to hold steadfast to the end, for at the bright appearing of the Lord their sorrow would turn to joy, their plaints to praise; their painful struggle would issue in perfect peace, their present warfare in final victory. St. Paul constantly animates his converts with this glorious hope. "When Christ who is our life shall appear," he writes to one and another of the churches which he had gathered, "then shall we also appear with him in glory;" "for our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like his own glorious body." Nay, it is for this hour, which shall also be the manifestation of the sons of God, that the earnest expectation of the creature is waiting, groaning, and travailing in pain till then. St. Peter announces also the same expectation for the comfort of believers under the pressure of their most grievous afflictions and sharpest temptations; exhortating them to rejoice "that the trial of their faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." And again, "Beloved think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's suffering; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." And St. John, though he, in so loving a spirit teaches the present blessed communion of the believer with the Father and the Son, regards it still as an introduction only to the closer fellowship which shall yet be. "Little children," he exhorts, "Abide in Christ, that when he shall appear, we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming." And how does he quicken the longing for that hour in every pious heart, when he writes, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." These are but a few of the passages that might be quoted to show how full are the apostolic writings of this great hope.

This, then, the bright appearing of the Lord, is the longing expectation of the Church. The Bride waits the Bridegroom's coming. For this she would hold every believing heart on the watch and ready to enter with her to the marriage supper. And who has not felt its quickening power? However close may be our union with the Lord now, it is to be regarded as a separation, compared with that perfect union with him, when faith shall be turned to sight, and we are with him where he is. And if faith, as one well says, in its real nature, is nothing else than the veiled eye, how shall we not long for the hour when the veil shall be drawn aside and with a clear vision we shall gaze upon the ineffable glory? If now we see that glory of the Lord only as through a glass, who will not aspire to see face to face and eye to eye? Yes, and what signifies this seeing in the glass, if that which appears there, as in twilight, is not one day to break upon us in all its transcendent brightness? Prisoners of hope, we are called now, and we patiently abide the restraint, because we know that the Lord is near and our deliverance is at hand. Soldiers of Christ are, we know, standing in our armor and enduring all needful hardnesses, for we know it is the time of conflict and suffering now, but the victory is sure, the enemy cannot prevail; and we can wait till the appointed hour, when he shall reign whose right it is to reign, Lord of lords, and King of kings, and our voices with "the great voices in heaven" shall swell the triumph-song, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Who feels not the inspiration of such a bright hope? Who can help longing and praying, when he regards his own personal experiences, or looks out upon the throes and convulsions of the disordered and unquiet world around him, for that hour, so long prophesied and waited for, when all that is incomplete shall attain its perfection, when every discord shall be resolved into harmony, every holy desire find full satisfaction; and our faith, which to the children of the world appears as an offence or a folly, shall be justified in the sight of the whole world? Who can help breathing, when he reads his glorious prophecies yet to be fulfilled, and the precious promises yet to be realized, and studies the signs of the times which seem to declare the ripening of the divine counsels, the earnest supplication that the Lord may soon come and bring his mediatorial work to its sublime consummation?

But it is sometimes feared that there is danger in the indulging of this bright expectation. Its tendency is thought to make us careless or impatient; to damp our zeal in Christian enterprise, and give us over to day dreams and idle reveries. And doubtless the danger is not wholly a fictitious one. There may be those who in their conduct and language have given too great occasion for the suspicion. But it is a danger which lies near every great truth. The grandest doctrines of our faith have close beside them the most dangerous errors. They may all be perverted to the falsest issues. But they stand as truths still, not to be gainsaid or concealed because the weak, sinful heart misconstrues or distorts them. They are the good seed of the kingdom, though after it is sown, the enemy comes and sows his tares with it. So with the hope and longing for the appearance of the Lord, the danger which lies close beside it, is a quietness which falls into listlessness, or idle fancies which lead to sad delusions. The history of the doctrine abundantly proves its besetting dangers. But it is not for that reason to be abandoned or neglected. It must not be displaced from its true position in the teaching of the Christian Church. The comfort and inspiration which it breathes cannot be disregarded in the rightly dividing of the word of truth. It forms as we have seen a large element in the Apostle's doctrine. It wrought in them as a continual inspiration amid all their exhausting labors and fearful sufferings for the gospel's sake. It was in their stern admonitions against all sluggishness, and in their earnest appeals to the believer's [illegible] in proclaiming everywhere the unsearchable riches of God's grace while it is a day of salvation. It was a bright and joyful hope, as they offered it, only to the diligent laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Wearied they might be, and saddened under the pressure of their burdens, bruised and wounded in their long strife with the adversary, and sometimes quite cast down at the apparent fruitlessness of their most faithful labors. Still they must occupy till he come, knowing that he will surely come, though he tarry, for his promise is, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." How can it be but that they who are most under the power of this hope should be the most efficient agents in the service of Christ and his Church? They can rest who see no vision beckoning them forward, to whom all things remain the same as when the fathers fell asleep, who feel no interest in the unfolding signs of the times, and make a mock of all ardent hope and earnest enthusiasm. They may perceive no occasion for zeal. They may keep aloof from all active enterprises in the cause of the gospel, and smite off all appeals to their sympathetic co-operation. They may be for no movement, no aggression, no advance or forced marches, saying, "There is no haste; the Lord delayeth his coming." But it cannot be so with those who are inspired with the vision of the things that shall be, and are "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." All Christian enterprises interest them. All labor in the service of their Master is dear to them. They love to see the army break up its encampments and go forward to new conquests in the name of the Lord. It is from their lips and hearts that the prayer is breathed with deepest fervor and desire, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And though the Lord still delay and no voice heralds his coming, they know that it is because his work is not yet finished, the number of the redeemed not yet complete, the hosts not all gathered. It is in mercy that he tarries; and they must not only watch to be themselves ready, but labor unweariedly that his long-suffering mercy may swell the number of voices out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, which shall join in the hour of his final triumph in the holy ascription, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing." That hour is no dream to please an idle fancy in silent reverie and private seclusion; it is a reality to inspire the heart with all energy in the active labors which Christ has appointed for his Church. It does not relax the sinews of the soul in despondency for the little already accomplished, but braces them to the utmost for the much yet to be effected. The most efficient workmen for Christ's sake and the gospel's from the Apostle's day to our own, are those who watch and pray most earnestly for his coming again in all his glorious majesty. * *

Whenever he shall come, it shall be as a thief in the night, at an hour when we think not. All things will seem to remain as they were since the fathers fell asleep. Mountains and seas, empires and dominions, cities and towns, with all the multifarious occupations and industries of men, with marrying and giving in marriage, feasts and gayeties; all things around us may seem fixed as in the years gone by. But in a moment the dream of the night shall be broken at the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye forth to meet him!" Blessed will be those whose lamps are trimmed and burning! They shall enter with him to the supper; and then, the door will be shut. Right and true, then, is the constant longing for the second advent of our Lord. Well does one write, "Nature and grace alike proclaim a glorified Messiah as indispensable to complete their appointed course. Nature, through all her regions cries aloud for him who is to rectify her unwilling disorders, to repair her shattered structures, to restore her oppressed energies, to vindicate her voice of conscience long despised, her sublime testimony to the Creator, so long questioned or overlooked. But what is even this to the demand of grace for the coming of him, who is not only "the great God," but "our Savior?" If the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain for the manifestation of the sons of God, what shall be the desires of the sons of God themselves? What shall be their ardor to realize that "liberty of the children of God," of which so great things are spoken; to behold their own lowliness glorified in the glory of the man of Nazareth; their humble labors recognized by the approval of a God once more manifest in the flesh, their persevering faith vindicated, their hope consummated, their charity brightened into a reward eternal and infinite? They rejoice to think, that, as a humiliated Redeemer came first to point us the path of humiliation, so must a glorified Redeemer point us the path to glory; that the Captain of our salvation, who bore the cross in front of his army of believers, must come to teach them also how to wear the crown. It is by the recollections of the marvels of his mercy that he would attract us to see in his approaching the advent of one, who, if mighty [illegible] thus in every heart and soul to move the prayer with which, as if to bind them both forever in our thoughts, the volume that records the first advent closes, anticipating, desiring, beseeching the second: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"—Church Monthly.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

From the Worcester Conference I went home to recruit and get my financial affairs in shape, having received money from Bro. Adams to settle up the remainder of the campmeeting bills, which was a great relief. Finding business, in repairing a saw mill and running it awhile, brought old times up so fresh I almost concluded I would commence business again; but my tools were gone and scattered, and a job slipped through my fingers, and I dumped.

Having received an invitation to preach in Conn., I started first for Cheshire St., the old battle ground, where we fought some hard battles five years ago. Found some holding on. Some got foot-sore and stopped, not wholly deserting the ranks. But the sound of the bugle and rattling hoofs of the war-horse brought out nearly the whole company on Sunday, and we had a good time in talking over the prospect of our campaign, while some from Magog's camp got liberty to attend our meeting. They were very civil while we went through our manual exercises. The old soldiers still understand handling the sword. Had a good drill all day, especially Sunday eve. Instead of going one mile after meeting up to Bro. Woodford's, I staid with Bro. Baker and wife, who had lately got revived and were doing well.

Called on a new family (to me) that had come from West Haven. Found them belonging to a volunteer company of Unionists, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. This gave me good quarters for Monday—a rainy day. As they were old-fashioned people and lived in old style, and in an old-fashioned 30 by 40 feet house, I accepted an invitation to stay all night. I had a good night's rest in my bed-room 30 by 40 feet, a plenty of wholesome air perfumed with corn, apples, etc., which made it pleasant for me. In the night it snowed, and cleared off cold. The wind blew, and the rattling of clapboards and windows, the scraping of the limbs of the century maple on the roof woke me, still finding plenty of good air and some snow in my bedroom. I had a good laugh, thanking God for the return of old times. When I was a boy I slept in just such a place. This carried me back in imagination forty years. In the morning something was said about Bro. Hastings having a meeting in Southington, about five miles from there. There was good sleighing, but no sleigh or sled to go with. After breakfast I went into the old kitchen, and there I had another good laugh. It seemed like the days of Adam and Eve. The old kitchen, with the seven feet fire-place, put me in mind of building a sled in just such a place a number of years ago. I proposed to Bro. Wheeler to build a fire, and I would help him make a sled to attend Horaces meeting with. It was agreed upon, and a general clearing out was begun by Bro. Phelps and myself, while Bro. W. was looking up something for the sled. We made a nice fire, with a back log six feet long, and a forestick seven for a foundation. It lasted till we had completed the sled, which we did in time for the meeting. The Lord was in the meeting by his Spirit, and some ten or twelve good testimonies came in to back up the preaching, which is as necessary in getting up an interest as the small kindling was to get our green backlog on fire. Tuesday night I slept in my old bed-room again. This ended my pleasant visit in Cheshire Street.

Wednesday, I started for Southington to see how Horace was doing. Found him ready for an attack, the enemy well fortified with sectarianism, and few dared venture out of the entrenchments. We gave them one round apiece, and I left for Plainville. Found Bro. Morgan and family in good health and spirits. All seemed natural, except they had conformed to the "late to dinner" theory,—ate twice a day, at 9 A. M., and 2 P. M. This I could not stand—to go without eating nineteen hours! But they gave me some supper after meeting, as I told them I was afraid I should starve to death in my sleep. Here is another hard sectarian place. Only five ventured out the first eve. I found Bro. Grant had given them a dose of strong meat a few weeks before, and it had begun to operate on some, and they showed symptoms unfavorable to a bound papal theology; and this set the preachers to preaching against it, and many people dared not come out. They had got no pickets set when Bro. Grant was there; but he gave them such a sudden bombarding, that their watch was set in every direction. Our flag of truce allayed their fears, and a few ventured out the second or third meeting. They gave a favorable report, and Sunday we had a good audience. Conviction was manifest to all present, the Lord began to work, and we concluded to hold on the next week. Just then I received a letter from home, saying that my poor old mother was taken suddenly sick and failing very fast, and was anxious to see me. I left Monday morning for home.

HIRAM MUNGER.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 29, 1862.

Our Position.

Those who have been interested in the great event of the Lord's coming, and have watched the signs of the times for the last ten or twenty years, and have been living christian lives, are now rejoicing in the bright evidence of the speedy consummation of this hope. Although they have lost some friends and a good reputation, by believing these glorious truths, they feel abundantly rewarded by the sweet comfort afforded while looking for the coming of Jesus. Never was their prospect so bright and glorious as now. It now appears certain that we are right in our position, so far as the immediate personal coming of Christ is concerned. We are now out of the reach of "doubting castle." We may boldly say to all around, the Lord is coming soon, prepare to meet him in peace.

Those who see this great truth should let their light shine, and be very patient towards those who oppose, thus showing them that those who have the "blessed hope" can afford to bear scorn and contempt without a murmur, or even die at the stake, shouting glory. It may do for a man in error to get chafed and say sharp things, but he who walks in the truth should always be calm, "in meekness instructing those that oppose." Truth often suffers very seriously by the heat of its defenders. They show a want of the spirit of Christ, and that they are unfit to defend the cause of their blessed Master. A kind spirit manifested in the defense of the truths of christianity often weighs as much, or more, than the arguments. If your opponent talks loud and fast, then speak with great moderation and calmness, and you are sure to succeed, or, at least, all the success will be in your favor. The weak side is the one to make the bluster and use the hard sayings. When an athletic man is attacked by a small boy in a rage, it would ill become his dignity to be enraged at his little opponent. Knowing his strength, he need make no boisterous effort to meet his antagonist. He would appear very childish should he get excited and talk loud to such an opponent. If he had the dignity of a man, he would be calm, firm, kind and gentle, thus showing the little one his folly and weakness, and setting him a noble example to imitate.

So in relation to those who oppose the truth. Its defenders always have the advantage, and need not be excited to use bitter words; let the man in error do that part of the work. The man on the side of right has nothing to fear, for it always comes out right,—is sure to triumph, unless a wrong spirit is manifested. He who uses unkind words to defend his cause, ever shows his weakness, and the probability that he is on the wrong side.

We are evidently approaching a period, but little in the distance, when the children of the Lord, who hold fast to the Bible, and obey its precepts, will meet with much that will be calculated to chafe and irritate them, and cause them to say sharp things, unless they are watchful; for the enemies of God and his word are growing very bold and impudent, and our great enemy will spare no pains to attack us in such a way as to get us provoked, and thereby destroy our peace. Many have already fallen in this way, and others are almost gone. It is a sad sight to see the wrecks by the side of the pilgrim road to Mt. Zion.

Our position is like the man standing by the crater of Mt. Vesuvius, at the time it begins to roar, smoke, boil, and cast out its melted lava. If he tarries another moment, destruction is sure. Such is the state of the world now; and our only hope of safety is to fly at once to Christ. Our position is like Noah's a few days before the flood, and like Lot's the evening he entertained the angels the night before the destruction of the cities of the plain. Any league we may now make with the world may prove our eternal ruin. We must come out and be separate, if we expect to be ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb. Half-hearted, faint resolutions are not sufficient for these times.

Our present position is one of great peril, more emphatically so, from the fact that but few see their danger. If all were awake to their critical situation, the aspect would be much brighter for the church. As it is, the masses of professors are like a blind man walking upon the brink of an awful precipice. It is enough to make one's blood run chill to see their danger and carelessness. But this is only another sign of the times. Thus it was in the days of Noah and Lot, and thus it is to be at the time when the Son of man is revealed. "Worse and worse" is the order; which shows what kind of progress the world is making, and will make from the present to the end. We see no ground to hope for any better times till Jesus comes. Let us, then, prepare for the worst, and hold fast the profession of our faith, shrinking from no cross or duty, till the Lord comes to give the crown of life to all the faithful ones. Our work is earnest, but the result is sure. Our position, relative to the speedy coming of Christ, is most certainly right. Let each be watchful and prayerful, that they may be ready for the great day of the Lord. [illegible]

Infidelity.

It is truly alarming to see the amount of infidelity among the people at the present time. And one fact should be remembered, to wit, after it once gets hold it seldom lets go; in other words, its progress is onward, both in individuals and nations. When an infidel tide begins to set in upon a people, we may be sure of its steady advance. When we look at the rapid strides of infidel sentiments for the last ten years, the future of our world before the coming of Christ has a very gloomy aspect. The Lord foresaw this state of things, and moved the prophet to write "that in the last days" men "shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Some five years since, the New York Independent stated that "four fifths" of our earnest-minded young men were decidedly skeptical. Since that time, infidelity has made gigantic strides; still we may expect to see it advance more rapidly to the end of the present dispensation.

We have already come where it is no disgrace to a young man to reject the Bible. It is indeed thought to be an evidence of his smartness, and strength of intellect. He is one to put forward in the great enterprises of the day. He is considered "a man for the times." A man is thought to be a bigot who believes the Bible as an inspired book from the Lord; a "weak-minded," superstitious individual, unfit to hold any prominent position in society. His own children treat him with contempt, and ridicule the word of the Lord in his presence.

Infidelity now wears a bold front; hence the importance of a corresponding firmness and boldness on the part of the children of the Lord. Let us remember, if we are ashamed of Jesus or his "words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels."

We are satisfied that but few are aware of the amount of infidelity which is concealed under the cloak of religion, besides that which is open and avowed. We rarely find a professor of religion, who is not looking for the coming of Christ, who is not filled with more or less doubts in relation to the truth of portions of the Bible; and when he begins to doubt some parts, it is not long before he is drifting away from Christ and the road to life.

Now is the time to hold fast to the "sure word of prophecy." If this be given up all is darkness and uncertainty. Should the mariner on a dangerous coast throw away his chart, compass, and helm, he would not be more unwise than the man who neglects the prophecies in these last days. They are the only source of light to illumine our pathway to the land of glory.

As but few take heed to the prophetic word, it follows as a result that only a corresponding few are walking in the light. There is no avoiding this conclusion. If a lamp be given to light a darkened room, and then be put out, or laid away, those in the room must be left in darkness. We are assured that the "word of prophecy" is like a "light that shineth in a dark place"; consequently without it, we must be in darkness; hence every infidel is walking like a blind man in a most dangerous way, or as one in darkness without a guide. Thank the Lord for the light that now beams forth from his holy word to light the pathway of Zion's pilgrims, whose weary journey will soon be ended in everlasting glory.—G.

Our Country.

When we look over our once happy country, and contrast the present with the past, the sight is a sad one. Brother is at war with brother, father with son, each using every possible effort to secure the destruction of the other. No wars are more terrible than civil ones, when two parts of the same social compact take up arms against each other; thus causing once intimate friends and near relatives to meet in bloody conflict on the battle-field. The sword never produces heart-felt peace in such cases. The wounds thus made are never healed while the parties live. It is not till generations unborn become the actors, that friendship returns between the descendants of the belligerent parties; hence we could look for no more sweet peace in our day, even if Jesus were not coming to end the rude strife.

As the last state of the nations is one of anger and preparation for war, instead of love and peace, if there was no other evidence that we are near the end of this dispensation, than the present state of the nations, there would be strong ground for bright hopes of soon seeing Jesus; but when we look at the great amount of evidence pouring in from every direction to show that we are now in "the time of the end;" we see no ground for doubt in the matter, unless we reject the plain teachings of the Bible. We do not see how it can be possible to have such harmony of the Scriptures without the occurrence of the event which these signs indicate; for the very prophecies which prove the truth of the Bible by their consecutive fulfillment in the past history of the nations, prove at the same time that the next great prophetic event is the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven. We can see no chance for a failure, no room for doubts. Then let us stand fast, and faithfully discharge every duty in the fear of the Lord. Our country calls not for cowards, but brave men; so Christ has no room in his army for "the fearful and unbelieving;" their portion is not with the saints. We admire bravery, even in a bad cause; but in a good one like the christian warfare, it is sublime. My brother, venture all for the right, if every man and woman is opposed.—G.

Longing for the Advent.

The article on our first page having this heading, is, if we mistake not, from the pen of the Rev. J. I. T. Cooledge of South Boston, who, by the by, is not the only minister of the Episcopal Church in this city who is awake to this sublime subject. Dr. Tyng's recent publications on "The Coming Kingdom," a series of articles which he published while editor of the Protestant Churchman, and in which he distinctly avows his faith in the speedy advent of our Lord, has, to our personal knowledge, stirred up some of the first minds to think of these things. While recently waiting upon some friends at the rooms of the "Young Men's Christian Association," in the Tremont Temple, we were surprised upon looking up to notice a large placard, bearing simply the following words: "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—Jas. 5: 8.

By these and similar facts, found in every direction, we are confirmed in the faith that not only will the faithful Bride of Christ be found "longing for the Advent" of her Lord, but as children of the light and of the day, they will not be in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief. 1 Thess. 5: 4. It is a fact that gives us much pleasure to know, that, among those looking and longing for the advent, are to be found many who are most eminent in their several denominations for their piety. Among these might be mentioned the late Bishop Henshaw of Rhode Island, Dr. Tyng, and the venerable McIlvane; Muler, the man of faith amongst the Plymouth brethren, and Mrs. Palmer of the Methodist denomination, &c. &c. And well may it be so. This is the time to "lift up your heads and look up, for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 28.

"The clouds at length are breaking,
The dawn will soon appear,
And signs there's no mistaking,
Proclaim Messiah near."—M.

Dr. Cumming on the Prospect of the Churches.—Probably there are few men who have studied more thoroughly the prophecies in relation to the signs of the times, than has Dr. John Cumming. And the following, while it give us the view taken by a great hearted and godly man concerning the Churches, is the more interesting for being an exposition of that oftentimes perplexing question as to what we are to understand by the cities of the nations falling. Rev. 16: 19. Yet that Dr. Cumming's judgment or exposition is infallible we do not think.—M.

"In the Church of England, with all its division, there is a body of devout, spiritual-minded men, that have no precedent in any other church. I rejoice that it is so. I think everything is becoming earnest and real; and as the coming of Christ nears, all men will be in earnest, either in God's or the devil's service. . . . The cities of the nations are also predicted to fall. Now I believe that as 'the great city' was the politico-ecclesiastical institution of the Church of Rome, the cities of the nations are our established churches. I do not say I wish them to fall; I have no sympathy with those who try to subvert them; for I believe, in my conscience, a national church to be a great ordinance of God, and that it is duty to maintain and support it; but too plainly the Church of England, as an ecclesiastical institution, trembles on the very verge of its disorganization. The Church of Scotland suffered a great expenditure of its strength in 1843, when a number of excellent men supposed it their duty to secede from it; both churches are at this moment weakened considerably, and I believe, as civil and endowed institutions, they will be wickedly but hopelessly broken up. All churches are about to be equally dissolved; Methodism is fast breaking up; Independency is to be shattered; and the Baptists will not be spared. This great disorganization of existing institutions is the disintegration of the component elements, in order to form a new and glorious combination—a church where there shall be no more division, where there shall be neither Churchmen nor Dissenters, but Christ and Christian shall be all in all."

Archbishop Whateley.—Many of our readers familiar with the writings of Archbishop Whateley, particularly his work on "A Future State," will be interested to read the following:—M.

"A Congregationalist—Denham Smith—was a leader in the revival meetings in Dublin, and indeed is said to have been more influential than any other man. Prayer-meetings under his guidance were held in all parts of the city. Ministers of the Established Church took an active part in them, and in so doing were encouraged by the warm sympathy of Archbishop Whateley's family. Mr. Smith was invited to hold a prayer-meeting at the palace; which he did, the Archbishop excusing his own absence on the ground of official engagements. He is regarded as orthodox and evangelical in his views; but has from his earliest years devoted himself so much to purely intellectual pursuits, as to prejudice his standing in the view of his most active clergy. But all appreciate the devoted piety of his wife and daughters. One of his daughters was sent, by the advice of her physician, to spend the winter in Egypt for her health. On arriving she at once got up a school for the native children, hiring teachers, paying expenses, and [illegible]

Editorial Notice.

Bro. L. Reimer has just issued a second German tract, containing an examination of the following subjects:—"The resurrection of the dead," (both just and unjust.) He shows in this tract that both the holy men of the old, as well as those of the new testament, Christ himself included, hoped for and believed in eternal life only by and through a resurrection of the body.

Orders can be sent to Rev. L. Reimer, 722 Chesnut St., care of Lee & Walker, music dealers, or to Pleasant St., care of Bro. Chas. Sutton, Manayunk, or to this office.—Price 3 cents single, 25 cts. per doz., $2.00 per hundred.

We hope our brethren will try to scatter these tracts among their German friends. Great good may be accomplished by so doing. Let us all do what we can to scatter the truth among all classes, that some may be saved.—G.

Discussion of the Sabbath.

Our late discussion, in Boston, with Eld. Langarl of Cincinnati, on the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath, was of considerable interest. Several, who had been troubled with doubts, had them all removed by the plain teachings of the Bible, and are more than ever resolved to be Christ's instead of Moses' disciples. They have concluded to leave the law—the "schoolmaster,"—and follow Jesus, preferring the new to the old covenant; the liberty of the gospel, to the bondage of the law.—G

To the Children.—Some articles for your department have been received, but they were too late for this week's paper. You will see them two weeks hence.—G.

From Eld. I. E. Jones.

For the gratification of very numerous friends who are so frequently inquiring for Bro. Jones, we take the liberty of making the following extract received in a letter from him to the writer, bearing date Morris, Grundy Co., Ill., Jan. 14, 1862.—M.

"The fact is, for several years past Advent writers have seemed to be very hollow; they seemed to have reiterated cardinal truths until those truths had lost their freshness to their own minds and become stale. I am glad to see that both the Herald and Crisis are renewing their 'first love.' I have preached considerably for a few months past on the preparations for the great battle of the day of God Almighty. I think the storm began in '48. Then came the Crimean war, in which over 400,000 perished; next the great East Indian war; then the Italian war; now our own great, and greater war; and soon Europe will be all ablaze, involving 'the kings of the rising sun.' Thus war follows war, rising higher and becoming more boisterous as we near the shore. There is a dark future before us, 'a day of darkness and gloominess, as the clouds spread upon the mountains.' Our rulers seem to be seized by a fatal blindness. The ancients had an adage, 'Whom the gods design to destroy, they first make mad.'"

For the Crisis.

The Things which cannot be Shaken.

In this time of commotion among nations and all other organizations, there is but one foundation upon which any political, moral, or religious structure can be built which cannot be shaken, and this is the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone. And it is a lamentable fact that many who profess to build on this foundation, do it so inefficiently that any slight wind or internal commotion splits the building, and the occupants divide and undertake to build on a foundation of their own conception, not giving heed to the rules of the Great Master builder. When will the believers in the speedy advent of Christ be united in doctrine, in fellowship, in prayer, in labor, and become a body perfect in symmetry, a peculiar people, zealous of good works? Will the hopes of the sincere worshipers and order-loving believers ever be realized, when all who are professedly waiting for the return of the Nobleman will be, in all the important doctrines and duties of the Bible, a unit?

We are exhorted to mark those which cause dissensions, and if this caution was ever needed it is at this time, especially among those who build so slightly that any puff of false doctrine, or selfishness among the flock, causes a storm and almost a wreck of the whole structure. Watch and pray.

Now in Press a New Work,

entitled "The Saint's Harvest," being an exposition of the words of Daniel 12: 11–12,—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." It is the object of the writer to show from Scripture,—1. What is meant by the daily sacrifice. 2. The holy place. 3. Desolation, or to be desolate. 4. The abomination that maketh desolate. 5. What is meant by the abomination standing in the holy place, and by whom was it set up? 6. At what time was the sacrifice spoken of taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up? The work will contain about forty-eight pages, and can be furnished at $4.00 per hundred.

Life from the Dead.

For the information of the numerous readers of the Crisis who feel a deep interest in the question whether the wicked dead will live again, I wish to state that the arguments employed in "Retribution" to prove that "conscious punishment after death" awaits the wicked, and that the revealed penalty for sin denotes a miserable dying as really as it does being dead, are receiving somewhat thorough attention in successive issues of the Bible Examiner. Three articles in review of "Retribution", have appeared in the numbers for January and February, and others will be given hereafter. It is believed that a candid perusal of these Examiner articles (published and to appear) would convince a numerous class that, if the doctrine of Life only in Christ is capable of being overthrown with scriptural weapons, the book that will "hit the nail on the head" effectually has yet to be written. This is given as my opinion, but what I greatly desire is, that all impartial readers of "Retribution" who can do so, shall carefully peruse what is offered in review of that work. In a word—examine both sides, and then judge. May God guide us into all truth.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Burnham.

Bro. Grant:—Your letter to me, containing the intelligence of the death of Bro. Howell, made my spirit sad. But there is with us a bright and glowing expectation of a blest and joyous re-union with those we love, as we loved him, in the "better country." Those who knew Bro. Howell best loved him most. His memory will ever be dear to many of us. Peace to his quiet slumber until the sunshine of immortal beauty shall beam glorious on his waking, and he hail with delight the glad seraphim's chant. Must not the heart of one who fully believes in the literal resurrection of the dead be fain to sing in almost mournful song, in view of our frailty,

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

I say almost mournful song, because there is a sweet strain of victory in the song, so otherwise mournful, in that hint so plainly given in it, that the reign of the tyrant shall not be forever.

O, how many members of Jesus' bride has the enemy kissed into paleness and drawn down into silence! When will the great Deliverer come, and breathe the bloom of eternal health upon their cheeks again? We have waited for him, lo! these many years, while friends like leaves in autumn have fallen around us, but yet he cometh not. We have groaned, sighed, prayed, and wept for him, but yet he cometh not. We have turned our eyes, fevered with sanctified anxiety, toward the blue heavens again and again, to see his "sign," but yet he cometh not. We have told the story of his coming over and over to both friend and foe, amid persecution, scorn and shame, but yet he cometh not to justify us. Shall we sink in sorrow, and despair in grief? No, verily!

Our Redeemer will at length—and that too right soon—relieve our burdened hearts and wipe our tears away. His promises are as sure as the sun, and moon, and stars of God. His truth is more firm and stable than the everlasting hills. Our land shall be prepared. Our city shall be revealed. Our rest shall be sure. Our crowns shall be given. On the great question of our faith my mind can find no place to repose a doubt. I can say unto God, I have never wavered or faltered.

Phila., Jan. 20th, 1862.

From P. S. W. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—When I last wrote I was recruiting at Cascade, Iowa. My protracted effort lasted four weeks. In the time I preached forty-five sermons and baptized thirteen. There are more yet to be immersed. Over twenty were added to the church, and a good prospect for more when I return again. Now, Bro. Grant, I would not thus write for a mere puff, for I dislike that, but, as Bro. Blain said, I think that reports of the success of truth do more to encourage than so much exhortation, which becomes monotonous. It is cheering to the pioneer of the great West to see men fall in with such truth, that God has pleased to reveal to us at this time when most needed. My last year or two labors have mostly spent with the people of towns where large congregations can be had. I see where I have missed it, by spending so much time in the by places, thinking that it was only the poor that will receive the truth, but I know that the people are famishing for the pure gospel. In the above place, some of the first-class people have taken hold,—men who were noble-hearted, but could not see the consistency of the doctrines as preached, only waiting to see things aright. Men to be charmed with the gospel want it as pure as it can be had.

I am now preparing to start for Floyd and Butler counties. What pleasure it would be to remain home; but the Macedonian cry presses me on every side. The care of the church and the toils of traveling will soon be over; if the Master don't come, I shall have done my work. None but the pioneer preachers know what it is to face the cold storms of the North-west. Pray for me.

Strawberry Point, Jan. 16, '62.

is proclaiming everywhere the unsearchable riches of God's grace while it is a day of salvation. It was a bright and joyful hope, as they offered it, only to the diligent laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Wearied they might be, and saddened under the pressure of their burdens, bruised and wounded in their long strife with the adversary, and sometimes quite cast down at the apparent fruitlessness of their most faithful labors. Still they must occupy till he come, knowing that he will surely come, though he tarry, for his promise is, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." How can it be but that they who are most under the power of this hope should be the most efficient agents in the service of Christ and his Church? They can rest who see no vision beckoning them forward, to whom all things remain the same as when the fathers fell asleep, who feel no interest in the unfolding signs of the times, and make a mock of all ardent hope and earnest enthusiasm. They may perceive no occasion for zeal. They may keep aloof from all active enterprises in the cause of the gospel, and smite off all appeals to their sympathetic co-operation. They may be for no movement, no aggression, no advance or forced marches, saying, "There is no haste; the Lord delayeth his coming." But it cannot be so with those who are inspired with the vision of the things that shall be, and are "looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." All Christian enterprises interest them. All labor in the service of their Master is dear to them. They love to see the army break up its encampments and go forward to new conquests in the name of the Lord. It is from their lips and hearts that the prayer is breathed with deepest fervor and desire, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And though the Lord still delay and no voice heralds his coming, they know that it is because his work is not yet finished, the number of the redeemed not yet complete, the hosts not all gathered. It is in mercy that he tarries; and they must not only watch to be themselves ready, but labor unweariedly that his long-suffering mercy may swell the number of voices out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, which shall join in the hour of his final triumph in the holy ascription, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches and wisdom and strength and honor and glory and blessing." That hour is no dream to please an idle fancy in silent reverie and private seclusion; it is a reality to inspire the heart with all energy in the active labors which Christ has appointed for his Church. It does not relax the sinews of the soul in despondency for the little already accomplished, but braces them to the utmost for the much yet to be effected. The most efficient workmen for Christ's sake and the gospel's from the Apostle's day to our own, are those who watch and pray most earnestly for his coming again in all his glorious majesty.

Whenever he shall come, it shall be as a thief in the night, at an hour when we think not. All things will seem to remain as they were since the fathers fell asleep. Mountains and seas, empires and dominions, cities and towns, with all the multifarious occupations and industries of men, with marrying and giving in marriage, feasts and gayeties; all things around us may seem fixed as in the years gone by. But in a moment the dream of the night shall be broken at the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye forth to meet him!" Blessed will be those whose lamps are trimmed and burning! They shall enter with him to the supper; and then, the door will be shut. Right and true, then, is the constant longing for the second advent of our Lord. Well does one write, "Nature and grace alike proclaim a glorified Messiah as indispensable to complete their appointed course. Nature, through all her regions cries aloud for him who is to rectify her unwilling disorders, to repair her shattered structures, to restore her oppressed energies, to vindicate her voice of conscience long despised, her sublime testimony to the Creator, so long questioned or overlooked. But what is even this to the demand of grace for the coming of him, who is not only "the great God," but "our Savior?" If the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain for the manifestation of the sons of God, what shall be the desires of the sons of God themselves? What shall be their ardor to realise that "liberty of the children of God," of which so great things are spoken; to behold their own lowliness glorified in the glory of the man of Nazareth; their humble labors recognized by the approval of a God once more manifest in the flesh, their persevering faith vindicated, their hope consummated, their charity brightened into a reward eternal and infinite? They rejoice to think, that, as a humiliated Redeemer came first to point us the path of humiliation, so must a glorified Redeemer point us the path to glory; that the Captain of our salvation, who bore the cross in front of his army of believers, must come to teach them also how to wear the crown. It is by [illegible]

thus in every heart and soul to move the prayer with which, as if to bind them both forever in our thoughts, the volume that records the FIRST advent closes, anticipating, desiring, beseeching the SECOND: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"—Church Monthly.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

From the Worcester Conference I went home to recruit and get my financial affairs in shape, having received money from Bro. Adams to settle up the remainder of the campmeeting bills, which was a great relief. Finding business, in repairing a saw mill and running it awhile, brought old times up so fresh I almost concluded I would commence business again; but my tools were gone and scattered, and a job slipped through my fingers, and I dumped.

Having received an invitation to preach in Conn., I started first for Cheshire St., the old battle ground, where we fought some hard battles five years ago. Found some holding on. Some got foot-sore and stopped, not wholly deserting the ranks. But the sound of the bugle and rattling hoofs of the war-horse brought out nearly the whole company on Sunday, and we had a good time in talking over the prospect of our campaign, while some from Magog's camp got liberty to attend our meeting. They were very civil while we went through our manual exercises. The old soldiers still understand handling the sword. Had a good drill all day, especially Sunday eve. Instead of going one mile after meeting up to Bro. Woodford's, I staid with Bro. Baker and wife, who had lately got revived and were doing well.

Called on a new family (to me) that had come from West Haven. Found them belonging to a volunteer company of Unionists, contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. This gave me good quarters for Monday—a rainy day. As they were old-fashioned people and lived in old style, and in an old-fashioned 30 by 40 feet house, I accepted an invitation to stay all night. I had a good night's rest in my bed-room 30 by 40 feet, a plenty of wholesome air perfumed with corn, apples, etc., which made it pleasant for me. In the night it snowed, and cleared off cold. The wind blew, and the rattling of clapboards and windows, the scraping of the limbs of the century maple on the roof woke me, still finding plenty of good air and some snow in my bedroom. I had a good laugh, thanking God for the return of old times. When I was a boy I slept in just such a place. This carried me back in imagination forty years. In the morning something was said about Bro. Hastings having a meeting in Southington, about five miles from there. There was good sleighing, but no sleigh or sled to go with. After breakfast I went into the old kitchen, and there I had another good laugh. It seemed like the days of Adam and Eve. The old kitchen, with the seven feet fire-place, put me in mind of building a sled in just such a place a number of years ago. I proposed to Bro. Wheeler to build a fire, and I would help him make a sled to attend Horaces meeting with. It was agreed upon, and a general clearing out was begun by Bro. Phelps and myself, while Bro. W. was looking up something for the sled. We made a nice fire, with a back log six feet long, and a forestick seven for a foundation. It lasted till we had completed the sled, which we did in time for the meeting. The Lord was in the meeting by his Spirit, and some ten or twelve good testimonies came in to back up the preaching, which is as necessary in getting up an interest as the small kindling was to get our green backlog on fire. Tuesday night I slept in my old bed-room again. This ended my pleasant visit in Cheshire Street.

Wednesday, I started for Southington to see how Horace was doing. Found him ready for an attack, the enemy well fortified with sectarianism, and few dared venture out of the entrenchments. We gave them one round apiece, and I left for Plainville. Found Bro. Morgan and family in good health and spirits. All seemed natural, except they had conformed to the "late to dinner" theory,—ate twice a day, at 9 A. M., and 2 P. M. This I could not stand—to go without eating nineteen hours! But they gave me some supper after meeting, as I told them I was afraid I should starve to death in my sleep. Here is another hard sectarian place. Only five ventured out the first eve. I found Bro. Grant had given them a dose of strong meat a few weeks before, and it had begun to operate on some, and they showed symptoms unfavorable to a bound papal theology; and this set the preachers to preaching against it, and many people dared not come out. They had got no pickets set when Bro. Grant was there; but he gave them such a sudden bombarding, that their watch was set in every direction. Our flag of truce allayed their fears, and a few ventured out the second or third meeting. They gave a favorable report, and Sunday we had a good audience. Conviction was manifest to all present, the Lord began to work, and we concluded to hold on the next week. Just then I received a letter from home, saying that my poor old mother was taken suddenly sick and failing very [illegible]

HIRAM MUNGER.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Jan. 29, 1862.

Our Position.

Those who have been interested in the great event of the Lord's coming, and have watched the signs of the times for the last ten or twenty years, and have been living christian lives, are now rejoicing in the bright evidence of the speedy consummation of this hope. Although they have lost some friends and a good reputation, by believing these glorious truths, they feel abundantly rewarded by the sweet comfort afforded while looking for the coming of Jesus. Never was their prospect so bright and glorious as now. It now appears certain that we are right in our position, so far as the immediate personal coming of Christ is concerned. We are now out of the reach of "doubting castle." We may boldly say to all around, the Lord is coming soon, prepare to meet him in peace.

Those who see this great truth should let their light shine, and be very patient towards those who oppose, thus showing them that those who have the "blessed hope" can afford to bear scorn and contempt without a murmur, or even die at the stake, shouting glory. It may do for a man in error to get chafed and say sharp things, but he who walks in the truth should always be calm, "in meekness instructing those that oppose." Truth often suffers very seriously by the heat of its defenders. They show a want of the spirit of Christ, and that they are unfit to defend the cause of their blessed Master. A kind spirit manifested in the defense of the truths of christianity often weighs as much, or more, than the arguments. If your opponent talks loud and fast, then speak with great moderation and calmness, and you are sure to succeed, or, at least, all the success will be in your favor. The weak side is the one to make the bluster and use the hard sayings. When an athletic man is attacked by a small boy in a rage, it would ill become his dignity to be enraged at his little opponent. Knowing his strength, he need make no boisterous effort to meet his antagonist. He would appear very childish should he get excited and talk loud to such an opponent. If he had the dignity of a man, he would be calm, firm, kind and gentle, thus showing the little one his folly and weakness, and setting him a noble example to imitate.

So in relation to those who oppose the truth. Its defenders always have the advantage, and need not be excited to use bitter words; let the man in error do that part of the work. The man on the side of right has nothing to fear, for it always comes out right,—is sure to triumph, unless a wrong spirit is manifested. He who uses unkind words to defend his cause, ever shows his weakness, and the probability that he is on the wrong side.

We are evidently approaching a period, but little in the distance, when the children of the Lord, who hold fast to the Bible, and obey its precepts, will meet with much that will be calculated to chafe and irritate them, and cause them to say sharp things, unless they are watchful, for the enemies of God and his word are growing very bold and impudent, and our great enemy will spare no pains to attack us in such a way as to get us provoked, and thereby destroy our peace. Many have already fallen in this way, and others are almost gone. It is a sad sight to see the wrecks by the side of the pilgrim road to Mt. Zion.

Our position is like the man standing by the crater of Mt. Vesuvius, at the time it begins to roar, smoke, boil, and cast out its melted lava. If he tarries another moment, destruction is sure. Such is the state of the world now; and our only hope of safety is to fly at once to Christ. Our position is like Noah's a few days before the flood, and like Lot's the evening he entertained the angels the night before the destruction of the cities of the plain. Any league we may now make with the world may prove our eternal ruin. We must come out and be separate, if we expect to be ready for the marriage supper of the Lamb. Half-hearted, faint resolutions are not sufficient for these times.

Our present position is one of great peril, more emphatically so, from the fact that but few see their danger. If all were awake to their critical situation, the aspect would be much brighter for the church. As it is, the masses of professors are like a blind man walking upon the brink of an awful precipice. It is enough to make one's blood run chill to see their danger and carelessness. But this is only another sign of the times. Thus it was in the days of Noah and Lot, and thus it is to be at the time when the Son of man is revealed. "Worse and worse" is the order; which shows what kind of progress the world is making, and will make from the present to the end. We see no ground to hope for any better times till Jesus comes. Let us, then, prepare for the worst, and hold fast the profession of our faith, shrinking from no cross or duty, till the Lord comes to give the crown of life to all the faithful ones. Our work is earnest, but the result is sure. Our position relative to the speedy coming of Christ is [illegible]

Infidelity.

It is truly alarming to see the amount of infidelity among the people at the present time. And one fact should be remembered, to wit, after it once gets hold it seldom lets go; in other words, its progress is onward, both in individuals and nations. When an infidel tide begins to set in upon a people, we may be sure of its steady advance. When we look at the rapid strides of infidel sentiments for the last ten years, the future of our world before the coming of Christ has a very gloomy aspect. The Lord foresaw this state of things, and moved the prophet to write "that in the last days" men "shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Some five years since, the New York Independent stated that "four fifths" of our earnest-minded young men were decidedly skeptical. Since that time, infidelity has made gigantic strides; still we may expect to see it advance more rapidly to the end of the present dispensation.

We have already come where it is no disgrace to a young man to reject the Bible. It is indeed thought to be an evidence of his smartness, and strength of intellect. He is one to put forward in the great enterprises of the day. He is considered "a man for the times." A man is thought to be a bigot who believes the Bible as an inspired book from the Lord; a "weak-minded," superstitious individual, unfit to hold any prominent position in society. His own children treat him with contempt, and ridicule the word of the Lord in his presence.

Infidelity now wears a bold front; hence the importance of a corresponding firmness and boldness on the part of the children of the Lord. Let us remember, if we are ashamed of Jesus or his "words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels."

We are satisfied that but few are aware of the amount of infidelity which is concealed under the cloak of religion, besides that which is open and avowed. We rarely find a professor of religion, who is not looking for the coming of Christ, who is not filled with more or less doubts in relation to the truth of portions of the Bible, and when he begins to doubt some parts, it is not long before he is drifting away from Christ and the road to life.

Now is the time to hold fast to the "sure word of prophecy." If this be given up all is darkness and uncertainty. Should the mariner on a dangerous coast throw away his chart, compass, and helm, he would not be more unwise than the man who neglects the prophecies in these last days. They are the only source of light to illumine our pathway to the land of glory.

As but few take heed to the prophetic word, it follows as a result that only a corresponding few are walking in the light. There is no avoiding this conclusion. If a lamp be given to light a darkened room, and then be put out, or laid away, those in the room must be left in darkness. We are assured that the "word of prophecy" is like a "light that shineth in a dark place"; consequently without it, we must be in darkness, hence every infidel is walking like a blind man in a most dangerous way, or as one in darkness without a guide. Thank the Lord for the light that now beams forth from his holy word to light the pathway of Zion's pilgrims, whose weary journey will soon be ended in everlasting glory.—O.

Our Country.

When we look over our once happy country, and contrast the present with the past, the sight is a sad one. Brother is at war with brother, father with son, each using every possible effort to secure the destruction of the other. No wars are more terrible than civil ones, when two parts of the same social compact take up arms against each other; thus causing once intimate friends and near relatives to meet in bloody conflict on the battle-field. The sword never produces heart-felt peace in such cases. The wounds thus made are never healed while the parties live. It is not till generations unborn become the actors, that friendship returns between the descendants of the belligerent parties; hence we could look for no more sweet peace in our day, even if Jesus were not coming to end the rude strife.

As the last state of the nations is one of anger and preparation for war, instead of love and peace, if there was no other evidence that we are near the end of this dispensation, than the present state of the nations, there would be strong ground for bright hopes of soon seeing Jesus; but when we look at the great amount of evidence pouring in from every direction to show that we are now in "the time of the end;" we see no ground for doubt in the matter, unless we reject the plain teachings of the Bible. We do not see how it can be possible to have such harmony of the Scriptures without the occurrence of the event which these signs indicate; for the very prophecies which prove the truth of the Bible by their consecutive fulfillment in the past history of the nations, prove at the same time that the next great prophetic event is the coming of Christ in [illegible] charge every duty in the fear of the Lord. Our country calls not for cowards, but brave men; so Christ has no room in his army for "the fearful and unbelieving;" their portion is not with the saints. We admire bravery, even in a bad cause; but in a good one like the christian warfare, it is sublime. My brother, venture all for the right, if every man and woman is opposed.—O.

Longing for the Advent.

The article on our first page having this heading, is, if we mistake not, from the pen of the Rev. J. L. T. Cooledge of South Boston, who, by the by, is not the only minister of the Episcopal Church in this city who is awake to this sublime subject. Dr. Tyng's recent publications on "The Coming Kingdom," a series of articles which he published while editor of the Protestant Churchman, and in which he distinctly avows his faith in the speedy advent of our Lord, has, to our personal knowledge, stirred up some of the first minds to think of these things. While recently waiting upon some friends at the rooms of the "Young Men's Christian Association," in the Tremont Temple, we were surprised upon looking up to notice a large placard, bearing simply the following words: "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."—Jas. 5: 8.

By these and similar facts, found in every direction, we are confirmed in the faith that not only will the faithful Bride of Christ be found "longing for the Advent" of her Lord, but as children of the light and of the day, they will not be in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief. 1 Thess. 5: 4. It is a fact that gives us much pleasure to know, that, among those looking and longing for the advent, are to be found many who are most eminent in their several denominations for their piety. Among these might be mentioned the late Bishop Henshaw of Rhode Island, Dr. Tyng, and the venerable McIlvane, Muler, the man of faith amongst the Plymouth brethren, and Mrs. Palmer of the Methodist denomination, &c. &c. And well may it be so. This is the time to "lift up your heads and look up, for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke 21: 28.

"The clouds at length are breaking,
The dawn will soon appear,
And signs there's no mistaking,
Proclaim Messiah near."—M.

DR. CUMMING ON THE PROSPECT OF THE CHURCHES.—Probably there are few men who have studied more thoroughly the prophecies in relation to the signs of the times, than has Dr. John Cumming. And the following, while it give us the view taken by a great hearted and godly man concerning the Churches, is the more interesting for being an exposition of that oftentimes perplexing question as to what we are to understand by the cities of the nations falling. Rev. 16: 19. Yet that Dr. Cumming's judgment or exposition is infallible we do not think.—M.

"In the Church of England, with all its division, there is a body of devout, spiritual-minded men, that have no precedent in any other church. I rejoice that it is so. I think everything is becoming earnest and real; and as the coming of Christ nears, all men will be in earnest, either in God's or the devil's service. . . . The cities of the nations are also predicted to fall. Now I believe that as 'the great city' was the politico-ecclesiastical institution of the Church of Rome, the cities of the nations are our established churches. I do not say I wish them to fall; I have no sympathy with those who try to subvert them; for I believe, in my conscience, a national church to be a great ordinance of God, and that it is duty to maintain and support it; but too plainly the Church of England, as an ecclesiastical institution, trembles on the very verge of its disorganization. The Church of Scotland suffered a great expenditure of its strength in 1843, when a number of excellent men supposed it their duty to secede from it; both churches are at this moment weakened considerably, and I believe, as civil and endowed institutions, they will be wickedly but hopelessly broken up. All churches are about to be equally dissolved; Methodism is fast breaking up; Independency is to be shattered; and the Baptists will not be spared. This great disorganization of existing institutions is the disintegration of the component elements, in order to form a new and glorious combination—a church where there shall be no more division, where there shall be neither Churchmen nor Dissenters, but Christ and Christian shall be all in all."

ARCHBISHOP WHATELEY.—Many of our readers familiar with the writings of Archbishop Whateley, particularly his work on "A Future State," will be interested to read the following:—M.

"A Congregationalist—Denham Smith—was a leader in the revival meetings in Dublin, and indeed is said to have been more influential than any other man. Prayer-meetings under his guidance were held in all parts of the city. Ministers of the Established Church took an active part in them, and in so doing were encouraged by the warm sympathy of Archbishop Whateley's family. Mr. Smith was invited to hold a prayer-meeting at the palace; which he did, the Archbishop excusing his own absence on the ground of official engagements. He is regarded as orthodox and evangelical in his views; but has from his earliest years devoted himself so much to purely intellectual pursuits, as to prejudice his standing in the view of his most active clergy. But all appreciate the devoted piety of his wife and daughters. One of his daughters was sent, by the advice of her physician, to spend the winter in Egypt for her health. On arriving [illegible]

Editorial Notice.

Bro. L. Reimer has just issued a second German tract, containing an examination of the following subjects:—"The resurrection of the dead," (both just and unjust.) He shows in this tract that both the holy men of the old, as well as those of the new testament, Christ himself included, hoped for and believed in eternal life only by and through a resurrection of the body.

Orders can be sent to Rev. L. Reimer, 722 Chesnut St., care of Lee & Walker, music dealers, or to Pleasant St., care of Bro. Chas. Sutton, Manayunk, or to this office.—Price 3 cents single, 25 cts. per doz., $2.00 per hundred.

We hope our brethren will try to scatter these tracts among their German friends. Great good may be accomplished by so doing. Let us all do what we can to scatter the truth among all classes, that some may be saved.—O.

Discussion of the Sabbath.

Our late discussion, in Boston, with Eld. Langarl of Cincinnati, on the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath, was of considerable interest. Several, who had been troubled with doubts, had them all removed by the plain teachings of the Bible, and are more than ever resolved to be Christ's instead of Moses' disciples. They have concluded to leave the law—the "schoolmaster,"—and follow Jesus, preferring the new to the old covenant; the liberty of the gospel, to the bondage of the law.—O.

TO THE CHILDREN.—Some articles for your department have been received, but they were too late for this week's paper. You will see them two weeks hence.—O.

From Eld. I. E. Jones.

For the gratification of very numerous friends who are so frequently inquiring for Bro. Jones, we take the liberty of making the following extract received in a letter from him to the writer, bearing date Morris, Grundy Co., Ill., Jan. 14, 1862.—M.

"The fact is, for several years past Advent writers have seemed to be very hollow; they seemed to have reiterated cardinal truths until those truths had lost their freshness to their own minds and become stale. I am glad to see that both the Herald and Crisis are renewing their 'first love.' I have preached considerably for a few months past on the preparations for the great battle of the day of God Almighty. I think the storm began in '48. Then came the Crimean war, in which over 400,000 perished; next the great East Indian war; then the Italian war; now our own great, and greater war; and soon Europe will be all ablaze, involving 'the kings of the rising sun.' Thus war follows war, rising higher and becoming more boisterous as we near the shore. There is a dark future before us, 'a day of darkness and gloominess, as the clouds spread upon the mountains.' Our rulers seem to be seized by a fatal blindness. The ancients had an adage, 'Whom the gods design to destroy, they first make mad.'"

For the Crisis.

The Things which cannot be Shaken.

In this time of commotion among nations and all other organizations, there is but one foundation upon which any political, moral, or religious structure can be built which cannot be shaken, and this is the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone. And it is a lamentable fact that many who profess to build on this foundation, do it so inefficiently that any slight wind or internal commotion splits the building, and the occupants divide and undertake to build on a foundation of their own conception, not giving heed to the rules of the Great Master builder. When will the believers in the speedy advent of Christ be united in doctrine, in fellowship, in prayer, in labor, and become a body perfect in symmetry, a peculiar people, zealous of good works? Will the hopes of the sincere worshipers and order-loving believers ever be realized, when all who are professedly waiting for the return of the Nobleman will be, in all the important doctrines and duties of the Bible, a unit?

We are exhorted to mark those which cause dissensions, and if this caution was ever needed it is at this time, especially among those who build so slightly that any puff of false doctrine, or selfishness among the flock, causes a storm and almost a wreck of the whole structure. Watch and pray. D. N. SMITH.

For the Crisis.

Now in Press a New Work,

entitled "THE SAINT'S HARVEST," being an exposition of the words of Daniel 12: 11–12,—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." It is the object of the writer to show from Scripture,—1. What is meant by the daily sacrifice. 2. The holy place. 3. Desolation, or to be desolate. 4. The abomination that maketh desolate. 5. What is meant by the abomination standing in the holy place, and by whom was it set up? 6. At what time was the sacrifice spoken of taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate [illegible]

Life from the Dead.

For the information of the numerous readers of the CRISIS who feel a deep interest in the question whether the wicked dead will live again, I wish to state that the arguments employed in "Retribution" to prove that "conscious punishment after DEATH" awaits the wicked, and that the revealed penalty for sin denotes a miserable dying as really as it does, being dead, are receiving somewhat thorough attention in successive issues of the BIBLE EXAMINER. Three articles in review of "Retribution" have appeared in the numbers for January and February, and others will be given hereafter. It is believed that a candid perusal of these EXAMINER articles (published and to appear) would convince a numerous class that, if the doctrine of LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST is capable of being overthrown with scriptural weapons, the book that will "hit the nail on the head" effectually has yet to be written. This is given as my opinion, but what I greatly desire is, that all impartial readers of "Retribution" who can do so, shall carefully peruse what is offered in review of that work. In a word—examine both sides, and then judge. May God guide us into all truth. RUFUS WENDELL.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Burnham.

BRO. GRANT:—Your letter to me, containing the intelligence of the death of Bro. Howell, made my spirit sad. But there is with us a bright and glowing expectation of a blest and joyous re-union with those we love, as we loved him, in the "better country." Those who knew Bro. Howell best loved him most. His memory will ever be dear to many of us. Peace to his quiet slumber until the sunshine of immortal beauty shall beam glorious on his waking, and he hail with delight the glad seraphim's chant. Must not the heart of one who fully believes in the literal resurrection of the dead be fain to sing in almost mournful song, in view of our frailty,

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

I say almost mournful song, because there is a sweet strain of victory in the song, so otherwise mournful, in that hint so plainly given in it, that the reign of the tyrant shall not be forever.

O, how many members of Jesus' bride has the enemy kissed into paleness and drawn down into silence! When will the great Deliverer come, and breathe the bloom of eternal health upon their cheeks again? We have waited for him, lo! these many years, while friends like leaves in autumn have fallen around us, but yet he cometh not. We have groaned, sighed, prayed, and wept for him, but yet he cometh not. We have turned our eyes, fevered with sanctified anxiety, toward the blue heavens again and again, to see his "sign," but yet he cometh not. We have told the story of his coming over and over to both friend and foe, amid persecution, scorn and shame, but yet he cometh not to justify us. Shall we sink in sorrow, and despair in grief? No, verily!

Our Redeemer will at length—and that too right soon—relieve our burdened hearts and wipe our tears away. His promises are as sure as the sun, and moon, and stars of God. His truth is more firm and stable than the everlasting hills. Our land shall be prepared. Our city shall be revealed. Our rest shall be sure. Our crowns shall be given. On the great question of our faith my mind can find no place to repose a doubt. I can say unto God, I have NEVER WAVERED OR FALTERED.

Phila., Jan. 20th, 1862.

From P. S. W. Deyo.

BRO. GRANT:—When I last wrote I was recruiting at Cascade, Iowa. My protracted effort lasted four weeks. In the time I preached forty-five sermons and baptized thirteen. There are more yet to be immersed. Over twenty were added to the church, and a good prospect for more when I return again. Now, Bro. Grant, I would not thus write for a mere puff, for I dislike that, but, as Bro. Blain said, I think that reports of the success of truth do more to encourage than so much exhortation, which becomes monotonous. It is cheering to the pioneer of the great West to see men fall in with such truth, that God has pleased to reveal to us at this time when most needed. My last year or two labors have mostly spent with the people of towns where large congregations can be had. I see where I have missed it, by spending so much time in the by places, thinking that it was only the poor that will receive the truth, but I know that the people are famishing for the pure gospel. In the above place, some of the first-class people have taken hold,—men who were noble-hearted, but could not see the consistency of the doctrines as preached, only waiting to see things aright. Men to be charmed with the gospel want it as pure as it can be had.

I am now preparing to start for Floyd and Butler counties. What pleasure it would be to remain home; but the Macedonian cry presses me on every side. The care of the church and the toils of traveling will soon be over; if the Master don't come, I shall have done my work. None but the pioneer preachers know what it [illegible]

Obituary Notices.

The subject of this notice, Thos. Stewart, was converted thirty-five years since, at the age of about forty years; was baptized by Elder Benjamin Cowley. Myself and eldest sister united with our dear parent in the blessed ordinance at the same time and place. Soon after, my mother and other members of the family found peace in believing; were baptized by B. C., and united with the same Christian Church in the town of Danbury, N. H., where my father remained a faithful, worthy, practical christian member for some ten years, ever faithful to the position he had taken at all times, and in all places, and under all circumstances in life; ever warning the sinner with tears; was a constant consoler to the weary pilgrim as he journeys on through life's rough billows. The state of his mind was upward and onward. His life (I am happy to say) was a practical one, ever ready to give a reason of the hope within him to every one that asked him, with meekness and fear, not only in social and prayer meetings, but in the field, in the work shop, and in his family. I have not forgotten the good counsels and blessed instructions given to me and all his family while we were with him.

"I remember, I remember,
The very corner, where
My father every morning knelt,
And every eve in prayer;
I remember where the circle stood
That joined the holy lay,
I remember how, in solemn mood,
We all kneeled down to pray."

Some twenty-five years since, my father, with his family, moved to the town of Franklin. Was one of the number to organize the Christian Church in that place, and ever remained a faithful and prominent member until deprived of his reason. August the 5th, 1861, Thomas Stewart fell asleep in Jesus, aged seventy-six. His disease was a disorder of the head, having almost entirely lost all the powers of his mind. Symptoms of derangement were discovered by his family some four or five years since, which gradually seemed to increase, until finally about one year ago he appeared to be almost entirely deprived of his reasoning faculties, apparently attended (at times) with severe pain in the head. He was often asked by my sister, (who had the care of him) and myself too (when I have visited him), "What is the matter, father?" His answer would invariably be, "I don't know," with an absorbing look and tears in his eyes. O! how sad the recollection! Some few months of his last days he was entirely helpless. He continued to pray in his family until his prayers became a repetition, and finally withdrew; and if reason would permit, he would have exclaimed with Paul, "I am now ready to be offered. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" etc. He was almost always singing some favorite hymn while engaged in the labors of the day in former times; but has not been known to sing but once for many months. A few weeks previous to his death he broke forth singing a favorite hymn of his, (how many times we have heard him sing the same song, with exultant joy beaming upon his countenance!)

"O land of rest, for thee I sigh!"

and continued to sing almost the entire hymn. There was not much alteration from this time until his death, when he calmly fell asleep, without a struggle or a groan.

August the 6th his funeral was attended by numerous relatives and friends, who listened to a very appropriate discourse from Elder Kidder (of the Christian denomination), founded upon Num. 23: 10,—"Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his," showing that the last end of the righteous was not death (merely), but the last end, the last and final condition of the righteous would be given at the second coming of Christ, at the resurrection and the time of the dead that they should be judged, when reward is given to his servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear his name small and great, and finally, when those shall be destroyed that destroy the earth.—Rev. 11. After taking our farewell leave of our dear father, we silently followed his remains to their last resting place here on earth, there to remain only a little while, and He that is to come will come and will not tarry, and his reward will be with him.

The deceased was the father of ten children, four sons and six daughters; nine are living, and one is not, a little son and brother, four years old, died forty-eight years ago, and now sleeps in yonder churchyard, in the town of Warner, the place of our nativity. We mourn, and that deeply; but we do not mourn as some others mourn. Our father is dead, to be sure, but we believe he will come again from the land of the enemy. We believe that we shall behold him decked (not with those sable garments that he went away with) with a garment made white by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of his testimony; fitted expressly for that glorified body, which shall be changed and made like unto Christ's glorious body. We believe we shall behold him come forth clothed with immortality and in his right mind, singing as he comes; when it will be said unto him, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joy of thy Lord." Enter into my rest, and sit down on my throne. May the Lord sanctify this affliction to the lasting good of the entire family, and bring us all into his kingdom at last.

O brothers, sisters, the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers;
On, just yonder, oh! how cheering,
Bloom forever Eden's bowers.
Hark! the choral strains there ringing,
Wafted on the balmy air;
See the millions, hear them singing,
Soon the pilgrims will be there.

Asa H. Stewart.

New Hampton, Nov. 25th, '61.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Died, at Annapolis, Md., Jan. 5th, of typhoid fever, Elliott P. Perry of Granby, Mass., a member of the 27th regiment.

The deceased was a young man possessed of a well stored mind, with excellent principles, a lively and affectionate disposition, as well as a truly religious character. He listened to the call of his country, and with true patriotism responded to that call; but just before the regiment was ready to leave Maryland, he was seized with a severe cough, then followed a burning fever, which in a few days terminated his young life. A fond father and mother, a devoted sister, together with a large circle of relatives and affectionate friends, are left to mourn, feeling that this is indeed a bitter cup which they are made to drink of, and may they acknowledge the all-wise Hand which has placed it to their lips, that this great affliction may so chasten and purify their hearts, that they shall be fully prepared to meet their lost one in Christ's coming kingdom. T. H. E.

Died, in Bristol, Ct., Nov. 25th, 1861, after a protracted and painful illness, my dear sister, Harriet B. Norton, aged 55 years.

Her life was an exemplary one, and she humbly trusted in the Redeemer's merits for salvation. She dreaded death, but peacefully she drank its bitter cup, and slept the calm, sweet sleep of the blest. Oh! it was hard indeed parting with her, but we laid her in the grave believing that Christ, who is our life, would soon come to raise the sleeping dead.

All hail thou potent Lord, thou Prince of peace,
Almighty to redeem, and strong to save;
In vain does hell thy captives seek to hold,
For by the blood which thou hast ratified
And sealed with blood, they shall come forth

Amid our grief and sorrow we were cheered by that blessed hope, and felt that we should soon meet our dear sister again in the kingdom of our God, where there will be no sad partings, and where pain, sickness and death can never enter to mar the happiness of those that inhabit that pure and healthful clime.

Jane J. Austin.

Died, in Franklin, Dec. 11th, 1861, of diphtheria, Charles, youngest son of Bro. Ebenezer and Sr. Cynthia Hopkins, aged nine years.

The parents feel deeply afflicted, but the gospel hope of a future life sustains them. May God still continue to manifest his grace to comfort and cheer their hearts in this time of trial. The writer had the privilege of speaking words of comfort from 1 Cor. 15: 35.

"He comes not, our boy, when the shadows are long,
We hear not his childish and innocent song,
We hear not the sounds of his wandering feet,
Nor see we the smiles that made him so sweet.
His low little bed has a vacancy now,
And we weep by its side as fond parents know how.
All around in the house, in our garden of roses,
We are told with a glance that our darling reposes.
For there came to our circle an enemy stern,
Saying, 'Back to the dust must thine idol return!'
Ah! we wept and we wondered, we mourned and we plead,
But ere we believed it, our darling was dead.
Sleep on, little Charlie, till out from the skies
A voice full of power shall bid thee arise,
Then home to us come and ever remain,
And live where the Lover of children shall reign."

E. M. Haggett.

Died, in Portland, Me., Aug. 24th, W. Frankie, son of William C. and Mary E. Clark, aged one year and eleven days, after a short and distressing illness of five days and a half with dropsy on the brain.

Our Frankie sleeps a peaceful sleep,
Safe from the woes and ills of life,
O'er him a watch our Savior 'll keep,
Till he shall come and bid him rise.
Then bursting forth from death's embrace,
Triumphant o'er the grave, he'll rise
To meet his Savior face to face,
And join the blood-washed in the skies.
Our darling boy we then shall greet,
Immortal made, no more we'll sigh,
Our sufferings past, our joys complete,
No more to grieve, no more to die.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Steamship Europa, from Boston, arrived at Liverpool on the 6th.

Pending the arrival of the Europa, there was a feeling of great suspense in England, and the funds were temporarily depressed, but rallied some. The journals argue that a definite answer was not to be expected by her, and think the cause of peace loses nothing by delay. Others construe the delay unfavorably.

The London Post thinks it diminishes the hopes of peace, and that the Washington Government will propose a compromise, but which will not for a moment be entertained. The Times asks why the decision should be delayed, if favorable for peace, and says the immediate surrender of Mason and Slidell would have been a greater blow to the Confederates than a victory on the Potomac, and worth millions to the Federal exchequer. The Daily News sees nothing but peace.

The Morning Herald says if the affair is settled, England and France have every inducement, on commercial grounds, to recognize the independence of the Confederacy, as unless the step is manfully taken by Ministers at once, it is certain to be taken by Parliament on assembling.

The Daily News says that any recognition of the Confederates would be too abhorrent to English principles to be really a subject for apprehension.

There had been a violent earthquake in Greece.

Canton, Nov. 30. There has been a coup d' etat at Pekin. The members of the Cabinet were imprisoned and a new Ministry formed under Prince Keing.

The City of Washington and Jura both arrived on the 8th, bringing the news of the adjustment of the Trent affair. It was received with the greatest satisfaction.

Three Days Later.—Per Steamship Europa.

The Europa brings neither troops nor stores, the government having discontinued shipments by the Cunard steamers.

GREAT BRITAIN.

It was reported that notwithstanding the pacific solution of the American question, the warlike preparations at Woolwich have not been relaxed. Steamers Spartan and Ajax continued to take in heavy stores for Halifax and Jamaica. No official notice had been given at Portsmouth respecting any discharge of hired mechanics or laborers. It was understood, however, that a reduction would take place in April.

The Times has a strong editorial on the reception due to Mason and Slidell. It says they are about the most worthless booty it would be possible to extract from the jaws of the American lion, having been long known as blind and habitual haters and revilers of England. It sincerely hopes Englishmen will not give these fellows anything in the shape of an ovation, as the civility due to foes in distress is all they can claim. England has returned them good for evil; and even now, if they can they will be only too happy to entangle her in a war with the North. England would have done just as much to rescue two negroes. Let Mason and Slidell therefore pass quietly on their way, and have their say with anybody who may have to listen to them. Other journals advise a similar course, and allude to Mason's strong advocacy of the fugitive slave law to prejudice the public against him.

Great interest is excited relative to the movements of the U. S. steamer Tuscarora and the rebel steamer Nashville. At the latest dates they continued at Southampton, watching each other. The Tuscarora remained at anchor about a mile from the mouth of the dock where the Nashville lies, with her fires banked up, and ready to slip anchor and start at a moment's notice. She only required coals, water and provisions, which were being supplied her.

The Nashville continued in her dock. The government had observed the strictest neutrality toward her, and nothing whatever had been permitted to be done to her but what was absolutely necessary to make her seaworthy. Neither powder, guns nor munitions of war had been put on board of her.

It was reported that the privateer Sumter had left Cadiz for Southampton.

Russell, in his correspondence to the Times, predicts that the fate of the American Government will be sealed if January passes without some great victory.

The Paris correspondent of the London Morning Post asserts that the French official circles felt much satisfaction at the pacific termination of the Trent affair, while the effect on the Bourse was an immediate rise of one per cent.

There was a violent earthquake shock at Dresden on the 9th. It extended as far as Leipsic. No damage is reported.

It is reported that Russia has sent an embarrassing ultimatum to Rome, to the effect that if the Pope does not condemn the conduct of the Polish clergy, Russia will recognize the Kingdom of Italy.

After the coup d' etat at Pekin a new regency was established under the two Emperors. The state of affairs was encouraging. The rebels were in the vicinity of Shanghae. Foreigners were prepared for an attack. Ningpoo was also in a state of alarm from the same cause.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

St. Louis, Jan. 22. A report by Adjutant General Harding to Gov. Gamble, shows that 38,862 Missouri troops have entered the Federal service for three years or for the war, of which 25,000 are infantry, 3000 artillery, and 6000 cavalry. The number of men organized under the Governor's call for six months' men, is upward of 6000.

A letter to the Commercial, dated Somerset, Ky., Jan. 19, says: "Zollicoffer is said to have been killed by Col. Fry of the 2d Kentucky regiment. We have taken many prisoners. The loyal Tennesseeans fought like tigers or devils, and have suffered much. The 9th Ohio regiment is badly cut up. The brave Tennesseeans took one battery at the point of the bayonet."

New York, Jan. 23. The Tribune's Washington's dispatch says, Senator Johnson of Tenn. received a dispatch from Major Hooper to-day, stating in substance as follows, "Zollicoffer is indeed dead. I have seen his dead body. Our victory is overwhelming. The rebels are driven from this entire section of the country and Kentucky will soon be freed from traitors."

The World's dispatch states that there seems to be no diminution of small pox here. A debate in the city council elicits the statement that there are some 800 cases among civilians.

Fortress Monroe, Jan. 22. There is no arrival from Gen. Burnside's expedition.

The Norfolk Daybook of Wednesday has a dispatch dated Goldsborough, Jan. 21, 4 P. M., announcing 100 vessels of Gen. Burnside's fleet inside, in Pamlico Sound, and 20 large steamers outside. No attack had been made, but the women and children were leaving Newbern, where a fight was expected.

Chicago, Jan. 24. A special dispatch to the Journal from Cairo, to-day, says: "The river at this point has risen 25 feet, and is still rising. Eleven of the boats forming the pontoon bridge at Paducah were stopped here last night. It is not known how many others passed down stream. Orders were received last night to put the mortar boats immediately into condition for service."

The pirate Sumter has captured and destroyed three more American vessels, taken the crews prisoners, and crossing the Atlantic, has arrived at the port of Cadiz, Spain. Her success in evading our cruisers has been somewhat remarkable, for while the latter are still searching for her in the West Indies, she has quietly given them the slip, and appears in Europe.

Col. Dietzler of the 1st Kansas regiment, in command at Lexington, announces by a general order that rebel assassins lurk in ambush and fire upon soldiers. He has therefore ordered to be arrested a large number of wealthy and influential secessionists, who gave aid and comfort to Price's army, whom he holds responsible for the good behavior of their hirelings, and says the assassination of one man of his command in this manner will be followed by the shooting or hanging of three wealthy rebels.

From California.—San Francisco, Jan. 17. During the past fifty hours it has rained here almost incessantly; the storm still continues. Yesterday noon the water at Sacramento commenced rising again. The third complete inundation of that city is unavoidable. The area of land now overflowed in the State is 20 miles broad and 250 long, taking upward of three millions of acres mostly arable, a considerable portion being mostly fenced and tilled. It is estimated that upward of 4500 head of cattle and sheep have been drowned since the winter commenced. The unprecedented succession of tremendous storms have washed the mining regions where the ground was previously dug over, producing great changes, and rendering probable a large increase in the gold product from the Placer diggins for the ensuing year.

Troy, N. Y., Jan. 25. A tremendous gale prevailed all through the western part of Vermont this morning. As the train which left Troy for Rutland at 7.15 A. M., was five miles above Bennington, in the town of Shaftsbury, it encountered the gale while passing an embankment about thirty feet high. One of the cars was broken from its couplings and thrown by the force of the wind down the bank. Dr. H. Dwight of Boston, a passenger, was instantly killed. John Robinson, road master, was severely injured. He will not survive.

Russia on the Trent Affair. The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune says:

"It is true that Russia has presented no formal note on the Trent question; but it is not true that she has not made known her views on the subject through the usual diplomatic channel. Baron Stoeckel was instructed by his government to say that it entertained the friendliest feelings toward the United States, and, in the friendliest spirit, desired to express the hope that there would be peace between us and England, to secure which we should, if wise, surrender Mason and Slidell, especially as by doing so we should act in accordance with the long established American doctrine of international law. These instructions were orally communicated to Secretary Seward, some time before the Prussian note was received. A dispatch to the same effect is expected from Turkey."

☞ Letters from Italy convey the intelligence that Kossuth is alarmingly ill. His disease appears to be a kind of consumption—a disease which has thus far baffled the efforts of his physicians to arrest it. He is so reduced as to speak with difficulty, and his friends fear he will not survive the winter.

Not less than 10,000 hogs have died in Illinois, of hog cholera.

☞ A Dublin paper, commenting on the decease of Prince Albert, says: "When it is known that one of the last suggestions of the Prince Consort was, that gentleness and forbearance should mark the demeanor of England to a kindred people, soured and inflamed by the passions of a civil war, it will enhance the love of the American people for the Queen, deepen their sorrow for the loss she has sustained, and dull the edge of irrational hostility to England."

ITEMS.

A large number of the French residents of New Orleans have become disgusted with the course of the rebellion, and are taking measures to leave their adopted country and return to France. They have appealed to the French Government for protection, and a conveyance back to the land of their birth.

If the army of the Potomac was in a line, marching four abreast, and accompanied with wagons, ambulances and ammunition trains, it would extend one hundred and fifty miles.

A great deal of destitution is reported to exist among the poorer classes in Montreal, and the papers are calling for measures of relief.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 23.—Officers from Hancock report that the Potomac has risen from twenty to twenty-five feet, and that there is no possibility of crossing for the present.

Gov. Buckingham of Connecticut, in pursuance of his determination to fill up the militia by draft, has made a requisition upon the town of New Haven for 457 men, to be selected by lot from those returned as subject to military duty.

It is stated that Col. Astor of New York has resigned his place on Gen. McClellan's staff, and returned to his business in New-York.

The fact will not escape attention that the battles of Somerset and Bull Run both commenced on Sunday, and the assailants in both cases were defeated. This will prove a good argument in favor of Sunday observance.

The recent great fire at Charleston, is even more calamitous and destructive than it was at first supposed to be. The aggregate loss of property in buildings, goods, &c., is almost incredible. The Courier roughly estimates it at not less than ten millions of dollars.

Delegates assembled at Great Salt Lake City Jan. 22, and drew up a State constitution to be submitted to Congress. Utah demands admission into the Union.

The flooded state of the Mississippi and its tributaries has caused apprehensions that the fortifications and encampment at Cairo will be inundated and our troops compelled to abandon it.

The chaplain of the Maine Third Regiment, Rev. Henry C. Leonard, performs his duties under difficulties which we trust do not beset all army chaplains. He was put under arrest for reproving one of the officers of the regiment for profane swearing.

Chapman Hall.

We met with the brethren at the "old place of worship" last Sabbath, and had a very interesting time. The brethren worshiping at the Hall are passing through deep trials, and need the sympathy and co-operation of our preaching brethren in particular.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the Christian Publication Society, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once Five Hundred Dollars, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than any Tract Society in the country, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in Tracts, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Meeting in Honeoye.

The Lord willing, there will be a general meeting of the saints of God and lovers of Bible truth at Honeoye, Ont. Co., N. Y., to commence on Friday evening, Feb. 21st, and continue over Sunday. Elds. J. B. Cook and T. G. Newman appoint to be there. Let all the brethren in adjoining counties consider this an especial occasion for them. Come, brethren, we know you and your whereabouts, and shall be disappointed if we do not see you here. Come in the name of the Lord. Come to testify of his goodness, and to enjoy his Spirit. Frank Burr.

Tour to Canada West.

I am arranging for a tour to Canada West, and shall probably begin in London about the middle of February. Full notice soon.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. Preparing. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and aid with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common opinion of the world's conversion was unknown in the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Hymn.

Come, ye that love the Lord,
Unto me, unto me,
I have something good to say
About the narrow way;
For Christ the other day
Saved my soul, saved my soul.

Though the world may me disown,
Heaven's my home, heaven's my home;
Though the world may me disown,
And I'm little and unknown,
I'm an heir to yonder throne—
Heaven's my home.

Though poverty's my lot,
Heaven's my home, heaven's my home,
And the figtree blossoms not,
I can sing the song of hope,—
Heaven's my home.

Some said I'd soon give o'er,
They shall see, they shall see;
Sometime has passed away
Since I began to pray,—
I love the Lord to-day, bless his name!

For the Crisis.

The Second Advent a Necessity.

The principal and perhaps the only reason why the masses of the professed christian world look upon the doctrine of the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ as a matter of but little consequence, and hardly worthy a moment's notice, is, because they cannot see any necessity for such an event. They expect to realize the fruition of their religious hopes, whether Christ ever comes again or not. Everything that is glorious and worthy to be desired by the child of God is, in their apprehension, received this side of the second advent. Death is to them the time of complete and eternal victory over all their foes. Death is hailed as the deliverer from the effects of the fall of man; consequently they have learned to look forward to the time of their dissolution as the most grand and glorious event in the future, eclipsing all other epochs in the history of man by introducing him at once into the state of supreme felicity. Dr. Cumming very graphically expresses the popular idea on this subject, in the following language: "For in an aged christian's death, it is not he, but death, that dies. Life is the prison—death is the kind friend sent by God to strike off the chains of mortality, to break the prison doors and let the captive go free. Death is our exodus, not from life but to life. The instant that a believer dies he is in perfect happiness; and even before life is quenched in this world, the soul may often have been in heaven." Thus the grim monster, who has spread sorrow and desolation throughout our world, and despoiled many a family of its choicest laurels, is magnified as a blessing, instead of being, what it really is, the greatest curse that rests upon the human family, with the maledictions of high heaven resting upon its head.

It is not to be wondered at, then, that the second advent doctrine has but little effect upon the minds of the people, after they have embraced doctrines so utterly opposed to Bible truth. Death has (in the view of the masses) robbed the Advent of its charms; and the lie of Satan, "Ye shall not surely die," has taken the place of Christ's comforting assurance that "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Eulogies upon death are more frequent than sermons upon the resurrection. Upon funeral occasions, it seems as if ministers could hardly find language adequate to express their admiration of him who has caused the widow's tears to flow, and the orphan's heart to break. But when we investigate the Book of God on these subjects, how changed everything seems. The Bible directs the waiting, afflicted, persecuted, unpopular child of the Most High to look forward to the time when Christ who is his life shall appear, with the comforting assurance that then he shall also appear with him in glory.

The coming of Christ is plainly stated to be the time when the saints shall receive their reward, and the wicked their punishment. We are informed in the language of Him who spake as never man spake, that, when he shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations, that they may be separated and rewarded,—the righteous then (and not before) to have everlasting life; the wicked then to go into everlasting punishment. Christ also informed his disciples that in his Father's house were many mansions, and that he would go and prepare a place for them, and that if he went away he would come again and take them to himself, that where he was, there they might be also. It is evident from this language that the disciples of Jesus cannot be with him until his second coming. Our Savior promised his followers that they should be recompensed at the "resurrection of the just," and he nowhere intimates that they shall be rewarded previous to that time; and as the resurrection will not take place until the Lord himself comes to awake the sleeping multitudes, it makes the second advent a very important event.

Peter comforted the faithful pastors in his day with the assurance that, when the Chief Shepherd should appear, they should receive an unfading crown of glory. How very different from the hope that is presented to comfort people in these days! Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles, after he had fought the good fight, and was about to lay down his life for the cause of his divine Master, looked forward to the Second Advent for a crown that would then be given to all them that loved his (Christ's) appearing. The Thessalonian church turned from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. The advent of Christ in glory was the inspiring theme of the prophets and apostles, and of the church in its best days; and it cannot be too highly estimated by us in these times of wickedness and infidelity.

According to the Scriptures, Death is the enemy of man, degrading him to the level of the beasts that perish, and placing him in a condition in which there is neither wisdom, knowledge, or device. But God has appointed a Life-Giver, even Jesus Christ, who is coming to awaken his saints who repose in unconscious slumbers beneath the clods of the valley, that he may raise them from their dusty beds, and endue them with the power of an immortal life. Thus the Second Advent, which according to modern creeds is of no practical importance, becomes glorious and desirable, and altogether necessary for the purpose of carrying out the plan of God in reference to the salvation of them that believe in Jesus.

Some would fain have us believe that it makes no difference what doctrines actuate us, if we are sincere. But God has given us these blessed truths, that our hearts may be purified by their reception, and we may the better be prepared to welcome the Son of God with joy when he shall appear. I pray God that his church may be more deeply sensible of the responsibility that rests upon its members, on account of the great light that now shines upon its pathway, and that we may be enabled to do our duty to a perishing world, by warning them of the judgment that is now approaching, and presenting the truths that God would have them believe. Hospital Rambles.—No. 2.

We will enter this room,—about twenty-five men here. See how neatly the beds are all arranged—heads to the wall, leaving an alley sufficiently broad to pass through the room, a space between each bed of about a foot or a little wider,—a coal stove in the centre of the room warms it nicely. The beds are all covered with clean, white, Indian blankets; clean sheets turned over so smoothly, clean pillows; the floor perfectly free from dust, white as boards can be kept. So much for the room. Here is a poor, emaciated looking boy, not more than sixteen or seventeen. "Where were you wounded?" I ask, as I sit by him on his bed—(he is in a rocking-chair that some kind hand has sent.) "At the battle of 'Wilson's Creek,' in my leg, (showing me the place.) I carried the ball there four months, ma'am, before the doctor could find it." I asked him if he had a mother? He burst into tears, and a comrade on the next bed answered for him. His mother lived in Baltimore, and he had just received a letter stating that she lay at death's door, probably was dead. I had no comfort for such grief as his, only to weep with him. I gave him some books—the "One Resting Place" for one. Poor, sick, weary boy, crying for his mother.

We pass on, scattering the little white-winged messengers of love and peace, faithful warning and good advice, with kind words. Do you see those two young men that look so much alike? Those are the "twin brothers" spoken of in Bro. Hastings' letter. They recognized me at once with a pleasant smile and spoke of the Lord. They tell me they are getting better, and that they remember their promise not to swear. Gave them some books, and they seemed much pleased with them. May the Lord bless them to their good. Here on this bed is a christian, one of God's trusting ones. His nurse said of him, "He is the best man in the ward; a real christian;" and so I found him. In speaking of the war, said he, "I thought my country needed me, and next to God I must obey the calls of my country. So I left wife and little ones to go." The tears choked his utterance as he thought of the "loved ones at home." But "Father will protect them," said he. "I put all my trust in him." Sung him a hymn in a low, soothing tone. Shall never forget his countenance as he held my hand in both of his while I sang, the joyful tears rolling down his sick face. Gave him some tracts, just such as he wanted, and with reluctance left him. "That man, (said his nurse) has had such an influence in this room that the men will not utter an oath in his hearing, for it would grieve him to tears." And the soldiers have so much consideration for each other, so kind and gentle, and I have often seen the tears come as they told me about the death of some poor comrade. They don't get so hard-hearted as one is inclined to think, especially those who do not see them, but get their ideas from reading of them in the midst of blood and carnage.

Here is one who says he "used to love the Lord." I talked with him about Jesus, showed him he was a "rebel" in God's sight, told him how much he needed his protecting power in battle, until the hard heart melted, and taking my hand, his eyes moist with the gathering tears, he promised me to turn his steps back to the "fold." "I have often thought, as I lie here, about my sinfulness. Now I'll arise and go to Him." I assured him that God would receive him. One of the gentlemen nurses (they have women nurses too) said to me as I left his bed, "Your mission is truly one of the angels'. God bless you." I told him I felt that he did.

Let us pass into this room. Here you see a change. These are wounded ones. The beds here are dressed in bright scarlet blankets. It makes the white pillows and sheets look still whiter. See that fine looking woman! what a noble countenance! kind, benevolent, and gentle. She is the matron of this hospital. I have not heard her name, but have conversed with her. She would grace the seat of an empire. But to return. What perfect quiet reigns here! (Here let me notice, that among the many hundreds I have visited, I have never yet heard an impatient or fretful exclamation.) Nearly in the centre of the room you see an invalid. He is in a calico dressing-gown and slippers, reclining in a large, stuffed easy-chair, that drops back with springs. He is asleep. His cheek is pillowed against the back of the chair, the dark masses of hair brushed back from his broad, white, intellectual forehead. I looked at him sleeping so calmly, forgetting war and home. He is dreaming now. Soon the smile that made his face look so sweet is changed to a painful start,—a low moan escaped him. Do you see the cause? That right limb, reclining on a cushion,—"shot in the leg!" A stand or centre-table is by his side, covered with books and writing materials; two of my little white-winged doves have nestled there with the rest,—"The One Resting Place," and "Are you a Christian?" Praying that they may be a blessing to him, we turn quietly away.

Here is a young man by the name of "Grant," shot at Wilson's Creek at the time of Lyon's death, the 10th of last August. His shattered limb has been kept in a wooden box ever since. He is an orphan, but spoke kindly and lovingly of his adopted parents. His is one of the brave, bright faces that you will never forget. Was pleased with the books. Although he suffers so intensely, he is never impatient. God bless the boy! There, on those two beds, side by side, lie two young men from the same battle-ground—dying. They lay on the field terribly wounded three or four days, subsisting on what they could reach from their dead comrades' knapsacks, before they were found. Were neglected afterwards, finally brought on to St. Louis, over those rough roads, in wagons, some three hundred miles or more, now dying. Who wonders at it? Their heads were shaved close—emaciated to skeletons—suffer four months and then die! Yet the world think it is terrible if they are killed, but save your pity; give it to the wounded, the dead don't need it.

Hark! that terrible outcry. Did you year it? curdling the blood in my veins! There it is again! Let us go from the sound. "That is the operating room, Madam. They are amputating a limb!" Their wounds are mostly in the right arm or leg, seldom in the left, or the right side or shoulder. Every conceivable shaped wound. But you have had horrors enough. Next week we will go to Carondelet. There is one instance there so remarkable, that you will not soon forget it. But they are "lighting the gas" now, so "home again."

Correspondence.

From I. B. Andrews.

BRO. GRANT—By the mercies of God I live, and am thankful for the privileges we have, although we have no meetings as the pilgrims in other places, yet I am trying to live religion and keep my head above the waters. Tried and tempted and alone, yet God

"Is good,
And kind are all his ways;"

which leads me to rejoice in poverty, to trust in him in tribulation and persecution, in trials sore to lean on his arm, for he can bear those who trust in him above all trouble and affliction, and cause the heart to leap for joy.

More than all this, what joy is it to him who has been watching the signs of the times, and patiently waiting for his Lord, to see those signs fast looming up that betoken the return of his Lord. I believe that God is about to deliver his chosen people, from among the galling scenes of sin and wickedness, to a land of glory and ever blessed delight—the saints happy home—and behold the face of my Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. He soon will come, for the nations are angry and the time of his wrath is come; and soon they will drink to the dregs of the cup of wrath; and who of us will be able to stand? O Lord! help me. Pray for us.

"I long to be there!"

From T. M. Preble.

BRO. GRANT:—Please publish the following extract of a letter I have just received from Bro. E. Flanders, Jr., at West Alton, that others may know what the Lord is doing in that place. Yours truly.

Concord, Jan. 3, 1862.

"You will excuse me for so long neglecting to fulfill my promise to write you. I felt as though I could not write until I had some good news to tell. We have after a long and hard fought battle gained a little ground. There are seven or eight that have been reclaimed from a backslidden state within the last two weeks; some of them those we least expected, some of the hardest cases here. But

'God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.'

Two of those three young men that took the lead in singing, are among the number. The interest still continues. We hold prayer meetings there three evenings in the week time, and three meetings Sundays. We have had preaching but two Sabbaths since you were here. I think there is still more seed sown when you were here that will spring up and bear fruit, as many as thirty-fold. Praise the Lord!"

From Geo. A. Streeter.

BRO. GRANT:—I am out in the highways and hedges striving to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men will hear or forbear. The battle goes well. Glory be to God! we are almost home. Soon the christian warrior will sing,

"The warfare is ended, in glory we reign."

Let us live near the Lord, endure unto the end, and we shall be saved. "Unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Let us be in a waiting position. Pray for me.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. J. W. ELLIOTT, Mechanicsburg, Ind., Dec. 18th, '61, writes:—"I am struggling among the ills and scoffs of a sin-cursed world, to gain an interest in the kingdom of Christ, which I believe will soon come. I am not only trying myself, but am also trying to gain others, although I am weak, and but young in the cause. Yet I feel that I must go to work this winter in my Master's vineyard. I wish you would send me some tracts if you can. I am too poor to pay for them now. God knows my heart, that it is in the cause. I should have written sooner, but I disliked to beg, and I still thought that I could get the money to spare, but, Bro. G., I honestly cannot; and as there is no one here to occupy the field, I feel it my duty to do what I can this winter.

Perhaps it would be well for me now to tell who I am. I was converted about eight years ago in the M. E. Church. I moved to Wisconsin in 1856. The second winter after I went there, a man came to that place (Ironton) to work in the furnace as a moulder,—G. W. Turner. He had not been there long before he hired a room and gave a course of lectures. His positions were new to me. They made me tremble, and brought me on my knees. I found I was in a mist, and could not help myself. For a long time I continued in this state, until Bro. Sheldon came to that place. He knocked all the scales from my eyes. Since then, I have felt it my duty to return to my old native country, and tell my friends the glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom of Christ."

SR. C. C. BRAGG, Vergennes, Vt., Dec. 24th, '61, writes:—"Dear brethren,—I am truly admonished and encouraged while perusing your valuable paper. The question often arises in my mind, who will take heed to the silent messengers as they come ladened with 'meat in due season'? Dear reader, do we partake of the rich repast, the fruit of so much labor and care, and for the time being say in our inmost soul, how good and true! then lay aside the sheet and forget to profit or practice in that which is so much adapted to our present need? Indeed, these are days of more theory than practice,—when there is a form of godliness, denying the power thereof. Ye lonely ones, that have not the privilege of the preaching and the prayers and the conference of those of like precious faith, be encouraged. 'As thy days, so shall thy strength be.' The time is soon coming when all that love the Savior in deed and in truth, will meet to part no more. May the Lord help us to 'shun the appearance of evil' and be prepared for his coming and kingdom."

BRO. L. A. DURGIN, Lee, N. H., Dec. 30, '61, writes:—"Dear Bro. Grant:—I have long felt a deep and prayerful interest in the Crisis, and am glad to find it still among the living. My prayer is that it may increase in interest, as the sands of old Time are fast running out. Eagerly do I await its weekly visits, as I would the coming of a very dear friend. With much interest I peruse its columns, written by various authors, many of whom I have never met in this life, but sincerely hope to in the life which is to come. We've but to toil on a little longer, and victory will be ours forever, thank God. Then the crown will be given to Bro. Paul, and all those who love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."

BRO. D. HARKER, from Wilton Junction, Iowa, Jan. 20th, 1862, writes:—"BRO. MORGAN:—This is a place of fiery trial; Adventists are called any thing but christians. The Methodists have built quite a neat church since you were here; the Congregational church I think was up when you were here. Since then the Presbyterians have organized a church, but there seems to be little room for Adventists. O how we do suffer reproach! but I feel assured my Master will soon be here to set the captives free. I give away my papers whenever an opportunity offers, and I have the pleasure to find that many begin to see the truth."

The Effect of Pardon.

In the garrison town of Woolwich, a few years ago, a soldier was about to be brought before the commanding officer of the regiment, for some misdemeanor. The officer entering the soldier's name said, "Here is —— again. What can we do with him? He has gone through almost every ordeal." The sergeant-major, M. B., apologized for intruding, and said, "There is one thing which has never been done with him yet, sir, he has never been forgiven." "Forgiven!" said the Colonel; "here is his case entered." "Yes, but the man is not yet before you, and you can cancel it." After the Colonel had reflected for a few minutes, he ordered the man to be brought in, when he was asked what he had to say relative to the charges brought against him. "Nothing, sir," was the reply, "only that I am sorry for what I have done." After making some suitable remarks, the Colonel said, "Well, we have resolved to forgive you." The soldier was struck with astonishment; the tears started from his eyes and he wept. The Colonel, with the Adjutant, and all the others present, felt deeply when they saw the man so humbled. The soldier thanked the Colonel for his kindness and retired. The narrator had the soldier under his notice for two years and a half after this, and never during that time was there a charge brought against him, or fault found with him. Mercy triumphed! Kindness conquered! The man was won.

This is just the method God adopts with us in the everlasting gospel. We are guilty. The charges are brought against us. The case is entered. But the Lord delighteth in mercy. He seeks to melt us by his love. He is ready to forgive. He sends to us, saying, "Only acknowledge thine iniquities;" and then offers us a pardon—a pardon which cost him the life of his only begotten Son. A pardon, not of one sin, but of all our sins; a pardon that will bring peace to the conscience on earth, and entitle us to eternal rest in heaven. The soldier, in the case before us, gladly accepted the pardon, was melted down by the kindness of his Colonel, and wept as a child would weep. But sinners too often hear of God's forgiving love without emotion, and instead of humbly confessing their sins, and gladly embracing the pardon offered, they treat it with neglect or contempt.—British Workman.

Justice.

The peace of society dependeth on justice; the happiness of individuals on the certain enjoyment of all their possessions.

Keep the desires of thy heart, therefore, within the bounds of moderation; let the hand of justice lead them aright.

Cast not an evil eye on the goods of thy neighbor; let whatever is his property be sacred from thy touch.

Let no temptation allure, nor any provocation excite thee to lift up thy hand to the hazard of his life.

Defame him not in his character; bear no false witness against him.

Corrupt not his servant to cheat or forsake him; and the wife of his bosom, O tempt not to sin.

It will be a grief to his heart, which thou canst not relieve; an injury to his life, which no reparation can atone.

Be faithful to thy trust; and deceive not the man that relieth upon thee; be assured, it is less evil in the sight of God to steal, than to betray.

Oppress not the poor; and defraud not of his hire the laboring man.

When thou sellest for gain, hear the whisperings of conscience; and be satisfied with moderation; nor from the ignorance of the buyer make advantage to thyself.

Pay the debts which thou owest; for he who gave thee credit, relied upon thy honor; and to withhold from him his due is both mean and unjust.

Finally, O son of society, examine thy heart; call remembrance to thy aid; and, if in any of these things thou findest thou hast transgressed, take sorrow or shame to thyself, and make speedy reparation to the utmost of thy power.

Advice to Contributors.

The duty of an editor is delicate as well as arduous when exercising discretion in the articles furnished by his friends. We love to please, even those whom we are liable to affront. If a few rules are observed by correspondents, much of this embarrassment will be obviated.

1. Never attempt to write without a very distinct idea in mind, and conclude your article as soon as possible after it shall have been distinctly expressed. It is this practice which gives our city editors their neatness and popularity. We refer especially to the quality rather than the extent of an article; not insisting so much upon the length as upon the intrinsic value of what is written.

2. Avoid repetition of ideas. This is imperative upon writers, though not upon public speakers. Express yourself distinctly once, and let that answer.

3. Do not employ a profusion of adjectives. They are apt to prove noxious weeds in the field of ideas, choking out valuable thoughts. Over-dressed language is as distasteful to a sensible mind as an over-dressed individual. Persons of good sense apparel themselves and express their ideas in a manner calculated not to excite a thought.

4. Look very suspiciously upon every sentence which you regard as original and particularly smart. It is apt to prove the spoiled baby in an essay; agreeable to none but the parent.

5. Do not criticise the life out of your productions. Trimming in politics is detestable; a composition so pruned and wrought as to express little or nothing definitely, is not bearable. The uses of criticism are to remove excrescences, and to secure the best and most effective method of expressing ideas. When vivacity is taken out, and a leaden, obscure style remains, the criticism is worse than a failure.

6. Do not imagine that verse is necessarily poetry. It is often the very antipodes; and indeed, we are very jealous of versification. A poet is a creator. If you cannot give form to ideas filled with life and power, do not attempt rhyming. The best poetry which we have ever read was written in prose.

7. Do not write with pale ink, or on two sides of a sheet. Make your letters distinctly. Let the capital J never be written as though it was I.—Ex.

Frederick Douglass.

Frederick Douglass has been lecturing in Philadelphia on the war. We find his address, which is vigorous and masterly, reported at length in the Christian Recorder of that city. The editor (Bishop Paine) thus speaks of the orator:

"We saw, almost at a glance, that the Frederick Douglass before us was the Frederick Douglass of former days—and even more: his majestic bearing and dignity were not gone—the fire of his eye and the glow of his face were there—the power and influence of his voice, the cutting logic and lofty eloquence of other days, were not diminished. And to all these were added the depth and breadth of thought, and the candor of expression, which constant investigation and increasing years cannot fail to bring."

Selected for the Crisis.

The Sacrifice.

With pure hands folded on his breast,
And royal head bent lowly down,
To hide the grief that sharper pressed
Than mocking taunt or thorn-made crown,
With dumb lips whiter than the clay,
He treads the steep and narrow way.

Smite, cruel hands, till bloody rain
Drops on the robes of purple dye,
His pity cleanses every stain,—
In tender anguish hear him cry,
"It is your Savior, would ye know!
Forgive, they know not what they do."

Pierce, riving nails, the quivering hands,
Outstretched to save the strong, the weak,—
Not hissing scorn, nor hate that brands
Its terrors on the death-pale cheek,
Can wake one throb but tender love,
That dares to die, its life to prove.

'Tis finished—sorrow hangs its pall
Where once the golden morning broke,
The veiled face and the one wild call,
The meek head bowed, the great heart broke,
Pierce now afresh, oh, searching spear!
No crimson life-blood trickles here.

O woman, last to leave the cross,
And first to leave the empty grave,
Count not, in selfish tears, your loss,
Love died, a nobler love to save.
Bind to thy heart each precious word,
And wait in hope your risen Lord.

As the Editor of the Crisis has generously offered one column of the family paper for the benefit of children, will they not let us hear from them? A communication from some little boy or girl would be an interesting acquisition to its correspondence. It must be that among all the little ones who read the Crisis, there are many who love the Savior, and can tell an interesting experience in the christian life. Try. D. N. SMITH.

Only Once.

"Stop a minute, James; we're making up a skating-party to go down the river to-night. We shall build a fire on the island and have a grand time. Come; go with us."

"No, George, I can't. Father says I must skate on the canal. It isn't so wide, nor quite so good skating I know, but it's safe."

"Nonsense! The ice is at least two inches thick, any where, even in the thinnest places."

"No matter. I can't skate on the river."

"Well, then, come to the canal. You can skate out to the fork, where it joins the river, and see us all. Will you do that?"

"Yes."

"All right. Be there at seven."

James was ready with his skates at the time appointed, and about to leave the house. "Where now, James?" asked his father.

"I'm going to skate awhile on the canal, father."

"Well, its a bright evening; but don't stay late, and don't go on the river."

Just then James's little sister Marion, who was ready to go to bed, shouted after him, "Stop, Jamie; give me a kiss," and holding up her rose-bud mouth, in a plump face from which the laughing eyes were shining, she received his good-night kiss, and he went out. As he passed the window, he saw, through the half-drawn curtains, little Marion kneeling by their mother, at prayer; the father had laid his paper down, and sat, reverently listening while the child's petition went up to heaven. It was a beautiful picture. Poor Jamie! With what different feelings would he have looked upon it had he then known what was to happen within the next two hours!

He crossed the field before the house, and was soon on the canal and gliding swiftly toward the river, from which the sound of merry voices already reached his ear. And as he wheeled splendidly, just at the entrance of the canal the boys saw him and came bearing down upon him like a fleet of swift ships before the wind. "Hurrah! Jamie!" cried a dozen of them as they joined company in the canal. There they amused themselves awhile, racing, leaping, skating backwards, and cutting all sorts of fanciful figures on the ice, until George gave the word, "Now for the island!" and with loud shouts they shot out together upon the river. All but James. "I must leave you now," he said.

"Oh, James, don't!" cried several at once.

"Now see here, James," said George, "What's the use of being so set. Go down with us this time."

"Father said, 'Don't go on the river.'"

"Well, as to that, you've been on the river two or three times. Look at your marks; and James now saw that in the excitement of their sport, he had repeatedly rushed out of the canal quite across the channel of the river. He wanted to go with the boys. He didn't really think there was much danger, and the discovery that he had already unwittingly broken his father's command, did not help him in this hour of weakness and temptation. The boys all clamored for him to join them. James slowly glided out of the canal—stood still a moment—and the tempter prevailed.

"Well, I'll go down this once; mind you, only once," and he darted like an arrow to the front, for he was the best skater in the company and soon was far in advance of the rest.

Alas! None of the boys knew of the murderous "breathing-hole" which had opened that day in the ice in the channel, and now lay right in James' path, waiting to receive him; and the first notice they had of its existence was a cry of terror from him as he plunged in. All was confusion among the boys. But George, more self-possessed than either the others, hurried to the shore and shouting cheerily, "Hold on, Jamie! I'll help you out," broke off the limb of a tree as large and long as he could handle, brought it on, and tried by carefully creeping toward James to put it within his reach. But the current was strong; the water was bitterly cold, and James, who had been urging his friend to make haste, now began to lose his strength and become benumbed, and before the limb came within his grasp he said, faintly, "Oh, George, I can't—hold on any longer—ask father—to forgive——" and went down with the tide.

An hour later, the men at the mill below, who had broken the ice above the barred outlet of the dam, and were watching and waiting in expectation of their mournful work, lifted James' body out of the water, and tenderly carried it to his home.

Boys, I have seldom told you a very sad story, but I am hoping now to impress upon your young hearts, the lesson of obedience to parents so deeply that it shall never be forgotten. If you are ever tempted to disregard a kind father's commands, or his advice,—even though it be "only once"—while you pray for strength to resist the temptation, remember Jamie. It is true that disobedience to parents is not always, nor indeed often followed so speedily by such sad consequences, but we know that the smile of God will rest only upon those children who obey their parents "in the Lord."—Child at Home.

A Child's Influence.

Do not say you have no influence. All have some. A gentleman, lecturing in the neighborhood of London, said:

"Everybody has influence—even that child," pointing to a little girl in her father's arms.

"That's true," cried the man.

At the close he said to the lecturer, "I beg your pardon, sir, but I could not help speaking. I was a drunkard; but as I did not like to go to the public house alone, I used to carry this child. As I approached the public house one night, hearing a great noise inside, she said:

'Don't go, father.'

'Hold your tongue, child.'

'Please father, don't go!'

'Hold your tongue, I say.'

Presently I felt a big tear fall on my cheek. I could not go a step further, sir, I turned round and went home, and have never been in a public house since, thank God for it! I am now a happy man, sir, and this little girl has done it all; and when you said that even she had influence, I could not help saying, 'That's true, sir.' All have influence.'"—Rev. N. Hall.

Hope.

BY VESTA S. CUDWORTH.

'T is sweet when gleams the lightning,
And thunders round us moan,
To feel our anchor tight'ning
Within our Father's home.

'T is sweet, when trust is broken
In treach'rous mortals here,
To hail the blessed token
Of Father's kingdom near.

'T is sweet, with temples beating
Wildly with pain, to know
That time is fast retreating,
With all our tears below

'T is sweet, when death is stealing
The beautiful and best,
To find God's book revealing
Immortal life through Christ.

"Time of the End"—"No longer a Time"—"This Generation."

"TIME OF THE END."

"But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal THE BOOK, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased."—Dan. 12: 4.

The "time of the end" is usually regarded as a very short space before the end itself. Certain reasons impel me to regard it as a definite period—the "last time" of the "seven times of the Gentiles." In other words, a period of 360 years, commencing with the Reformation of 1517. It would require volumes to fully develope the single text above quoted, as fulfilled during this "one time." When we remember that the art of printing had only just been brought to a tolerable degree of perfection, and then contemplate the innumerable volumes that have been issued in every department of science and literature,—the immense libraries that have been founded,—the countless periodicals, as gazettes, quarterlies, magazines, newspapers, and pamphlets that have been circulated,—the vast improvements in all the older departments of knowledge, as astronomy, geography, philosophy and the mathematics, and the absolute discovery of new, as geology, chemistry, phrenology, the calculus, etc.,—mechanical inventions, as telescopes, microscopes, barometers, thermometers, air-pumps, larding machines, factory spinning-machines, the cotton gin, the telegraph and the steam engine, with all its applications to navigation, railways, the printing press, etc.;—and further reflect that the Western Continent has been settled within this period—its cities founded—its lands cleared and cultivated—its teeming millions of population spread abroad almost from pole to pole, and from ocean to ocean; and then add the discoveries in Australasia, Malaysia, Polynesia, in Arctic and Antarctic climes;—in short, when we fully contemplate the "WORLD'S PROGRESS" during this period, we can scarcely fail to see the proper place and duration of the "time of the end" in the grand scale of prophecy.

"NO LONGER A TIME."

"And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the land lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer"; literally, "a time no more."

A mighty agency is brought to view; his resistless tread marches through every land; towering mountains, or spreading wastes,—the wintry North or burning South offer obstacles in vain. He makes a highway of the "world of waters." "Those who go down to the sea in ships and do business in great waters," must take with them this mysterious messenger as a passenger, and with him his wonderful "Book," over every ocean and sea, through every gulf, bay, strait and sound, and up and down every river of the world. Like the Pentecostal multitudes, "the peoples, and nations, and tongues" "hear every man in their own tongue in which they were born," the world-wide traveler, and, in all their multifarious language, read his "open volume." The king on his throne gives audience, the nobility listen, and the "common people hear him gladly." He threads out the pioneer's narrow path and calls at the log cottage; he takes the Indian trail to the red man's wigwam; he wends his way into the "terra incognita" itself, and to the negro in his hidden kraals of unexplored Africa "his hand extends the Book."

How justly is this entire chapter regarded as symbolical of the Protestant Reformation, and its agency in preaching the gospel and giving the "Bible," or "Book," to the world. Luther issued his translation in 1522. Then preaching and Bible distribution began in earnest. Rome "fulminated;" but whether "seven thunders," or "seventy times seven," it availed nothing. Its claims to being the Church were not worth the writing—not even the paper they might be written on:—"write them not," and heed them not. Since that time "what hath God wrought!" I give a single item from the Cincinnati Gazette, Dec. 21st, 1861:—

"BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY.—At a recent meeting of a provincial branch of the British and Foreign Bible Society, one of the Secretaries of the Parent Society announced that since the commencement of the society's operation, five millions sterling has been spent, and forty million copies of God's word had been distributed in one hundred and sixty languages. These copies, if ranged in a library, would cover six hundred miles of shelves, and weigh seventeen thousand tons. Thirty-one thousand copies of the Scriptures were distributed last year in Italy, and no less than thirteen copies were distributed among the lowest population of London by the Bible women."

Then take into account what all other organizations have accomplished, and how vast the amount! Probably more than sixty million copies in about two hundred languages and dialects.* Well, this wonderful agent is limited in time. When he commences, it is affirmed by the ever-living Creator of all, that "a time not yet shall be." Not a full time more! To 1517–1522 add 360, we have 1877–1882. Then the seventh trumpet sounds within fifteen to twenty years.

"THIS GENERATION."

When "the time of the end" was reduced almost to a single life-time, heaven displayed its signals, and the fig-trees of earth suddenly leaved out. The sun darkened, the moon became as blood, and the stars fell. God's people seized their lamps and hastened out at the very commencement of the "generation," 1840–1844. But as forty years once intervened between Egypt and the Promised Land, during which a "generation" (Heb. 3: 10) typical of the "last generation" (1 Cor. 10: 11) passed away, so God warns the multitudinous professors of christianity of the nearness of the kingdom for nearly the same time. Now to 1840–1844 add 40, and we have 1880–1884, as the termination of "this generation," or from eighteen to twenty-two years. The shaking of the heavenly powers, and "the sign of the Son of man," may possibly awaken the sleeping crowds too late!

But my feeble voice is to you, O church of the Book! O thou afflicted and sorrowful! thy mission in this "present evil world" is well nigh done. Dreary indeed has been thy desert pathway through the gloomy wilderness. But faint not. "The Paradise of God" is distant but a few days' journey now. The morning tintings of an eternal day will soon dissolve these dismal night-dreams, and the cloudless splendors of ineffable glory beam on thee forever. Soon "the days of thy mourning will be ended," and thy face will be wiped from all tears. But go, loved of the Redeemer,—"preach the word;" and if one hear, his "soul shall live." Tell over the story of redeeming love a few times more; if a poor sinner's heart shall melt, and he repent and believe on Jesus, go with him to some Jordan, and baptize him "for the remission of sins" into the likeness of Jesus' death, and take him along to the kingdom; give him bread and wine at the Lord's table frequently along the road thither. And, virgin band, God be with thee through the "distress of nations"—through the time of their "anger"—through the "time of trouble," when men's hearts shall fail for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." A single narrow path only leads out of this fire-bounded desert into the kingdom, and it requires well-trimmed, shining lamps to keep it. I have loved thy society in the midst of "mockings and scoffings," and I have hoped to meet you in the "home of many mansions,"

Where sweetest Paradises bloom
Beyond the deserts and the tomb;

where the "changed" and the "children of the resurrection" shall all meet. A few years more will decide it. God help me through the "perils of the last days." O what collisions of nations! O what scenes of destruction crowd the immediate future! "And I trembled in myself that I might rest in the day of trouble."—Hab. 3: 16. ELD. S. A. CHAPLIN.

The Book sealed with Seven Seals.

NUMBER ONE.

"And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals."—Rev. 5: 1.

I have seen no exposition of this book of seven seals which, to my mind, is satisfactory. All expositors seem to take it for granted that the seals are to be understood as giving a series of events in chronological order, the same as that in which the seals are opened; whereas, if they have given the correct form of ancient books, and the manner in which they were written and sealed, the order in which the seals must necessarily be opened would be exactly the reverse of the chronological order in which they were written and sealed. They tell us that "ancient books consisted of leaves of parchment, papyrus, or some fit substance, written sometimes on both sides, as in the case of Ezekiel's roll (Ezk. 2: 9, 10); but usually on but one side, and rolled up, the writing inward. If they had matter for more than one leaf, they would write it on another leaf, and roll it over the first; then another; and so on to any amount. Such, they say, was the book in the text consisting of seven leaves thus written on the inside, each succeeding leaf rolled over the preceding one, and sealed on the last edge of each leaf."

Such being the form of the book, whoever would read it must first open the last seal placed upon it. The seals are numbered, not in the order in which they were placed upon the roll, but in the order in which they were opened; consequently, if the roll contained a prediction of events to transpire in regular chronological order, the writer would naturally give them in the same order; and therefore the last leaf would give the last events in the series, and these would be disclosed on the opening of the first seal, or that on the outside of the roll where the reader would naturally begin; and it is singular that expositors should not see this, after giving us the form of the book.

They say further, "The text seems to tell us, that each leaf was written on both sides; but the best expositors agree that this is not the sense of the passage. A wrong sense is given by placing a comma where it does not belong. The pointing of the Bible is of human invention, and this passage is mistakingly so pointed as to read thus: 'written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals!' whereas the true reading is as follows: 'written within, and on the backside sealed with seven seals.' The whole account shows this to be the true reading; for the book was sealed, and no part of its writing could have been designed to be seen, till the seal was broken, and its leaf unrolled by a person able to accomplish it."

The book is represented as finished and sealed when seen by the Revelator in the right hand of Him that sat on the throne, and there is evidently an allusion to the prophecy of Daniel, who was told, after he had given through an angel a series of predictions from the third year of Cyrus, king of Persia, 10: 1, and 11: 2, to the time when "Michael shall stand up," 12: 1–4. "But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words and seal the book even to the time of the end." And when he would inquire further how long it should be to the end of these wonders, verse 6, he was told, verse 9, "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." Now suppose him to have written out minutely the principal events which were to transpire during this period, of which he says, "the time appointed was long," 10: 1, on one side of seven sheets of paper, rolling them one over another, and sealing each in the order in which it was written; it is easy to see that the last sheet would describe the scene when Michael shall stand up. Let us therefore see what scene is exhibited when the Lamb opened the first seal; or that which appeared on the outside of the roll.

"And I saw, and behold a white horse; and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering and to conquer." Rev. 6: 2. All expositors agree that the Lord Jesus Christ is the person here represented as sitting upon a white horse, and going forth conquering and to conquer; still they place the scene away back in the first ages of christianity. But the figure harmonizes with Rev. 19: 11,—"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war." The symbols which appear on the opening of each seal were designed to represent scenes which were to transpire during that period in the world's history embraced under each seal. Therefore, since the standing up of Michael is the closing scene in Daniel's vision, and the end of the kingdoms of this world; and Rev. 19: 11–21 describes the same scene more fully than it is given in 6: 2, the conclusion is unavoidable that the first seal opened by the Lamb discloses the latest events in the order of time; and each successive seal brings us back in the world's history. After admitting that the Lord Jesus Christ is the person represented as sitting upon the white horse, and going forth conquering and to conquer on the opening of the first seal, there is no possible way of explaining it, without giving it a "mystical" or "spiritual" signification, if we apply it to any period in the past; and even then no period in the history of the christian church can in any way be made to harmonise with the figure. The nearest approximation to it is found on the day of Pentecost, Acts 2, when about three thousand were converted—verse 41. But if we interpret mystically Rev. 6: 2, we must do the same with 21: 11; and consequently the battle of that great day of God Almighty, about which the prophets have said so much, is all mystical. The resurrection of the dead is mystical, and consequently the future life is also mystical. "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished"—1 Cor. 15: 16–18, and here ends the mystical interpretation of the Scriptures.

It is evident, therefore, that the emblems of "victory, triumph, and royalty," which appeared on the opening of the first seal, can be applied to no period in the past history of the christian church; but if we admit that the first seal opened discloses the last scenes revealed in the book in the order of time, all Scripture can be made to harmonize without resorting to any mystical interpretation. This will further appear as we examine the other seals.

"That Better Land."

O! talk to me of that better land!
A land by faith I see,
Where saints, a glory-crowned band,
Shall reign eternally;
O! talk to me of that evergreen field,
Bathed by life's flowing river,
Where flowers rarest fragrance yield
Forever, aye, forever.

O! talk to me of that better land!
Where blooms life's verdant tree,
O! tell me of that starry band
Whose fadeless glory I see,—
Aye! there in the saints' blest home
Shall be no slow decay,
No storm, no tempest ever come,
No night, but endless day

O! talk to me of that better land!
Where never shall fall a tear,
Nor sorrow-stricken mourners stand
Around a loved one's bier;
But where eternal youth shall bloom
With brightly beaming eye,—
No more is seen the narrow tomb,
For death itself shall die T. M. H.

Be Faithful.

"He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much."

Inspiration declares that "love is the fulfilling of the law." No marvel then that every means calculated to bring about or perfect this christian grace should be brought into requisition by the same authority. Though this declaration is strictly adhered to by all the apostles of Christ, yet none of them seem to have their whole being so perfectly absorbed in this heavenly affection as the apostle John. In Scripture, as well as history, this is a prominent characteristic in all his writings, both in his gospel and in his epistles; yea, it is the mordant that sets or gives them the attractive color young converts so highly appreciate.

In the closing words of his last epistle, he enjoins a command calculated to elicit kind feeling among friends, thus cherishing this christian grace which seems to have escaped notice. "Greet the friends by NAME." Various are the modes and forms of greeting friends by different nations and individuals, but one thing the Apostle would dictate relative to the matter, which is, calling the name of the friend we address. Perhaps a moment's reflection might serve to convince, that speaking the name of the friend we greet, serves to awaken and promote kindly feelings among christians and all refined and well bred people. Look here! When you met that friend, and he said "How do you do, Bro. A.," as your name was pronounced, did not kindness kindle, causing you to reciprocate this christian politeness? Was not the impression better than when another met you with the same language without speaking your name? "A word to the wise is sufficient." That there is something in this greeting by NAME calculated to awaken the better feelings of our nature, must be apparent to the reflective mind, and adds one more proof that "all Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable, . . . that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished."

This command, then, is one small piece of the christian's furniture. Then do not cast it away or place it in some obscure corner never to be used. If the man of God could have been thoroughly furnished without it, this would not have been added. God has no useless lumber in his Word, but just enough to furnish his men with. Then let us find a proper place for the use of all this furniture so kindly provided by a beneficent Creator. B. MATHEWSON.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER FIVE.

By what has been said in former articles, it can be seen that while God has ordained or granted "power" to the Gentiles, to govern themselves by such forms as they might, in the free exercise of their wills and abilities, adopt and maintain, he has by no means relinquished his claim on their obedience to his own law, nor is there any evidence that God has dictated or directed the nations in the formation of their systems of "law and order." The very nature, variety, change, and cruelties of these systems, refute such an idea. Then with what propriety can men urge, as they generally do, that duty to God must lead men to sacrifice, fight and die for the government under which they live? that christians are bound by their allegiance to Christ to do so? This is an evil delusion, to blind men by confounding their institutions with God's and so claim to be his under rulers, while they despise his law. It is true that some systems of government are much better and more correct in principle than others; some which approximate much nearer than others to the civil law which God ordained and dictated for Israel; and this is because of the light and truth which the Bible has given to the people composing those nations. The blessings of the Bible are seen in a thousand various manifestations, where the people do not become fully obedient to God. Every right and good influence produces a beneficial effect upon mankind, and aids men to approximate towards the true standard of right. For all such influences we should be glad. For all good features, and correct principles, and right laws in human government, we should render thanks to God. He has produced them; not by an act of direct instruction and dictation to the men who framed the laws, but by the manifestations of his attributes in his word, and by his Spirit in his children. We should appreciate and seek to [illegible] every good principle of human government, but never confound it with God's government; never claim that it is a divine government while made and administered by fallen, erring, depraved men, who do not obey Christ, do not deny themselves, nor live as "pilgrims and strangers."

God never had but one civil government or institution, that was established with the children of Israel, given from Sinai; that was God's legislation, and his appointment of officers to administer the laws. "But that was not a perfect system," some may urge. So said Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles. I do not doubt this testimony. But why an imperfect law from a perfect God and governor? Because of the condition of those to be governed. They were in so crude and degraded, darkened and uncultivated state, living in the indulgence of the wildest passions as a people, that they as moral agents could only be raised from such a state by a gradual ascent from the deepest degradation to moral perfection; as in the case of a barbarous or benighted individual, who must learn one thing at a time, correcting an evil here, then another there, from less to greater, and by a moderate process of cultivation. So in the case of a rebellious race. Had the Lord given a system as clearly against all vice and moral pollution as elevated and self-denying, in the days of Abraham, as he gave in the days of Moses, it is doubtful if a company of "six hundred thousand" would have been found entering into covenant with God, to be led out of Egypt. And had he in the law of Sinai given as clear and decisive prohibitions, as direct and explicit demands for entire self-denial, for conformity to the highest principles of purity and moral perfections, as he did in the message of Christ, the Mediator of the new covenant, they would doubtless have been less ready to enter into covenant with God, to obey his law, and keep his statutes, than when Moses came down and delivered the law to them from Sinai.

But "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul. The testimonies of the Lord are right, making wise the simple," says David. Yes, there was perfection in the law. It aimed at elevating humanity to a state of moral purity. It was not lacking in goodness, in correctness; but it had not fully developed its principles. It was a schoolmaster, to lead to Christ (Gal. 3). When Christ came, then was "the time of reformation;" then the spirit and intent of the moral law, to which had been attached the civil code, was fully developed in the declarations of principles of the gospel. The civil government having been abused and perverted, God had broken down the institution in the days of Zedekiah, and let the government of nations, during mortality, pass gradually over to the Gentiles (Ezek. 21, Dan. 2); and when Jesus was rejected at the temple in Jerusalem, God was divorced from them as a nation. Look here!

Religious feastings have become very common among the sects, and are they not too often practiced among Adventists? I have always been heartily sorry when I have heard of any thing of the kind taking place among them, on account of the very bad influence they have on the holy cause they profess. Now, dear brethren and sisters in Christ, our Lord has given us plain directions concerning these things. He says, "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed, for (or because) they cannot recompense thee." Now to suppose that our Savior, by example or by precept, ever taught or sustained intemperance, luxury, or extravagance in any form, or vain, foolish conversation, is (in my humble view) little better than blasphemy. The New Testament Scriptures do inculcate temperance in all things, sobriety, economy, simplicity, purity, yea, the entire coming out from the world, from its spirit, customs, fashions, follies, amusements, honors, acts and pleasures, that are sinful. Nothing is plainer, or more evident, than that all the saints of God are solemnly bound to come out, and to keep out, of all worldly customs (that are wrong and have an evil tendency), and to live soberly, righteously and godly in this present evil world. Now just let me ask you the solemn, candid question, is God glorified by pic-nics, oyster suppers, tea-parties, soirees, luxurious holiday feasts, levees, or pastoral visits, as they are carried on at the present day? Do they lead to repentance for sin, or reformation of life, or holiness of heart, or eternal salvation? Can we, as faithful stewards of God, dispose of his money thus, and feel a clear conscience, when millions are perishing for lack of spiritual food? "A word to the (truly) wise is sufficient."

Again: we have by far too many professed christians that follow the world, that seek for gain, that roll in luxury, that know comparatively nothing of sacrifice, of christian toil or self-denial; they divide efforts, they fritter away their powers, they are confused in their endeavors, they attempt much, lose all, and in all probability will at last be lost themselves! Then let us come out from the world and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing.

Human Ghostology.—No. 5.

VI. GHOSTS GOING TO HELL. The damnation of a part of a man at a time, the soul at one time, and the body at another time, is not taught in the Bible. In the region of the damned there is to be "weeping and gnashing of teeth." A colored lady, who had become skeptical upon the question of damnation at death, once remarked that she had read in her Bible that the wicked went to hell gnashing their teeth; that she once saw a wicked old man die, and she noticed that his teeth remained; hence she concluded that he had not gone to hell. Perhaps she had not learned that ghosts have "teeth." If ghosts are now "wailing," and "weeping" in regions of damnation, is it not strange that they were never heard to "wail" upon leaving the body?—Really, I cannot imagine how a ghost would look "weeping." If the souls of the wicked are sent to hell at death, why is Satan and his crew of demons allowed to remain among the children of men? If hell is now in readiness for the reception of sinners, why is not this class of great sinners confined there? Would God allow the greater sinners to go unpunished, and punish those of fewer sins? Again: if there is a hell now in readiness for sinners, to which the impenitent go at death, there is an irreconcilable inconsistency in the theory: the man of a few sins who died a thousand years ago, is to be tormented a thousand years longer than the man of many sins who dies to-day, upon the popular hypothesis. Foolish conjectures concerning degrees in the heat of the fire will avail nothing. Upon the supposition that there is now a burning hell in existence, it remains an unsolved problem as to its location. Is it not better to acquiesce in Peter's decision, that God will "reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment TO BE PUNISHED?" 2 Peter 2: 9. Christ distinctly affirms that, "They that have done evil [shall come forth,] unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 29. Thus the damnation, or punishment of the wicked is beyond their "resurrection," in "the day of judgment"—not before. This agrees with the Savior's declaration; "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof IN THE DAY OF JUDGMENT;" and again, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall JUDGE HIM IN THE LAST DAY." Matt. 12: 36, and John 12: 48. But we are told that the Bible frequently mentions hell as a place now in existence. So it does, but not the hell of punishment for the wicked. The term hell is used in our version of the Bible, when no allusion is made to a burning realm or hell of punishment. This is owing to the fact that the term "hell" in our version is indiscriminately translated from four different original terms, which are not identical in meaning; namely: Sheol, Hades, Tartarus and Gehenna. The Hebrew term sheol, and the Greek term hades, are corresponding words; hades being the Greek representative of the Hebrew sheol. Where David, in speaking prophetically of Christ, remarks, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in sheol," (Ps. 16: 10) Peter quotes, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hades," (Acts 2: 27); thus proving, by using them interchangeably, that they are identical in meaning. Hence, what we prove of one is true of the other. We remark:—

First: Sheol is not the fiery hell of damnation; for saints go to sheol at death as really as sinners do. Job prayed, "Oh that thou wouldest hide me in sheol." Job 14: 13. Did he pray to be hid in a burning hell of fire? Jacob said, "I will go down into sheol unto my son mourning."—Gen. 37: 35. Did he think of going to a hell of fire? David said, "God will redeem my soul from the power of sheol."—Ps. 49: 15. Did he expect to go to a hell of fire, and then be redeemed therefrom? God, in speaking through Hosea concerning the resurrection of the saints, remarks; "I will ransom them from the power of sheol." Hosea 13: 13. Thus all of the saints will come from sheol at the resurrection. This agrees with Paul, where he assures us that at the resurrection the saints shall sing, "O hades, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15: 55. Again: Christ himself went to sheol or hades. See Ps. 16: 10, 11; Acts 2: 27, 28. Did Christ go to the hell of damnation? Neither sheol or hades are ever spoken of as being a place of fire, except in the case of the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Should any one insist that this is not a parable, but a literal historical narration, let them not shrink from the revolting conclusion that hell is within sight and within speaking distance of heaven, and that the shrieks and groans of the damned would drown the hallelujahs of the saved; and that the parents in heaven must be continually in sight and in hearing of their unfortunate offspring who are writhing in keen anguish and shrieking in hopeless agony: for Abraham and the rich man talk together and see each other. Can ghosts see further and speak louder than men—loud enough to be heard from heaven to hell? If so, why do we not hear them? Take the consequences, or admit it to be a parable. "Hell," when translated from sheol or hades, is not a place of torment.

Secondly: Sheol is not the receptacle of ghosts, but of dead men—corporeal men! Said Jacob, "Then shall ye bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to sheol." Gen. 42: 38. That part of man which wears "gray hairs" goes to "sheol." Do ghosts wear gray hairs? How would a gray haired ghost look? The wicked are to be "silent in sheol." Ps. 31: 17. Is sheol a land of dumb ghosts? Then how happened the rich man to plead for water? David says, "Their beauty shall consume in sheol." Ps. 49: 14. How would a ghost look shorn of its beauty, wearing gray hairs, and having its lips sealed with silence? Ezekiel speaks of those who have "gone down to hell (sheol) with their weapons of war." Ezek. 32: 27. Do ghosts carry weapons of war to sheol? Is sheol a battle-field for ghosts? "Thy pomp is brought down to sheol, . . . the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." Isa. 14: 11. Do worms prey upon ghosts?

Thirdly: Even if sheol were a depository for the ghosts of men, instead of being a depository of corporeal men, they would be deprived of consciousness there. "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in sheol." Eccl. 9: 10.

Fourthly: To escape the force of the fact that saints go to sheol as really as sinners do, we are told that sheol or hades has two departments, one for saints, and the other for sinners, this one being called Paradise, and the other called hell. If so, both hell and Paradise will meet with a fiery destruction. "Oh, sheol, I will be thy destruction." Hosea 13: 14. "Death and hades were cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 14. Thus, hell and Paradise meet with "destruction" in the "lake of fire." Deliver me from that Paradise. Tartarus is used only in 2 Pet. 2: 4, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell (Tartarus) and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment." Here Tartarus is not spoken of as a place for wicked men, but for the "angels that sinned;" nor is it the place of their punishment, for they are there "reserved unto judgment," to receive their recompense. Gehenna brings to view a hell of fire. "Shall be in danger of hell-fire." Matt. 5: 22. Gehenna brings to view not only a hell of fire, but a hell for the corporeal man. "If thy right eye offend thee, [cause thee to offend—margin,] pluck it out and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Matt. 5: 29. When the sinner is cast into gehenna, a hell of fire, he will go there bodily; and as the body does not go to a hell of fire at death, it will not go there till "they that have done evil [shall come forth] unto the resurrection of damnation." "And not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Matt. 5: 30. The whole body only goes to the grave at death; hence, it must have a resurrection before being cast into a hell of fire, in harmony with the truth that God will "reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be PUNISHED." "Rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10: 28. Soul and body are to be cast into hell together—not a ghost merely. "And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell." Mark 9: 43. See also the 45th and 47th verses. Here we learn that when men are cast into gehenna, a hell of fire, that they go with "hands," "feet," and "eyes," even the same hands and feet that might have been cut off, and the same eyes that might have been plucked out. Supposing ghosts have hands and feet, could they be cut off? Even if ghosts have eyes, could they be plucked out? How would a one-eyed ghost look bobbing along on one leg, destitute of one hand?

It is not the ghost, but the real man that will be cast into gehenna, hell; and he will be cast there bodily when the "resurrection of damnation" shall bring him out of the grave. The theory of the damnation of human ghosts minus of the body, is only an item of speculation, having no foundation in the word of God. There is a future hell of fire for wicked men, but no present one for ghosts. W. SHELDON.

Conference Report.

Advent Conference and Protracted Meeting in Richford, Vt., commenced Jan. 1st, 1862. Bro. P. V. West was appointed Chairman, and S. S. Garvin Secretary. Brethren S. Heath, R. Smith, and P. Scott, were chosen as a committee to report the interest and business of the conference. The committee reported the last day, Jan. 15th, as follows:

"BRETHREN OF THE CONFERENCE:—Your committee beg leave in the conclusion of our meetings to make the following report. Some of you are aware that the Adventists in this vicinity, having a desire to see the cause revived, and souls gathered to Christ, consulted on the best means of promoting this object, which resulted in a unanimous invitation to Eld J. V. Himes to visit and labor with us for ten days or more, for the promotion of the cause in this region. Bro. H. commenced his labors among us Jan. 1st, and continued each day for fifteen days. Three services were held each day, and Eld. H. gave lectures afternoon and evening. The word took effect so that, after the third day, the good work begun, souls were moved and began to flock to the altar, both backsliders and the unconverted. The work has been deep and widespread. A considerable number have been converted and reclaimed, who are now strong in faith, giving glory to God. We have not seen so good and glorious a work in this region since 1843-4. Other denominations have participated in the work and have been blessed.

"The themes on which our brother has dwelt were doctrinal, prophetical, and practical; on all of them he showed himself a workman who needeth not to be ashamed. The fruit has been good. We have been built up, cheered and encouraged, as Adventists. We have had meat in due season, some of the old corn of the land, a few grapes from the other shore,—just what the Adventists need everywhere in this period of the world. Adventists should be awake to a sense of duty and the importance of the work in which they are engaged.

As we are among the tried ones of 1843-4, we are witnesses that, as like produces like, so when the key-note of the gospel of the kingdom is touched, it vibrates through the hearts of those who are waiting for the consolation of Israel. We feel to praise God for his mercy to our brother, in raising him up from sickness, and giving him health and strength to enter the missionary field again. We never saw him in so good a state of mind, or heard him preach with such power. God is with him, and we bid him God speed in the good work, and hope that he may have health and strength to finish the work that God has given him to do, both by the voice and pen. In conclusion, we offer the following preamble and Resolution:

Whereas, we as Adventists believe we are living in the end of this dispensation, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; and whereas God is multiplying the signs and evidences of the speedy coming of his kingdom, therefore

Resolved, That we as Adventists ought to come out and take a more bold and decided stand on the time of the Lord's coming.

Resolved, That we are rejoiced to see men raised up in Europe and this country, who are giving the cry, "Behold he cometh!" with the evidences of time when he will come, and bid them God speed in their work.

Resolved, That the evidences given us by Eld. J. V. Himes during this conference, on the signs of Christ's coming, in connexion with the termination of the prophetic periods in 1868, are worthy of the candid consideration of the church and the world.

Resolved, That the time has come for us to wake up and enter anew upon our work, to give the trump a certain sound, to warn the church and world to prepare for the judgment."

The above was adopted and passed unanimously at the close of the afternoon service, Jan. 15th.

The closing service in the evening was one of marked interest. Although the outward circumstances seemed to be against us, yet we had a good gathering, an excellent discourse, and marked attention. At the close a number came forward for prayer and found peace in Christ. Thus our meetings closed with a triumphant victory over the powers of darkness. We hope the good work will still go on, until the stout-hearted sinner, whose heart and life are not subject to the law of God, may be brought to humbly submit to the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and a people be raised up here, that shall stand boldly in the cause of truth, and, after having suffered with Christ, be glorified together at his appearing.

Brethren, pray for us, that the very God of peace may sanctify us wholly, and our whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

S. S. GARVIN, Secretary.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. GRANT:—I send some more extracts from letters, to show that investigation of our views are going on.

"MICHIGAN, Oct. 20, 1861.

ELD. BLAIN:—Enclosed please find pay for works I want, a list of which I give below. Your work and the Crisis came duly to hand from Chicago. I was glad to hear from you so soon. . . . In your letter you ask me to write you concerning my views. I can only say, I am forming them—finding new truths daily. Not long since I united with the Baptist church, (my father's church.) I then entertained the view common in the so-called Orthodox churches of the endless torment of the wicked. I met with a gentleman in Wis. last fall, who said he believed in the destruction of the wicked, but I thought I could confute him. Last spring, in traveling through Buchanan, Mich., I chanced to meet with Elder Mansfield and wife, and had some talk with them on the subject, and on leaving, Eld. M. gave me 'Death not Life,' which, so to speak, I soon devoured, being determined to learn where the truth was. I had my Bible by me, and turned to see the connection. I could discover no error, and I had to give up to your arguments, or rather, to Bible arguments, as set forth in the work. I found every objection I had heard, and some I had not heard, fully answered. When I had finished the book, I felt pretty well convinced of its truth, and felt to rejoice that it will be so with the sinner, who 'will not come to Christ for life.' I said to myself, O that it may be true! I am not settled on the state of the dead. I have sent your work to our pastor and requested him to preach on the subject. Should my views become settled, and I think they will, I hope to do much good here among the students in college."

In a subsequent letter he says:—

"Studies in college have prevented my reading as much as I wish to, but I have read Luther Lee against destruction, and find he utterly fails in his proof and arguments. I have also read the four works of Eld. M. Grant, which you sent me, and must say, I never read as clear, honest and logical arguments. The ideas were entirely new to me. My brother and some of the students are examining the subject, and as soon as possible, I shall send for a good supply of works."

In the case of this young man, we get a glimpse at what our books are doing, and so see encouragement for the C. P. S., and want to send more works to this Baptist college. J. BLAIN.

GERMANS.—It is supposed that the number of German speaking people in this country is 5,000,000. More than half are Protestants, nominally Lutherans, though many having been disgusted with State churches, now give but little attention to religious matters. They have been a religious people, and undoubtedly, in this free country, their infidelity will be greatly diminished. The Baptists have about fifty German churches. The Methodist Episcopal church has 311 churches, valued at $507,460, with about 20,000 members, and probably 100,000 attendants upon their preaching in the German language. The United Brethren and other denominations have some representatives among them. The number of German soldiers in the field is said to be about 40,000.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 5, 1862.

What is Coming?

The above inquiry is a very common one at the present day. This oft recurring question is asked with much seriousness by those who know not what the Scriptures teach. All classes appear to be satisfied that some great event is at hand, but they are in the dark as to what it is, and will remain so till they turn to the neglected Bible, and its "sure word of prophecy," where they will find the matter all made plain. The great darkness that envelops the minds of the people, is owing, in a large measure, to the fact that the popular ministers of the day do not explain the prophecies to the people. There is a double reason for this neglect. First, they have not studied the prophecies, and therefore cannot explain them; and secondly, if they should preach on those which show the end of all things at hand, giving their true exposition, they would become unpopular with the fashionable part of their congregations, lose their salary, and be classed with the sect everywhere spoken against. This, but few will consent to do. Theirs is a sad condition; worse, because of the darkness in which they have kept the people. Would that something might open their eyes before it is too late for them to give the warning to those who inquire, "Watchman, what of the night?"

Let those who see the clear light now beaming forth from the prophetic chart use every possible means to enlighten the people in relation to the grand event to transpire. By so doing, we may be instrumental in saving many from their dangerous position, causing them to prepare to meet the coming Bridegroom.

There is great reason to fear that a large number who see the light, even among those who are looking for the coming of Christ, are hiding it under a bushel, because they think it is too late to do much for this wicked world. They have endeavored to warn their neighbors in time past, and have seen so little result, they have become discouraged, and weary in well-doing, contrary to the instruction of the Lord. If we refuse to warn the people, we shall be condemned ourselves, for neglect of duty. It was necessary for Noah to warn the antediluvians to be clear himself, and in order that they should be without excuse when called to judgment. It may be as crossing for us to sound the alarm, as for Jonah to warn the Ninevites, but the cross must be borne, or condemnation follows.

In answer to the inquiry, "What is coming?" let every man and woman, whose mind has been illumined by prophetic light, answer promptly and boldly, "The Lord of lords is coming in all his glory, to raise the dead and set up his kingdom." Echo it far and near.—O.

"The New Gospel."

We have truly fallen upon "strange times." Times when men seem to be ready to believe any thing but the truth as it is revealed in the Bible. Men are stretching their imaginations to invent new systems of theology to gratify the "itching ears" of these "last days." If some wild and fanciful theory be advanced, it is sure to find followers and advocates, if it is only so abstruse that none can understand it, as is the case with Swedenborgianism.

In the Banner of Light, for Jan. 4th, 1862, it is said, "Spiritualism is the new gospel of the age, and it is our work to proclaim the glad tidings of great joy." When we examine this "new gospel," we find it opposed in all its features to the gospel of Christ and the apostles. All the spirits deny that we are saved by Christ's death and sufferings, or that he was the Son of God more than any other good man. They all deny that he was begotten of the Holy Spirit, but affirm that he was the son of Joseph. They teach that the only way we are saved by him is by imitating his example; that his death is of no more consequence to our race than the death of any good man. They all deny the resurrection of the dead, and the personal coming of Christ. These are some of the points in the "new gospel," all of which are in opposition to what the apostle preached.

Said Paul, "There be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."—Gal. 1: 7-8. It is a fact, that the only conversions made by the "new gospel," are from a belief of its sacred truths to a bold denial of the same; from a belief in Christ as our Savior, to the adoption of old heathen fables new vamped and colored, with new labels.

The writer in the Banner goes on to say, "All things are ready for the establishment of the kingdom of Spirituality upon earth." It is evidently the design of Satan to govern this planet for a time before its end, by means of the multitudes of mediums scattered in all parts of the world. Through them, the instruction is to be given, which is to be carried out by men appointed for the work. We may reasonably expect he will not give up his hold upon this world without a terrible struggle. Hence, by means of the demons, he is now gathering the nations for the final, awful conflict. Let us keep clear of the war spirit, if we expect to be ready to see Jesus at his coming.—O.

Answer to Inquiry.

Bro. Titus wishes to know the meaning of James 5: 7, which reads as follows:—"Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain." The application of this verse is apparent, when taken in connection with the next one, which reads, "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." The point, or pith of the text is this: we should be patient like the husbandman who has "long patience" in waiting for the rain to bring forth the fruits of his labor. But why this exhortation on patience? If we read from the beginning of the chapter, the whole matter is plain: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you, Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton, ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you."—James 5. 1-6. This scripture shows that in "the last days" "rich men" will rob the poor and oppress them with rigid severity, so that they will have need of great patience to endure it, but amidst all, the instruction is, "Be patient." "Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain." Now, if the husbandman can wait so long for the fruit, cannot the child of God have patience to bear the oppression of the rich men, till the time comes for the saints to reap the fruits of their labors, and receive the kingdom? Inasmuch as the children of God receive a much greater reward than the husbandman, they should have more patience.

It is true that such oppressive treatment is calculated to cause impatience, and hard feelings; hence he says in ver. 9, "Grudge not one against another, lest ye be condemned."

In order to enforce the importance of patience, James goes on, in the next verse, to bring up the prophets and Job in their deep affliction and trials caused by the enemies of the Lord, and says, "Take, my brethren, the prophets who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and seen the end of the Lord, that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy."

We think the application of James 5: 7, is very plain when taken with the context, and is designed to impress upon us the importance of patience, when oppressed by the rich.—O.

Who was Jesus?

The answer to the above question is given by a spirit, as published in the Banner of Light, in the following language:—

"The record tells you that Jesus was the son of Mary, and the especial son of the Holy Ghost. But this is not so, Jesus Christ was the legitimate son of Caiphas, the high priest." This spirit goes on to say that Christ was the Son of God, "as are the sons who inhabit the earth at the present time—no more so, no less so."

The reader may think that scarcely any one believes such monstrous fables, but we have the means of knowing that these sentiments are becoming very common, and are continually spreading. When will the children of the Lord awake to the perils that surround them, and boldly meet the enemies of the cross? Shall we sleep till our friends, companions and children are all bound by the chains of the enemy?

"Oh! let all the soul within you
For the truth's sake go abroad;
Strike! let every nerve and sinew
Tell on ages, tell for God."—O.

Judging.

"Judge nothing before the time."—1 Cor. 4: 5.

A Bro. wishes to know if it is right for any one to sit in judgment on the brethren; or if 1 Pet. 4: 17, is to be thus applied at the present time? The verse reads as follows:—"For the time is come that judgment must begin at the house of God: and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"

The only point to settle is, has the time come to judge? We are plainly taught to "judge nothing before the time." Then it follows that he who judges "before the time," has broken the commandment, and is guilty before the Lord. When is the time? Can this point be positively settled beyond a doubt? Most certainly. We have only to read a few words more of 1 Cor. 4: 5,—"Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come!" This settles the matter forever. Hence, if any one claims the time has come to judge, let him first prove that the Lord has come. If he cannot show that Jesus has come, then be sure that whoever assumes the right to judge, on account of any spiritual discernment he may have more than others, is not a doer but a breaker of the law. The children of the Lord have nothing to fear from such judgments, only that the judges will scatter and divide the flock of God. Let such judges listen to the apostle Paul: "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. . . . Let us not therefore judge one another any more: but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way."—Rom. 14: 10, 13.—O.

The Day of the Lord.

Since the fall of Adam, this world has been passing through one long, dark, and tedious night. Again and again the cry has been, "Watchman, what of the night?" To this there has been but the one answer, "The morning cometh, and also the night."

In this answer was the language of faith, and hope—language having for its authority the declaration of Almighty God, assuring us that while the six thousand years of sin, of sorrow, and of death, must pass over this world, there is a bright and joyful day to dawn upon the faithful—a morning when the sleepers shall wake up, the chill damps of death be dissipated, and tears be forever wiped away. When "the good time coming," "the desire of all nations," shall come; but which, alas! is the time also when the unfaithful, gathered out of the kingdom, shall be cast into outer darkness, into a night infinitely more awful, where "shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." "The morning cometh, and also the night." This day it is which, promised to our parents while yet they lingered at the gates of paradise, often told in prophetic story, rejoiced in by the angelic host, and ratified by the birth, the life, the death, the burial, the triumphant resurrection and glorious ascension of the Son of God, has been cherished in the hearts of the faithful in all ages. It is the grand jubilee, toward which unnumbered millions have stretched forth their longing desires, and for which the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain.

The day has been called, The day of the Lord, and, The day of judgment. The following may be quoted as bearing upon this point: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." "He hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief."

The time measured by the expression, "Day of the Lord," is a thousand years. The proof of this is found in the abundant declarations of Scripture, as also in the nature of the events then to transpire. Of the desolate condition of Israel, the prophet Hosea says, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us: he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth." Hosea 6: 1-3. Understanding this as applying to the two chiliads, or periods of a thousand years each, that were then to transpire before "the third day," the day of the Lord, when they were to be raised up, and "live in his sight," and the passage is reasonably and at once understood. A similar passage, and one that should doubtless be similarly interpreted, is to be found in Luke 13: 32. "Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." Another proof, and equally clear too, is the faith held by the church in all ages, that, as God was six days in creating the heavens and the earth, and rested on the seventh day, so after the lapse of six thousand years, there should follow a seventh millennary of rest. This position has for its foundation, not only the Sabbaths of days, and of weeks, and of years, of the Old Testament,—each of which was a type, and must according to the divine law have an anti-type—but, is equally taught in the New Testament. "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."—Col. 2: 16. Of this the same apostle says again, that although "we which have believed do enter into rest," (for the body of which the Sabbath is a shadow, "is of Christ,") "if Joshua (marg.) had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day. There remaineth therefore a rest (Sabbatismos, keeping of a Sabbath,) to the people of God."—Heb. 4: 8, 9. St. Peter, agreeing with St. Paul, and if possible more explicit, says, "But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day." "But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night."—2 Pet. 3: 8, 10. To say that a day of twenty-four hours is with the Lord the same as a thousand years, would hardly seem consistent; but to understand the word day, as measuring in the divine calendar a thousand years, is not at all difficult to comprehend. But adding line upon line, as if God would not have us left in the least doubt upon this subject, it is finally said:—"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled." "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death shall have no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." See Rev. 20.—M.

A Sign of the Times.

The following from a correspondent of the Elmira Times, opens up the deep depravity of the age, and affords another indication that these are the times delineated by St. Paul, (2 Tim. 3,) when, among other things, men "having a form of godliness" should be "fierce." Alas! "How is the gold become dim!" How extensively the spirit manifested by this professed disciple of the meek and lowly Savior, and minister of his gospel, may be possessed by others of the same profession, we do not know. But from such a spirit, we most heartily pray, "Good Lord, deliver us."—M.

"A NEW BOMB-SHELL INVENTED BY A METHODIST PREACHER.—It has two compartments, or there is a shell within another shell. The inner chamber contains powder, the outer a pasty mixture of camphene and other intensely inflammatory and explosive materials. When it bursts, this paste is scattered in all directions, and sets fire to everything it falls upon—some that were experimented with burned even the grass and blackened the earth for fifty feet about it. Falling and bursting amid a body of men, what a terrible result would follow! Fragments of iron, old bullets, nails, and such things flying about are uncomfortable, but when you add to them the likelihood of being scorched by another agent that sticks fast wherever it falls, and you have a combination quite too fiendish to be talked of lightly. One Puffer is the inventor. He took several of his shells to Washington, where the experiments that he made were eminently satisfactory to his examiners, and now the inventor has gone on to West Point to superintend the manufacture of five hundred thousand of these missiles. Should the war continue, the clerical inventor will have a fine opportunity of doing as he is reported to have said he would do—'Faith, sir, I preached hell-fire and brimstone in the abstract a long time, and now I'll give 'em a little of it in the concrete form.'"

Christ's Coming.

The spirits are doing all they can to persuade people to believe that Christ is never coming personally; that all the coming to be looked for is the spread of the principles taught by Spiritualists. It is claimed by the spirits that those who are expecting the literal coming of our Savior, are looking for an ignis fatus. The following statement from a spirit will set the matter clearly before the reader. In answer to the question, "When may we look for Christ's coming?" the spirit says:

"Behold, we answer, he is with you; and if you look for a personal Christ, that shall come surrounded by legions of angels, attended with glory and honor, such a belief will never ultimate into knowledge. It is but an ignis fatus gathered from the marshes of your time. On, then, turn from within and find the Christ of to-day; look for him in the highway, and find him there—look for him among the lowly, and when the voice of mystery comes to you, do not say he is not there, but go forth to meet him."—O.

The French Revolution.

The following extracts will give the reader some idea of the state of things in Paris during the French revolution:—

"The most sacred relations of life were at the same time placed on a new footing, suited to the extravagant ideas of the times. Marriage was declared a civil contract, binding only during the pleasure of the contracting parties. Divorce immediately became general; and the corruption of manners reached a height unknown during the worst days of the monarchy. So indiscriminate did concubinage become, that, by a decree of the convention, bastards were declared entitled to an equal share of the succession (property) with legitimate children. The divorces in Paris in the first three months of 1792 were 562, while the marriages were only 1785—a proportion probably unexampled among mankind! The consequences soon became apparent. Before the era of the Consulate (that is, before the end of the reign of terror) one-half of the whole births in Paris were illegitimate." Thiers' French Revolution, Vol. ii, p. 380. Note.

On one occasion, a procession was formed composed of an immense crowd of assassins and prostitutes, followed by an "ass bearing the gospel, the cross, and the communion vases, which were soon committed to the flames, while the ass was compelled to drink out of the communion-cup."

"When the spirit of war against the Bible began to fully manifest itself in the year 1793, the views of the people were such that even theatrical performers were loudly cheered for their blasphemous raillery against God and the Bible. The comedian, Monet, in the church of St. Roche (Paris) carried impiety to its height. 'God, if you exist,' said he, 'avenge your injured name! I bid you defiance. You remain silent. You dare not launch your thunders. Who after this will believe in your existence?'—Thiers' French Rev. Vol. ii, p 371.

It is said of De Cloots, whose opinions were received by the masses, that "He never ceased to propose the destruction of tyrants and all sorts of Gods, and insisted that, among mankind enfranchised and enlightened, nothing ought to be left but pure reason and its beneficent and immortal worship. . . . I boldly preach that there is no other God but Nature, no other sovereign but the human race—the people, God. . . . Reason will unite all men into a single representative bundle, without any other tie than epistolary correspondence. . . . Citizens, religion is the only obstacle to this Utopia. It is high time to destroy it. The human race has burned its swaddling-clothes."—Thiers' French Rev. Vol. ii, p. 367.

There is reason to believe that the same state of things will be witnessed again, only upon a more extensive scale. The sentiment just quoted is becoming quite popular, "that there is no other God but Nature, no other sovereign but the human race—the people—God." This is the teaching of the spirits and Spiritualists. We may expect to see Atheism enthroned and honored.—O.

☞ We are lacking in news of special importance this week, but it is thought news that will make our ears tingle may be expected soon. Our nation is impatient with the tardiness of our government in suppressing the rebellion; and that the eyes of more than one nation in Europe are looking with eagerness this way, is but too apparent. But we have no clue to the future save what we get from the sure word of prophecy, from which we gather there is for this world a dark and terrible future to be realized before long.—M.

Brownson on Catholicism.

Dr. O. Brownson, formerly a Protestant, and now editor of the Roman Catholic "Quarterly Review," has just published an article on "The re-union of all Christians." Of this the Springfield Republican says:—

"He acknowledges that in this age the mere assertion of authority convinces nobody, and that the Catholic church is under the necessity of establishing conviction by an appeal to reason and conscience. He finds in its failure to do this, and in its denial and defiance of the claims of human reason, the explanation of the fact that the church is at war with civilization and progress, and is losing its hold upon the educated classes throughout the world. He says that the serious fact is, that even in the Catholic countries only a minority, and perhaps only a small minority, really adhere firmly in their minds and hearts to the church, and that Catholic thought does not predominate at the present moment either in Italy, France or Austria. 'We are making no inroads worth speaking of on heterodox nations, and the so-called Catholic nations are overrun with doubt, incredulity and indifference.' He accounts for this by saying that the Catholic theologians have not yet learned the secret of the nineteenth century, and though they adhere conscientiously to the established dogmas of the church, they fail to realize the necessity for the evolution and development of those dogmas in accordance with the progress of society and civilization."—M.

THE POPE'S PRECARIOUS CONDITION:—The N. Y. Tribune says:—M.

"The cessation of the Pope's authority as a temporal Prince, which may be regarded as the inevitable result of the present occupation of his territories by the Sardinian troops, is only the final consummation of a revolution which has been in progress for more than three centuries. . . . It was not however to be expected that the subjects of the Pope would rest satisfied under a form of Government which had been discarded in all the rest of Christendom; and it is in the natural course of events that the same deprivation of political authority which had befallen all the inferior prelates should at last extend to the head of the church. The Pope, it is most likely, may continue to exercise a nominal government over the city of Rome, as well from the extreme difficulty of finding any other residence for him, as because Rome enjoys the character of being the capital of the Catholic world. Yet it must have an evil look to see him maintained in it only by the presence and support of troops over whom he can have no authority."

This Tract of 16 pages has upon it the imprint of the Harbinger by which we infer it may be had at that office. That these are unanswerable arguments it is our opinion one needs only to read with an unprejudiced mind, and they will probably believe. We are glad Eld. Seymour has published this tract.—M.

A Letter.

For the Crisis.

To the Friends in Christ:—While surrounded by those who know but to condemn the truths which we so highly prize, how sweet the privilege of communicating with those of "like precious faith." I have numbered many years of invalid life. The light of my morning sun was obscured by calamities that left me with the burden of helplessness in early life; but by the mercy of God, at the commencement of this term of affliction, the light of the glorious gospel of truth as it pertains to eternal life, the gift of God to the righteous only, and the soon coming of Christ to bestow it upon his faithful ones, dawned upon my pathway and shed its soothing beams upon my sad heart; and though most unworthy, I have experienced the power of God's truth to sustain in life's darkest, most trying hour, and by it I have been encouraged to ever hope on; and, thank God, we hope not in vain.

Ah! what times are these in which we live! in which all things tell us with trumpet tongue of the close of this world's week of toil and unrest, and the great harvest just before us, when it shall be said, "He that is holy, let him be holy still," and he that is unholy, let him be unholy still. Fearful words! We read, and then earnestly inquire, what is being done to lessen the number of those of whom it shall be thus said? Those who have health and means and are yet dealing with a sparing hand to God's suffering cause, have they forgotten that we are only stewards? Know they not the luxury of doing good? that they that give to the poor lend to the Lord? O! when we let the love of God take possession of our poor hearts, how it enriches them! what love it gives for our fellows, for all the cause of God! how easy then to labor for him, to deny (!) ourselves! how hard, rather, to be deprived of the privilege! Then when we put our hand into our purse for our own wants, how we scrutinize them! "Can we not do without it? Can we not spare it to relieve somewhat that burden that presses us so?" Soon a voice from yonder heaven proclaims, "Gather together my saints unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice"—mark, "by sacrifice." Where then shall we be found?

And the times verily are perilous, while we are moving not on the calmer seas of past time but where the current of the great whirlpool of destruction is moving with increasing velocity everything into its dread abyss that is not held by the hand of Omnipotence itself,—times when the command to "exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching," must not be left if we would save our own souls as well as those around us; and we cannot do this except our hearts are filled with the love of God. Then out of the abundance of the heart let the mouth speak. And herein is the secret of the christian's life: thus alone we live. Heaven help us to gird ourselves anew and put on the whole armor of God, that we may be enabled to war a good warfare, and having done all, to stand, while we sing—

Haste thee, glorious morning, haste!
Eternal Sun arise!
O, come with healing, come and bring
Our long-lost Paradise!
"We'll be there, we'll be there,"
Where the harp and the crown in glory are,
In that beautiful world soon to come.

Yours in love, C. Hill.

Correspondence.

From Geo. L. Teeple.

Brethren and Sisters:—I am still engaged in the work, and feel that my labor is not in vain in the Lord. I often ask myself the question, Am I doing all that I can? Am I as zealously affected in the cause of God as such a cause demands? Do I love the world in the same way that the Savior did, so that it leads me to put forth every effort for their salvation? These are questions that we should ponder in our hearts well. We are laborers together with God. Our work is not to parley and strive about questions to no profit, but to have a zeal that is according to knowledge, for the purpose of benefitting our fellow men.

Our work is to prepare men for glory, honor, and immortality. My brethren in the ministry, how pure we ought to live before the world in this particular time! Let us arouse to a sense of the work which is before us. Those that bear the vessels of the Lord should be pure. I believe that if the ministry and church stood in the liberty of the gospel, and were free from the corruptions of this age, God would manifest himself to the church and the world in such a manner as we have not latterly seen. O for a pure church and a pure ministry!

My Dear Bro. Grant:—After reading the article in the 12th number of the Crisis headed "The Granary," and remembering that I was indebted to Uncle —— for wheat since last fall, thought perhaps my mite would be acceptable. I therefore send $—, and hope to be able to send more before it becomes due, for I cannot do without the wheat, especially when good food is so scarce.

O Brethren, send in your mites, that the granary may not fail. We need good food in the times in which we live. Yes, we want the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby. And now may the Lord bless your efforts to do good, and give to the household of faith meat in due season. Amen, and amen.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to any of the readers of the Crisis who have the back numbers containing your articles on Spiritualism, that if they would be willing to spare those articles, they would greatly oblige our beloved sister, N. M. Henry, by cutting them out and sending them to her. Her address is Bunker Hill, Macoupin Co., Illinois. She is the only Advent preacher in the southern part of Illinois, and has the wiles of Spiritualism to contend against, and wishes to write for the Crisis a series of articles, giving an account of her labors and travels. I feel that she, under God, is engaged in the accomplishment of a good work, and hope she may not lack for material to work with.

Obituary Notices.

Died, of diphtheria, in Hadley, Mich., Jan. 6th, 1862, Emma Jessie, only child of A. F and L. D Servis, aged four years, two months and twenty-two days.

The subject of this notice was one of that class of children whose mind showed signs of early maturity. Her sensitive nature, aptness to learn, together with an affectionate disposition, made her almost the idol of doting parents. In her features could be seen a wonderful development of musical talent; and although she had but just past her fourth year, with feeble instructions in music, she would sing with accuracy and spirit about twenty tunes, often carrying her part without any one to assist her. Did we love Emma too well? She was our only child, and how could we do otherwise? At an unexpected hour, cruel disease got hold of her. Medical skill was early procured, but to no effect. All medicine from the first had a contrary effect, and we were compelled to see her glide out of our hands as one marked for a certain prey. She had her senses to the last, and when deprived of speech, and told that we must let Emma go to sleep a little while in the grave till Jesus comes to make her live always in the new earth, as she was often heard to say in her well hours, she bowed assent. When asked again if she remembered what her papa had told her, that Jesus was soon coming to wake Emma up, and if she did not want the Lord to come, she bowed one more assent, and after the lapse of an hour, placed her little hands under her head, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus, to wait his coming and the resurrection. O come! Lord Jesus, and come quickly, and bring our loved one from the land of the enemy, to share in the glory revealed.

A. F and L. D Servis.

Died, at Vernon, Vt., Jan 16th, 1862, of scarlet fever, Vesta E., daughter of Robert and Eliza Allen, aged seven years, two months and ten days.

Our family circle, so long exempt from the power of the fell destroyer, has been suddenly bereft of its youngest member, just commencing a hopeful, promising life. She was sick but thirty nine hours, and suffered much till near the last, when she breathed away her life gently, as withers the flower untimely plucked from its parent stem.

Little Vesta possessed a mind far beyond one of her years. Though only seven years old, she had read the New Testament twice through, besides many other books. While thus we were doting upon her, promising ourselves that she would be an ornament to our little circle, she was taken from us without scarcely a premonition. We have laid our darling one in the cold earth till the morning dawns, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope, for we expect to greet her on the "shining shore" when death shall have given up its victim.

Eld Champlin preached the funeral discourse from Job 14: 10–12, in which words of consolation were offered to our saddened hearts. O. P. Allen.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Died, in Warner, N. H., Oct 8th, 1861, Joshua Harriman, aged forty-eight years.

He has been a sufferer a number of years. Three years since he met with an accident by the falling of a building upon him, from which he never recovered fully. He never has been able since that time to perform any labor with his hands, nor to walk about but little. Last July he was seized violently with dropsy, from which he was a great sufferer until his death. He often expressed a wish that he might in the grave rest from his wearisome days and sleepless nights. He has been a lover of the Advent doctrines some ten years, and although deprived of the privilege of hearing them preach for a number of years, he loved them to the end; and although some of his last hours were dark, we trust his end was peace, and that he sleeps in Jesus. L. B. W.

The French Army.—During the war in the Crimea, which lasted uninterruptedly for two years, the total number of French troops sent there at different times was 309,268, of whom 200,000 entered the ambulances and hospitals to receive medical aid—50,000 for wounds, and 150,000 for diseases of various kinds. The total mortality was 69,229, or 23 1-3 per cent; 16,320 of these died of wounds, and nearly 53,000 of diseases, showing that three times as many die by disease as by wounds in battle.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The financial writers in the English journals indulged in all sorts of gloomy forebodings for America under the suspension of specie payments. Some argue that the issue of inconvertible paper may be expected to render the country more than ever a prey to social disorganization and jobbery.

There was continued activity in all departments at Portsmouth dock yard.

The Tuscarora and Nashville remained in statu quo at Southampton. It was stated that the Tuscarora's movements in leaving her moorings on the 13th, were sure to prevent the Nashville from getting under way for twenty-four hours. It was understood that the Tuscarora's orders are never to lose sight of the Nashville; to blockade her at Southampton, and to chase her as long as she is at sea.

In addition to the frigate Wausetters, the war steamer Argus has been placed at the mouth of the Southampton docks to watch the movements of the two vessels.

Several members of Parliament had been addressing their constituents, in which the course of America was the main topic. Mr. Gilpin, at Northampton, declared that the lack of sympathy for the North was because the North had not identified themselves with the first principle of their Constitution, which declares that all men are equal. But he believed the question had now become slavery or freedom, and he called upon Englishmen to hesitate before they directly or indirectly sanctioned a premature and unnecessary acknowledgment of the South.

Lord Henley, at the same meeting, uttered similar sentiments, and said they must not think of their pockets. In order to get cotton they must not go to war and defend the Southern Confederation. Mr Beresford Hope took rather opposite ground, and believed that if the Southern Confederacy established its independence, it would lead to amelioration in the condition of the slaves.

ITALY.

The Pope, in announcing to the cardinals that Russia had consented to the re-establishment of the Papal Nuncio, at St. Petersburg, said that he hoped this fresh concession on the part of the Emperor of Russia would be a signal for others in favor of the unfortunate Polish nation. The Pope further announced that he had requested of the Czar the liberation of priests confined in the citadel of Warsaw, and the recall of those sent to Siberia.

In the Italian Parliament the recent disturbances at Castelamera had been debated, and some censure was cast upon the Government because some of the rioters were shot without trial. Parliament however deferred to express its opinion until the official report was submitted.

Constantinople, Jan 11. An Imperial decree was read at the Porte, promising immediate financial reforms. The payment of all official salaries has been stopped until March. The system of farming taxes has been resumed. Bulgarian emigrants in Russia are ill-treated, and unanimously wish to return. There have been many wrecks and great loss of life in the Black sea.

Notwithstanding the rumored sale of the Nashville, she continued to fly the Confederate flag. No sale is registered at the Admiralty.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A Fire broke out in the granite block 281 Washington St., Boston, on the night of Jan 31st, and destroyed upwards of $50,000 worth of property.

Newspaper Taxes.—The measure now to be proposed is said to be in the shape of a tax on publishers, based on the circulation of their papers or periodicals. The tax will be laid upon each hundred copies printed, and the publisher will be required to make oath as to the number published.

Missouri, Jan. 29. The latest information from the West is that our army is encamped at Lebanon in large numbers. Major Wright's battalion is quartered in a house lately occupied by secessionists, but the greater portion of the troops are encamped just beyond the town. Only our scouts have advanced beyond that town, nor is it probable that they will until other regiments shall have arrived which are now on their way.

Recognition Rumors.—An article from the Edinburg Scotsman says:

"It is known that several months ago, France urged the British Government to join her in recognizing the Southern Confederacy and disregarding the blockade. We hear from good sources that the French Government has renewed that request, and is pushing it with much eagerness, and it is considered certain that, when the French Chambers meet, on the 27th inst., there will be such expressions of French opinion as will bring the question into at least a critical position, and, in all probability, give much offense to the Americans. There exists in London an active and growing party, including many M. P.'s, having for its object an immediate recognition of the Southern Confederacy, on certain understood terms. This party is in communication with the quasi representatives of the South in London, and gives out that it sees its way to a desirable arrangement. Our information is that the South, acting through its London agents, is at least willing to have it understood that, in consideration of immediate recognition and the disregard of the 'paper blockade,' it would engage for these three things—a treaty of free trade, the prohibition of all import of slaves, and the freedom of all blacks born hereafter. It will be easily seen that, if any such terms were offered—but we hesitate to believe the last of them—a pressure in favor of the South would come upon the British Government from more than one formidable section of our public."

Thurlow Weed.—This gentleman writes to the Albany Journal from Paris, that the settlement of the Trent question has caused a favorable change of feeling there as it has in England, and that for the opportunity of doing the right thing in the right way, our Government is indebted to Queen Victoria, who urged mildness and consideration on her ministers. "But," he says, "our enemies are at work endeavoring and hoping to create fresh difficulties. Upon the meeting of Parliament a strenuous effort will be made to violate the blockade. England, it is said, will be urged to this course by France."

Mr. Weed writes that the reported sale of the "Nashville" is not unlikely to be true. The American Consul at Southampton told me on Saturday that negotiations were on foot. The intention is to put her crew on board another steamer, and thus dodge the "Tuscarora." Capt. Craven keeps up a vigilant watch. He has not left his ship for a moment.—Boston Journal.

The Burnside Expedition.—It has certainly met with unexpected casualities, but not so serious as to disorganize the expedition, which at last accounts was getting into fighting trim. The prevailing opinion in the fleet appeared to be that the destination of the expedition was Roanoke Island. This island is about fifty miles up Pamlico Sound. It is twelve miles long, three miles wide, and said to be fortified by the rebels on the southern, western and eastern shores. The most feasible approach to the island is by Croton Sound, which is about one mile wide, with two channels, and nine feet of water in each. Gen. Burnside's intention was to proceed to [illegible] an expedition. He has energy, perseverance and pluck, and the adverse circumstances which surrounded him and hampered his movements do not appear to have discouraged him, or even shaken his equanimity. He had inspired his troops with confidence, and will doubtless give a good account of them and himself.—Boston Journal.

ITEMS.

Several incidents of the late battle at Belmont, and statements in reference to the wounded, are related by correspondents of St. Louis papers:

One poor fellow, after he was wounded, bethought himself to take a smoke. He was found in a sitting position against a tree, dead, with his pipe in one hand, knife in another, and his tobacco on his breast.

A young lad about eighteen was found lying across a log, just as he fell, grasping his musket in both hands.

A wounded man, with both legs nearly shot off, was found in the woods singing the "Star Spangled Banner." But for this circumstance, the surgeons say they would not have discovered him.

A captain of one of the Federal regiments was looking on the prisoners we captured at Belmont, and recognized one of them as his own brother.

Among the many acts of heroism told of those engaged, is that of a mere youth, a little boy who was attached to Tappan's Arkansas regiment, (rebel) and carried two mimic flags, one in each hand. The regiment was driven to the water's edge and the Federal troops poured in a terrific volley killing many of them who fell in the river, and such as were not instantly killed met a watery grave. Among those struck was the little boy who bore the flags. Giving one last hurrah, which was cut short by the ebbing flood of his young life, he waved the flags over his head, tottered into the river, and was seen no more.

☞ They are burning corn for fuel in Logan Co., Illinois, and corn at seven cents per bushel is cheaper than coal at twenty cents, per ton. It is in great favor with the boys, as it does not require to be sawed and split.

Married.

In Salem, Mass., on Sunday evening, February 2, 1862, at the residence of the bride's father, by Elder Rufus Wendell, Mr. Samuel A. Kinsman, of Salem, to Miss Sarah Eliza, daughter of Temple Hardy, Jr.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the Christian Publication Society, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and to sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once Five Hundred Dollars, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than any Tract Society in the country, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in Tracts, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite, and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Conference and Protracted Meeting in Lowell.

Bro Morgan.—I commenced a meeting here on Saturday evening, Feb. 1st, which is to continue ten days. The interest thus far has been good. To-day (Sabbath) has been full, and a door of hope is opened to us. Brethren, pray for us. Our meetings are held in Wyman's Chapel, Merrimac Street.

Lowell, Feb. 2d, '62. J. V. Himes.

Notice.

I will hold a protracted meeting in Plymouth, Vt., as Sister S. P. Greene may arrange, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 21st, and will hold over the Sunday following, and longer if thought best. S. W. Bisbee.

Notice.

Edwin Burnham's permanent address is Newburyport, Mass. All who write to him for his labors will save him some trouble by addressing him directly at that place.

Notice.

Eld. Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., 90 Union St., has for sale Bro. Hastings' works, "World to Come," by Hill, "Voice of the Church," edited by D. T. Taylor; also a supply of Bro. Higgins' and Wellcome's medicine.

Subscription to the Tract Fund of the C. P. S.

Meeting in Honeoye.

The Lord willing, there will be a general meeting of the saints of God and lovers of Bible truth at Honeoye, Ont. Co., N. Y., to commence on Friday evening, Feb 21st, and continue over Sunday. Elds. J. B. Cook and T. G. Newman appoint to be there. Let all the brethren in adjoining counties consider this an especial occasion for them. Come, brethren, we know you and your whereabouts, and shall be disappointed if we do not see you here. Come in the name of the Lord. Come to testify of his goodness, and to enjoy his Spirit. Frank Burr.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly, and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer.—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollars worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Thessalonica: or, The Model Church. A Sketch of Primitive Christianity. 24 mo. Paper, 38 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A stirring volume—evangelical and scriptural. Amer. Prot. In pungent style—abounding in strong points. Chicago Times. Very interesting—ably treated. Albany Evening Journal. Earnest and ably written. Boston Evening Transcript. Written in a good spirit—in earnest. Puritan Recorder. A strong and vigorous work. Godey's Lady's Book. Many brilliant passages—a vigorous writer. S. S. Times. I have read it with great interest. C. F. Hudson. Every minister should get a copy. Philad. Christian Chron. Contains a good deal of truth. Boston Atlas. Many good and sound ideas. Boston Congregationalist. Abounds with good, sober truth. Millennial Harbinger. Modern Christians will prize it. Delaware Inquirer.

The Great Controversy Between God and Man: Its Origin, Progress, and End. A Sketch of Man's "Secession and Rebellion." 24 mo. Paper, 38 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A well-meant and well-written book. Banner of the Cross. Touching and impressive. Christian Chronicle. I read it with much satisfaction. Bishop J. H. Hopkins. Great ability—vigorous and spirited. E. Winthrop, M. A. The controversy will close with judgments. Amer. Pres. The most gifted and eloquent of those who, in this country, maintain this view. Prof. C. F. Hudson.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 24 mo. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution: or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 38 cts. Cloth, 60 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's fourteen Epistles. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline Theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. Preparing. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and end with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and prefaced by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 418 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and preserving their statements on subjects in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Wayside Gleanings. By Fannie Parry. The gathered Memorials, in Prose and Verse, of one who fell asleep in early life. Elegant cloth binding, 60 cts.

Prophetical and Practical Tracts.

The Sacrifice.

The riches of Christ's matchless love—
More precious to my heart
Than garlands e'er for conquerors wove,
Or monarchs can impart.
His voice—how sweet its accents fall
Upon my listening ear!
My soul receives the gracious call,
That calms each anxious fear.

Deep anguish pierced his bleeding heart,
Death's agony he bore,
The sacred Temple's veil did part—
The sacrifice was o'er!
Silence reigned deep in heaven's high courts,
The harp-tuned cherubs cease,
While nature in amazement stood
Enwrapt in awful peace.

He died for me! each mortal sigh
That heaved his fainting breast,
Was offered on the cross for me,
And through them I am blest.
His stripes shall heal our bleeding hearts,
His groans shall make our peace;
His resurrection give us life
In Him that ne'er shall cease.

There is a fount whose gushing tide
Can cleanse from every sin;
He stands with arms extended wide,
And bids me come to him.
I'll go from scenes of mortal strife,
From pleasures here that cloy,
And in his death will find new life,
And in his grief my joy. M. R. P.

For the Crisis.

The New Covenant.—No. 1.

When was it made, and if made, with whom? God made three covenants, one with Noah, Gen 9 : 12, which, though very old, has not passed away. It is God's pledge to Noah and every living thing. Through all time God calls it an everlasting covenant, and as he styles himself a covenant keeping God, we need have no fears that he will violate his pledge. We look upon the bow in the cloud and remember the promise of our God.

2. "God made a covenant with Abram," Gen. 17 : 7. This covenant has not passed away, though a very old one. In it, God promises to do certain things for Abraham. 1st. Give him and his seed the land of Canaan. 2nd. To give him a son. 3rd. "In thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blest." And the ordinance of circumcision is instituted to keep at least the natural seed in remembrance of God's promises made to the fathers. And admitting all Paul says about the unprofitableness of circumcision, as having any merit in itself, yet God has commanded the natural seed to observe it "throughout all your generations," or, until the promises made by God are fulfilled. But as the promises are not fulfilled, this covenant, which God calls an everlasting covenant, has not passed away, but is to be fulfilled to the seed in the future.

3. God made a covenant with Moses at Mount Sinai, which covenant was written on tables of stone by God himself. It was given to the people for their observance. It becomes a compact between God and the people of the Jews (and not any other people) as a people. They agree to observe all that God commanded them by the mouth of Moses; but they broke away from all their engagements; they broke God's covenant (Jer. 31 : 32), and brought upon themselves all the curses pronounced in the law of Moses. Thus this Mount Sinai covenant seems to have failed to accomplish the end for which it was intended. The failure was on their part, and for their perfidy they must serve out the seven times spoken of in the law of Moses, the servant of God; which seven times runs down to the end of the Gentile dispensation. But more on that point hereafter. For the term of their captivity must be completed before the new covenant can be made, unless there are two new covenants spoken of in the Bible. But Paul speaks of but one in his epistle to the Hebrews; and it would be well to remember that this epistle is to the Hebrews, not to the Gentiles.

We will now examine a few things promised in the new covenant of Jeremiah 31st, and see if the things promised have been fulfilled to any people in the past, Jew or Gentile; and it will be remembered that at the time God proposes to make this new covenant, the ten tribes had been long scattered; the remaining two tribes are captives in Babylon, yet God says he will be the God of all the families of Israel—and this obtains under the new covenant. First, this covenant is to be made with a people who had one made with their fathers,—"When I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land, which my covenant they brake."—Jer. 31 : 32. This covenant was not made with the Gentiles. And the new one is to be made with the same people who had one made with their fathers, namely, with Judah and Israel.

2. In that covenant God promises to bring them into the land. "Behold, I will bring it (the city) health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth. And I will cause the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first. And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me. And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honor before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them; and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it."—Jer. 33 : 6–10. "In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely: and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, the Lord our righteousness."—Jer. 33 : 16. "And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O, my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live. And I will place you in your land; then shall ye know that I the Lord have spoken it and performed it, saith the Lord."—Ezk. 37 : 13, 14.

3. God in the new covenant has promised them a king. "And my servant David shall be king over them, and they all shall have one shepherd; they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes and do them, and they shall dwell in the land that I have given unto Jacob my servant, wherein your fathers have dwelt. And they shall dwell therein, even they and their children and their children's children forever; and my servant David shall be their prince forever."—Ezk. 37 : 24, 25; Jer. 33 : 17, 21, 26.

4. Under the new covenant it shall no more be said, "The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge; but every one shall die for his own iniquity; but every man that eateth the sour grape his teeth shall be set on edge."—Jer. 31 : 29, 30.

5. When the new covenant is established there will be no further need of preaching to the people living under it, which is proof that we are not under it now. Then there will be no need to discuss questions of what is truth, or travel from Maine to the Rocky Mountains to teach men that there is a God; for "they shall all know me, from the least of them to the greatest of them, saith the Lord."—Jer. 31 : 34; Rev. 14 : 7. We now walk by faith, but then faith will be turned to sight.

6. The new covenant will not be made until the people with whom it shall be made are gathered. That people, namely, Judah and Israel, remain scattered among the Gentiles to this very day. "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with (the Gentiles? no, but) Judah and Israel, after those days, saith the Lord." After what days? Let us see. "Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will save thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity. And Jacob shall return and be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid, for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."—Jer. 30 : 10, 11. "For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an outcast, saying, this is Zion whom no man seeketh after."—Jer. 30 : 17. "Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, and the woman with child, and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither."—Jer. 30 : 8–13. After this the new covenant is made. I. M. MUHLIG.

"We all do fade as a Leaf."

How true the above statement! As the leaf fades and falls from the tree in Autumn, so man fades and falls into the grave. And none are exempt from death; from the infant child to the man of gray hairs, all alike are liable to fall by its hand. We of late have often been reminded of the following verse of the hymn:—

"What is the life of mortal man?
'T is but an inch, 't is but a span,
'T is scarcely called a day;
While from the cradle to the grave
Man is to grief and care a slave,
But grace can smooth the way."

The life of man here is but a hand's breadth—a vapor, that appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth away. And that life is attended with care and grief, sickness, pain and sorrow; but the grace of God can smooth the rough way of this life, and that grace can only be obtained by walking humbly before him, for he giveth grace to the humble, but beholds the proud afar off.

We have been called of late to drink deeply of the cup of affliction and sorrow. Death has entered our dwelling, and three of our number have fallen by its hand. Our eldest son, Orzado Polley, died of the diphtheria, Nov. 21st, aged seventeen years and about four months. But we have good reason to believe that he sleeps in Jesus, to awake in the resurrection to everlasting life. A few days after his death, our little grandson, William Henry Cooper, only child of Henry and Abba F. B. Cooper (our eldest daughter), was taken sick and died, Dec. 2d, aged five years and about eleven months. On the evening of the day he was buried, our second daughter, Cynthia Polley, was taken sick, and died Dec. 9th, aged nineteen years and about eleven months. But she died in hope of eternal life through Christ in the resurrection.

Thus, in less than three weeks, three of our number have been torn from our embraces and laid in the cold grave. It has made our earthly home lonely, and caused our hearts to mourn; but we do not mourn as those that have no hope; we hope to meet them again where pain nor death will ever come; for we are looking for that "blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ." Truly, the christian's hope is a blessed one—one of immortality and eternal life when Jesus comes to redeem his people.

We are looking for the immediate appearing of the Son of God. The signs that were to precede his coming are in the past. The sun has been darkened, the moon has refused to give her light. The stars have fallen from heaven, and the powers of heaven have been and are being shaken. And there is now upon the earth "distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." And now God's people can look up and lift up their heads and rejoice, for they know that redemption's hour is drawing near. We are looking for the kingdom to come which will be the promised possession and inheritance of the saints of God. We know how large it will be, for the angel told Daniel that the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom should be under the whole heaven. We know who is to possess it, for it is to be given to the people of the saints of the Most High God, who will possess it forever, even forever and ever. The Apostle John, while on the Isle of Patmos, stood in vision down at the end of this dispensation, and saw it come into existence. "I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." John also saw the tabernacle of God with men (not with disembodied spirits), and he will be their God, and they his people. "And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." How blessed is the christian's hope!

We would say to the dear children scattered abroad, pray for us, that our trust may be in God; that we may be prepared to meet those loved ones in that better land, where death will divide hearts no more. SAM'L AND ROZILLAH POLLEY.

Pious Fraud.

BRO. GRANT:—I saw in the Crisis of Jan. 15th, that a number had requested to have the Crisis free of charge, but you thought they should apply through a preacher, or somebody acquainted with the office. I agree with you in this. I wish to give my reasons. I knew a man in 1843 and '44, who had an Advent paper free, who was worth fifteen hundred dollars. He was a professed Adventist, and was so covetous he could not afford to pay postage, and had it stopped.

Not long ago, a man wished me to order the Crisis to him free of charge, when the following conversation took place:

"Are you poor?"

"I have no property of my own."

"What have you done with your property?"

"I gave it to my son, to support me and my wife."

"How much had you?"

"About fifteen hundred dollars."

"Does your son furnish you spending money?"

"Yes, fifty dollars a year."

I told him I could not order the Crisis for him free; he was able to pay. His next drift was to get it for one dollar a year, and remarked that he had to pay postage. I said I would state his case to you and you could do as you pleased, but I would not order it free to any that were able to pay, and the managers of the Crisis had sent all I ordered, and half I sent were on the poor list.

I here express my thanks in behalf of the poor for the Crisis free. Bro. Grant, as I am responsible for what I write, please to let this have a place in the Crisis. It may be the means of bringing some to repentance of their pious fraud. N. F. NASON.

Lamentable.

1st. It is lamentable that there are so many idle laborers in the field, (or rather almost out of the field,) while the prophetic picture of the coming judgment is so plain to our vision, bespeaking the speedy close of earthly scenes, and the dawn of the great day of wrath. Some plead a lack of support. No doubt there is an immense deficiency in this respect; but don't let us wait for too large salaries; the judgment is near, and all that we do to save men, must be done before it arrives. Perhaps if we should preach and practice a little more heart-felt religion, and a little more preparation for the coming judgment, and a little less worn-out theology, the hearts of the people might be affected enough to keep us in the field. Unless we do thus preach, we might about as well be out of the field as in it.

2nd. It is lamentable that so many ministers are more anxious to originate or promulgate some new theory, than to proclaim God's last great dispensational truth, which is "meat in due season," viz., the immediate coming of the Lord. O! will we solemnly proclaim it? "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Are we so doing while allowing some new thing to absorb our minds, which, whether true or untrue, is of no vital importance in inducing men to prepare for the judgment? Are we imbued with a full sense of our nearness to the judgment? O! the wailing of sinners at that day, when they see that they have lost that precious pledge, eternal life. Will we not now put forth an effort to save them? Can we see them losing all, and yet stop to speculate upon less important theology?

3d. It is lamentable that more is not done by the churches at large to keep the right kind of preachers constantly in the field, doing missionary work. By the right kind I mean efficient and zealous men, who have the root of the matter in their hearts, who do not fear hardships, who are not extravagant, (for the Lord's money must not be squandered,) and who love to preach the present truth. Don't squander your money on those who cannot preach, nor on those who will not preach God's present message. Able and pure men are wanted. W. SHELDON.

What Things Grieve Me.

I grieve when I see the noble, the good, cut down by the cold and ruthless hand of death, but there is hope in their case. The time is coming "when all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth."

I grieve when I see ministers of the gospel drinking in the fashions and pride of this world, and leading the flock astray.

I grieve when I see them disputing upon points of doctrine which do not affect their salvation, and indulging in a spirit of contention which leads to strife.

I grieve when I see a preacher become a slave to that miserable, dirty weed, tobacco, and yield his manhood to its indulgence. I once heard a man say it made his wife sick every time he used it. I asked him what made him use it, and why he did not give it up? He said he would "not give it up for forty wives." And that man a preacher of the gospel, and in that very gospel it says, "husbands, love your wives as your own bodies." I made up my mind that that man's preaching would never do me any more good without a change.

I am grieved when I hear preachers say they cannot preach the gospel, unless they can have just so much insured them for their support. Did not the Lord of all the earth send his ministers forth without scrip or purse? Did they not fulfill their mission? And when they returned, he said unto them, "when I sent you forth without scrip or purse, lacked ye anything?" They said, "nothing, Lord." O what faith! Do you suppose they lived at their ease? Not by any means. Paul said he knew how to abound, and how to suffer want. Others were afflicted, tormented and distressed. Probably if they indulged in luxuries before, they had to give them up then. And yet they had all that was necessary for their good. They lacked nothing.

And to sum it all up in a few words, I am grieved when I see the church or hear ministers rushing headlong into the channel of pride and fashion, turning into by and forbidden paths, forgetting what the good and holy book says, "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate;" touch not, taste not, handle not. The ministry have lost their power with God; the church have become lukewarm, and I fear a righteous God will come to spue them out of his mouth. But there is a remnant, thank God, who keep his commandments and do his will. Lord, help us to be of that class! H. B. H.

Selections.

Easy Devotion.

An Englishman thus describes a Sabbath in Grace church, New York:

All here is splendor and luxury—the ceilings are exquisitely carved and frescoed—rich carpets deaden the footfall—glittering prayer-books, bound in gold and velvet, repose on the satiny surface of rare veined wood, the form sinks back into the soft depths of yielding cushions, and damask footstools offer a delicious refuge for the fashionable sinners, when they kneel to confess their manifold peccadilloes. We wonder what the martyrs of old times, and the heroes who died at the stake long ago would say, if they could be suddenly placed in the midst of this temple of the Lord, and introduced to this religion of the nineteenth century? Would they marvel at the wisdom of their descendants, who have exchanged the old-fashioned path of thorns for a short cut across the velvet carpets and mosaic pavements, or would they be insane enough to entertain a doubt whether the "short cut" actually led to the exact spot called heaven? We cannot answer the question. Ask yonder fat old gentleman fast asleep, with his gold spectacles perched on the tip of his nose; there are bank dividends and fat rent-rolls written on every wrinkle of his face. Or ask that lady in her velvet dress and ermine cape, who is eying her neighbor's Russian sable with an envious eye—ask you lovely girl in the diamond bracelets, so prettily conscious of the moustached hero opposite. See what they will say. No doubt the verdict will be satisfactory . . . The fine and familiar chants of the Episcopal church are rendered still sweeter by the magnificent volume of voices on which float up the sweet sentences of Scripture, and the old fashioned hymns, sung by a thousand mothers at a thousand hearthstones, fall with grateful refrain on the ear. Who shall say there is nothing holy and attractive in being conservative, as regards the observance of the customs of "lang syne?" The good old pastor's lips have scarcely concluded the benediction, when there is an instantaneous movement towards the door, as if the congregation experienced a sensation of sudden relief. No wonder—all their religious duties done, and the coast clear for another six days of gaiety and dissipation! The nimble creatures of cockades and gold-bands descend to open carriage doors—the gentlemen exchange nods and smiles with one another, fat gentleman included, who says, "It's a very fine sermon"—though to our certain knowledge he was asleep the whole time; and the ladies compress their crinolines, robes a quelles, and rose-colored bonnets into their carriages as one by one they draw up to receive their aristocratic freight. There is a thunder of wheels, a glitter of silverplated harness, a soft twitter of bird-like voices, as the ladies say "good-bye," and thus ends our Sunday at Grace church.

Kind Words.

Kind words do not cost much; they never blister the tongue or lips, and we have never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, they accomplish much.

1. They help one's own good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own soul. Angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath, and make it blaze more fiercely.

2. Kind words make other people good-natured; cold words freeze people, hot words scorch them, sarcastic words irritate them, bitter words make them bitter; wrathful words make them wrathful.

3. There is such a rush of other kinds of words in our days, that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words, hasty words, idle words, spiteful words, silly words, boisterous words, empty words, warlike words, profane words, fretful words. Kind words also produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is,—they soothe and quiet, and comfort the hearer,—they shame him out of his sour, or morose, or unkind feelings.

The Lord Jesus Christ has left us a blessed example in speaking kind words.

SMOOTH STONES TAKEN FROM ANCIENT BROOKS.—Some are brought to Christ by fire, storms and tempests, others by the more easy gales of the Spirit. The Spirit is free in the work of conversion, and as the wind, it blows when, where, and how it pleases. Thrice happy are those souls that are brought to Christ, whether it be in a winter's night, or on a summer's day.

Little sins multiplied, become great. There is nothing less than a grain of sand—there is nothing heavier than the sand of the sea when multiplied.

After the Roman generals had gotten the victory over their enemies, the senate used not one way, but many ways, to express their love to them: so after our faith has gotten the victory over Satan, God usually takes the soul in his arms, and courts it, and shows much kindness to it.

Love is a golden key to let in Christ, and a strong lock to keep out others; though many may knock at love's door, yet love will open to none but Christ.

Severinus, the Indian saint, under the power of assurance, was heard to say, "O my God! do not for pity so overjoy me. If I must still live and have such consolations, take me to heaven."

A murmurer is an hieroglyphic of folly; he is a comprehensive vanity; he is a man, and no man; he is sottish and senseless; he neither understands God nor himself, nor anything as he should. Isaiah 3 : 8.

A good conscience will look through the blackest clouds, and see a smiling God. As an evil conscience is attended with the greatest fears and doubts, so a good conscience is attended with the greatest clearness and sweetness.

THE BIBLE.—Dr. Hall, in his Journal of Health, speaking of the importance of inhabiting houses in their structure and situation favorable to health, refers as follows to the Bible:

"There is more sound, practical hygiene, on the subject of healthy houses, in the 14th chapter of Leviticus, from verse thirty-four, than in all the skulls of all the health commissioners and common councils of all the cities of Christendom. Pity it is that we do not read our Bible more, that great book which contains the leading principles of what is indisputably good and useful and true, in all that really pertains to human happiness; and what a pity it is that the Sunday newspaper, and the trashy weekly, and the enticing story book, for childhood and hoary age, on subjects pertaining to the world, and party preaching, and infidel peripatetic lectures, with their new-fangled crudities for human amelioration, and their theories for elevating the masses; pity it is, we say, that all these things so attract attention. The Bible, the best of all, the wisest in all its theories, and in all its practices safe, has become a sealed book to the many; and any other volume on the centre or side table would be opened sooner than it."

☞ Never be ashamed of confessing your ignorance, for the wisest man upon earth is ignorant of many things, insomuch that what he knows is mere nothing in comparison with what he does not know. There cannot be a greater folly in the world than to suppose that we know every thing.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Food and Diet.

My attention is drawn to this subject from your article, "What shall we eat?" of the 17th; and no subject can be more important at this time, and to the poor who depend upon their daily labor for their daily bread. All classes spend too much for food; and less money may get more food, equal health, and greater happiness. The poor pay higher for food than the rich, by getting trusted, purchasing in smaller quantities, and not taking advantage of the markets. The poor buy extravagantly of animal food, and cook it wastefully, by frying, when half of it goes up the chimney, or boiling and throwing away half the nutritive matter in the water.

In their purchases no economy is studied. All kinds of fresh meats cost from 10 to 14 cents per lb.; and those who can least afford it call for a rib roast, or a loin of steak of beef, or a leg of lamb or mutton, or a loin of veal or pork; but not for the most economical pieces. A rib roast of six or seven lbs. for a dollar, is not the most judicious purchase. The Jewish religion, says the New York Tribune, in eating, is founded on true economy. They eat only the fore quarters, and sell the more expensive and less valuable hind quarters to the Gentile. The fore quarter will not cut steaks and roasts equal to the hind quarter, but is more economical for soups, stews, pot-pies, or cooking in any form with vegetables and gravy. The man or woman with scanty means to fill the market basket, not only buys dear meats, but crude, innutritious vegetables, such as cabbage, turnips and potatoes, for notwithstanding so many people think potatoes a necessary article of food, they are not an economical one; and all the cruder substances of vegetable food, though necessary and healthful, should not be sought after because cheap, to save money. The most economical mode of preparing food is a due mixture of meat and vegetable substance in the form of soups, but no man should live upon soup alone any more than he should upon meat or fine flour bread. Health as well as appetite requires variety.

It will be seen that meats average 10 to 12 cents a pound, and are, according to the great chemist Liebig and others, three-fourths water. Grains, flour and meal, peas and beans are less at first cost, and are nearly solid food. In purchasing one pound of beef steak for 12 1-2 cents, with 75 per cent water, one pays in fact for his meat 50 cents per pound. A pound of pork cooks itself in its own fat, and fat has no water. A pound of beef steak for many persons requires 6 cents worth of butter, which would add still more to the first cost. Many worthy, laboring men have toiled hard and laid up nothing. They have been addicted to no vice and no apparent extravagance. In the light of these facts many now see that a large portion of their earnings has gone into the atmosphere through evaporation.

Studious men, thinkers, and those of more spiritual natures, teachers, poets and musicians, who do not "build factories and elaborate railroads," certainly require less meat. A frail body with "feeble blood making powers" may live longer and accomplish more on a moderate meat diet. Oatmeal will probably give the most nutriment for the least money, yet how few use it. But the Scotch who make use of it as their principal food are healthy and very strong. Although man requires a variety of food, oats by experience as well as analysis will give the greatest amount of power. Oatmeal is always good in porridges or cakes, and is the cheapest of any grain in the market. Cracked wheat is better than flour, and coarse flour is always better than fine. The French Academy by actual experiment found the finer sugar was rasped the more it lost its sweetness, and its members who had traveled in America testified that cracked corn was much sweeter than fine maize meal. All kinds of meat and flour, they thought, was injured by being made very fine.

A pound of cracked wheat is worth more than four loaves of bread of one pound each. Take the wheat itself and boil it and it is one of the most economical dishes. Every family should use peas and beans as porridge or soup. They are very cheap, and no stronger people ever existed in this country than our ancestors who ate freely of pea and bean soup. We are also told that Daniel looked better, throve faster, and in every respect was better by his fen-t or pea food than all others at the King's table. But a "low pressure" diet of exclusive vegetables laboring men may think insufficient.

The Spanish peasants are among the strongest and most agile men in the world. One of them will not hesitate to take a mad bull by the horns. He will work all day in a copper mine, or at the olive press or wine press under a hot sun, and dance half the night to the music of a guitar. What does he live on? A piece of black bread, an onion, and half a watermelon. You may see him dipping his piece of bread into a horn of olive oil, then into some vinegar with pepper and garlic. Sometimes he takes a draught of weak, sour wine. All the strong wine is sent to England. The Smyrna porter walks off with a load of eight hundred weight. His only food day after day is a little fruit—a handful of dates, a few figs, a bunch of grapes, and some olives. He eats no beef, pork or mutton. His whole food does not cost him two cents a day. They can outwork the negroes who are fed on bacon. The Arab living on rice and dates conquered half the world. The most tremendous muscular force and the most intellectual labor have been sustained on a light vegetable diet. Sir Isaac Newton abstained almost entirely from meat that he might write his treatise on light. Saints Gregory, Ambrose, Chrysostom, Augustine, Bernard, and the most influential men in Europe in the twelfth century, lived on coarse bread softened in warm water.

One pound of cheap meat at ten cents, and one quart of split peas will give a fuller dinner for a family than one dollar expended for beefsteak. One quart of white beans at seven cents, and one pound of pork at ten, will give, with a little bread, a good dinner for six. One bushel of peas or beans will feed more hard working men than nine bushels of potatoes. On one pound of cracked corn, (hominy,) and a quart of milk, or a little molasses, which do not exceed in cost six cents, a small family may have a good meal. There is no waste as there is in all meats. Three laboring men can get more solid matter from one quart of oatmeal than from two pounds of the best beefsteak. The former will cost seven cents, the latter twenty-five cents. Thousands of hardy Scotchmen live almost exclusively on oatmeal, and a little salt or milk, and can work, or fight, or walk, or tire out their meat-eating neighbors in climbing the rugged mountains. Thousands of people in England and Wales use oatmeal as common food. It is the same in France and other parts of Europe.

It is true that chemical analysis does not give us the exact comparative value of food, but with this and the prices of the various articles, it cannot be a hard matter to determine which is the cheapest or most economical kind of food for us to use. Nor would we confine the laborer or the poor to the cheapest food, but all should know what they can substitute for our expensive modes of living, and thus by saving lay up a few dollars for a "foul day." The poor we shall always have with us; for always there will be the improvident, and always those who are governed by passions and appetites more than reason and calculation, but in this country it depends in a great measure upon families themselves whether they will be poor or not.—M. G. S. —Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Air, Sunshine and Health.

A New York merchant noticed, in the progress of years, that each successive book-keeper gradually lost his health, and finally died of consumption, however vigorous and robust he was on entering his service. At length it occurred to him that the little rear-room where the books were kept opened into a back yard, so surrounded by high walls that no sunshine came into the room from one year's end to another. An upper room, well lighted, was immediately prepared, and his clerks had uniform good health ever after.

A familiar case to general readers is derived from medical works, where an entire English family became ill, and all remedies seemed to fail of their usual results, when accidentally a window-glass of the family-room was broken, in cold weather. It was not repaired, and forthwith there was a marked improvement in the health of the inmates. The physician at once traced the connection, discontinued his medicines, and ordered that the window-pane should not be repaired. A French lady became ill. The most eminent physicians of her time were called in, but failed to restore her. At length Dupeytren, the Napoleon of physic, was consulted. He noticed that she lived in a dim room, into which the sun never shone; the house being situated in one of the narrow streets, or rather lanes of Paris. He at once ordered more airy and cheerful apartments, and "all her complaints vanished."

The lungs of a dog become tuberculated (consumptive) in a few weeks if kept confined in a dark cellar. The most common plant grows spindly, pale and scraggling if no sunlight falls upon it. The greatest medical names in France, of the last century, regarded sunshine and pure air as equal agents in restoring and maintaining health. From these facts, which cannot be disputed, the most common mind should conclude that cellars, and rooms on the northern side of buildings, or apartments into which the sun does not immediately shine, should never be occupied as family rooms, or chambers, or as libraries or "studies." Such apartments are only fit for "stowage" or purposes which never require persons to remain in them over a few minutes at a time. And every intelligent and humane parent will arrange that the family rooms and chambers shall be the most commodious, lightest and brightest apartments in his dwelling.—Dr. Hall.

A Moment.

To ELD. M—— G——.

A moment through the gloom, Brother,
Where faith's dim taper gleams;
Then ever and forever,
Eternal morning beams.

A moment by the pillow, Brother,
Of suff'ring, death and pain;
Then in immortal beauty
Receive thy 'loved again.

A moment watching, waiting, Brother,
For Zion's King to come;
Then angel bands escort thee
To a glad Eden home.

A moment in the valley, Brother,
Oppress'd with doubt and sin,
Then wear the spotless garment,
A crown of glory win.

Our Position.

Rolling years bring their changes. Several years ago thousands of people lifted up their eyes to heaven in expectation of the speedy appearing of the "sign of the Son of man." The vision tarried. Many have turned away from the promised joy of the event to seek vanities. We cannot go away. To whom, to what shall we go? We have opened our mouth unto God, and our solemn vows must be fulfilled. The world affords us no substitute for our blessed hope. We believe, and therefore we must speak and act in the preparation for the kingdom of God. We are dreaming no idle dream. The great day of the Almighty is almost upon us. It is our work to proclaim this fearful truth to an apostate church, an unbelieveing world. This work must be done. We must do it or perish! The echoes of our Master's voice are in our souls. No apology will be taken if our duty is not done. Jehovah shakes the bright sword of slaughter over the nations. He calls on us to proclaim this among the Gentiles. Shall we turn away to minor questions? Shall we be carping about tastes, individual notions, personal policy or other trifles? God help us! 'Blessed is that servant" who gives "meat in due season."

Now is our time of effort. It is the last hour. O ye hosts of God, now for the charge. Forward! Let us not stop to talk with the vain talkers. Let us not stop to mend the breach in our reputation made by some ungainly croaker. We are embattled for God. Two kinds of blood are concerned—"the blood of the covenant," and the "blood of souls." Eternity opens before us with all of its glorious or dire reflections. Shall we stand at our post? Shall we cease all strife and contention on unimportant questions, and attend to our high calling? Shall we act brotherly? Shall we put away all evil speaking, selfishness, and anger, and prepare to meet our God? It is time for general reformation.

The great matter in which we are now interested is more than theory—more than talk. O the judgment, the judgment! God of mercy, pity us and fit us for it. Who of us shall stand? It is almost here. I am not writing fiction. Jesus is coming. Let us put on the wedding garments. Let us haste to be ready.

O backbiter, slanderer, false-accuser, evil-speaker, man or woman of strife, backslider, cold professor, sinner, the Judge is upon you! Your race of iniquity is almost run. Your evil thoughts will be revealed. Your bitter words will pierce your own soul. Your vile acts will shame your shrinking spirit. What will you say? How will you turn when the Mighty One shall drive His flaming chariot in the heavens to redeem His elect and thunder damnation on His foes?

Now is the purity and patience of the saints. Now is the hour of triple strife—strife of heaven, earth, and hell. Now is the fourth, the last watch. Spirit of the everlasting God, come upon us. Mighty One Eternal, hold us in thine hand. The perils come thicker and faster. On the right and on the left our numbers fall. Some, too, are gathered with us. "When the Son of Man cometh, shall He find faith on the earth?" EDWIN BURNHAM.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER SIX.

When Christ was anointed by the Father and entered upon the work of his mission, he did not begin to point out the defects of human governments and seek to amend them, nor did he enter upon a series of lectures to point out better forms of government, and wiser principles of legislation; neither did he claim that the then existing administrations were of Divine origin, and as such must be sustained by his adherents. He made no administration or election speeches, sought no office in the Senate, or council chambers. He did not claim that his doctrine contained a set of principles which would improve and elevate the governments which would adopt them, and thus gain his Father's approbation; no, nothing like this. The system he was to promulgate in connection with calling men to repentance, was altogether another system. It was distinct and separate from all others,—"The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Repent ye, therefore, and believe the gospel," was the announcement. As he found men of all classes, he clearly described to them their moral conditions, not their political relation, high or low, rich or poor; they were called upon to turn their attention to the true God, repent of their sins, obtain pardon through Christ, the Son of God, embrace his code of law,—the New Covenant, which was the administration of heaven. This was not intended to revolutionize, supplant, or to demolish the statutes of nations; but to show the people that God, through his Son, Jesus Christ, was to gather out of the nations a people who would obey his law, be attracted by the peaceful principles of the kingdom which he is to set up when the charter to the Gentiles has run out, (Dan. 2:44; 7:27; Rev. 11. 15), thus to morally purify and discipline "an holy nation," "a royal priesthood," "a peculiar people," who should be worthy to reign with Christ when he takes the throne of David.

In the beginning of his preaching, benedictions are promised upon those who choose the Lord's reign.—"Blessed are the poor in spirit; for their's is the kingdom of heaven." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake; for their's is the kingdom of heaven." He then begins to contrast his principles with those of civil government. In the former dispensation it was "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, That ye resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." In the civil code it was written (Deut. 23:6)—"Thou shalt not seek their (thine enemies') peace, nor their prosperity all thy days forever." "But," says Christ (Matt. 5:44), "I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. That ye may be the children of your Father in heaven." Thus he went on with his instruction, and at the close of that great sermon, so often cited and little regarded, "the people were astonished at his doctrine." It has been so little practiced, or preached even, that the people are astonished yet, who hear it urged as christian law, and are ready to rail on us as they did on Him who first taught it.

But it is urged that this class of precepts only referred to individual, private conduct, and not to legal and national relations and action. This is a great and specious deception. Christ is quoting directly from the legal code, the national statutes of Israel, which had become null and void (but was the principle of all civil law), and directs his followers to refrain from such, and teaches them to pursue an entirely different course. It related to all the relations of this life, and agrees with all the teachings of Christ and his apostles, which follow.

These were the principles of Divine government, to control, not the world of mankind, but all who will accept them, and their author, and be governed by them. Of such, we hear Christ saying, in John 17:16, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Can Christ say this of the masses whose relations to the nations of earth lead them to identify themselves with all their interests?—who unite in framing, legislating, executing, and enforcing the exact principles of government which he commands his children not to obey? Can it be that those who choose to disobey Christ's law, and be in full fellowship with the governments of men, who may have adopted principles of law found in the Mosaic economy, are "not of the world"? We will look a little closer. I. C. WELLCOME.

The Opening of the Second Seal.

NUMBER TWO.

"And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see. And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword."—REV. 6: 3, 4.

This seal brings us back in the world's history, and gives an emblematical representation of the war spirit pervading all classes of men. The same thing is represented under the figure of three unclean spirits like frogs. Rev. 16:12–16,—"For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." Can we suppose that any such war spirit will take peace from the earth, and dispose men to kill one another, after Christ shall receive his crown, and go forth conquering and to conquer? Such a supposition cannot be admitted. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."—Isa. 9:6, 7.

This war spirit immediately precedes the coming of Christ to fulfill the prophecy of Isaiah just quoted. The mission of the spirits of devils is to gather the kings of the whole world for the battle of that great day. When they go forth, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh; for it is added in the same connection, "Behold, I come as a thief." When he comes, the kings of the earth are found gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army. Rev. 19:19. Joel tells us when this gathering of the nations shall be. "For behold, in those days and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land."—Joel 3:1, 2. From this we learn that the Lord is the person referred to.' Rev. 16:16. And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue "Armageddon"—"he" referring to the speaker in the preceding verse, "Behold, I come as a thief." He gathers them through the instrumentality of the spirits of devils, which are sometimes spoken of as numerous, or Legion; and sometimes the Satanic influence is represented as concentrated in one, as in our text, to whom was given a great sword. For an example of this see Mark 5. The man is first spoken of as having an unclean spirit—verse 2. But when Jesus addressed the spirit, he answered, "My name is Legion, for we are many,"—verse 9. Also verse 15—"And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the Legion," etc. Paul explains the rider upon the red horse, and the object of his mission when he calls him "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience"—Eph. 2:2; and Christ says "he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth," John 8:44, referring to the Satanic influence upon Cain which moved him to kill his brother, and that lie he told, "Ye shall not surely die."—Gen. 3:4, and 4:8.

Joel plainly informs us that such a spirit as that represented in the text will go forth among the Gentiles, when the day of the Lord is near. "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles: Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up. Beat your plow-shares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, oh Lord. Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow: for their wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more."—Joel 3:9–17.

If this be not the proclamation of one commissioned to take peace from the earth, I know not where we shall find in the prophets a prediction agreeing with the figure in our text. Let it be distinctly noted, that this proclamation is made when the day of the Lord is near; verse 14; not after he has gone forth conquering and to conquer. This proves that the second seal opened precedes the first in the order of time; that is, it reveals things which were to transpire just previous to the day of the Lord. The first seal opened gave an emblematical representation of that day; and we have before proved that the first seal opened must be the last placed upon the roll, and would therefore disclose events last in the order of time, revealed under the seven seals.

Let us now hear the great teacher himself explain the harvest, and see if the opening of the second seal does not give a representation of the "spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience." "Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn. . . He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man; the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of the world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matt. 13 30, 37–43. "Then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more."—Joel 3. 17.

For the Crisis.

The Signs of the Times.

Our Savior told the Jews, "When it is evening, ye say, it will be fair weather, for the sky is red . . . . O ye hypocrites! ye can discern the face of the sky, but can ye not discern the signs of the times?" The signs of the times were indicative of the first advent of our Savior. The star that appeared and guided the wise men to the place of his nativity, was a sign of which the prophets spake:—"Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Also Herod slaying all the children in Bethlehem, from two years old and under. Jer. 31:15,—"A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rahel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not." The gospel preached. Isa. 61:1,—"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound." The prophet says in another place—"To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison." "The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped: then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing." All these signs, and many more too numerous herein to mention, were fulfilled to convince the generation living in Christ's day, that he was the Messiah on earth. When we take into consideration the humility of Christ's life, his mighty works, the manner and circumstances of his death, his resurrection, the pouring out of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost, we ask, does it seem possible that any one then living could have doubted he was the Son of God, the Holy Child Jesus? There was something peculiar in his appearance. He spake as man never spake. He was filled with the Holy Spirit, and preached with power. The great, the learned of the Jews would not believe on him, but the fishermen believed and were chosen. The Gentiles followed him. The Savior had given them signs sufficient to convince any reasonable mind that he was the true Messiah. God does all he can consistent with his word to save lost man, and when after all this men reject the kind invitations of the Spirit, and the warnings of Jehovah, they are left. So it was with the Jews; their place and nation were taken from them, and the vineyard let out to others bringing forth the fruit thereof.

We have noticed some of the signs of Christ's first coming. We are led to ask, secondly, are there signs now fulfilling, which were given by Christ, the apostles and the prophets, of his second coming? The world are as willingly ignorant and unbelieving to-day of Christ's second coming, as the Jews were of old of his first coming. It is not natural for the carnal mind to love the coming of Jesus. The world loves to hear of the glorious day as being far in the future, beyond its day and generation. Man loves to lay up treasures on earth, and grind the face of the poor (James 5), which is a sign of the end, for the Apostle says (ver. 7), "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." This is the same blessed consolation all the holy writers give to the church—the coming of the Lord and the kingdom of God at hand. The apostle James in his fifth chapter, speaking of the rich men, says—"Weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. . . . Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." When, since the writer of this epistle was on earth, has there been such an increase of gold and silver, and treasures of this life, as at the present time? When in the world's history can there be shown so many banking institutions as now? When so much insurance capital as is heaped together at this day? It seems to be the order of the day—riches—riches. The apostle adds for our consolation, "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Another sign is the unwillingness of men to hear sound doctrine. They turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables. The apostle says, "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." This describes the fashionable preaching of these last days. How many thousands run after it! Some have even denied that the Lord will ever come the second time. I fear many have become proud. The prophet says of such—"The day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up."

Another sign spoken of in 2 Pet. 3:3, 4, "Scoffers, saying, where is the promise of his coming?" That is, they see no signs of the kingdom at hand; all they can comprehend is their lusts, and they are even bold to deny that we can ever know any thing about the day of the Lord. Therefore they scoff at the idea that the Scripture teaches us anything relative to the manner, object and time of Christ's second coming.

Another sign spoken of in 2 Pet. 2:—"False Teachers." These false teachers will deny the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction; "and many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of." And as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, so it will be in the days of these false teachers; that is, one generation would not pass away before the judgment would overtake them.

"Departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron." This we must acknowledge has been fulfilled before our eyes. What a great change there has been in the past ten or fifteen years! Seducing spirits are at work. Hypocrites are multiplying among us.

We have seen the signs in the sun, moon and the falling stars. We have had the physical, moral, and political signs. They are nearly all in the past. The present aspect of the nations betokens distress, with perplexity; men's hearts failing them for fear. The powers of the heavens are to be shaken, the sign of the Son of man to be seen in heaven, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn; and they shall see him coming with power and great glory. The three unclean spirits are doing their work (Rev. 16), to gather the kings and the whole world to the battle of the great day of God Almighty. The present condition of the world indicates a great revolution. Soon the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. We are near the end. The Lord has hung out the signs; the nobleman is about to return from the far country. And who is there who can exclaim when he comes—"Lo! this is our God; we have waited for him"? Depend, the good man of the house will watch, and the faithful and wise servant will be found giving meat in due season. Blessed are such, for the Lord will make him ruler over all his goods. This poor groaning earth is soon to be converted into an Eden; its groans and sighs to everlasting joy and gladness. Therefore be faithful, dear reader, and soon you will share the glory that is to be revealed at the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. J. E. C.

Meditations,

OCCASIONED BY THE DEATH OF A FRIEND.

Jesus loves me. Oh! how precious
Is the thought to me.
Blessed Saviour, kind and gracious,
Do I not love Thee?

In my "heart of hearts" thou knowest
I would all forsake—
All I love that's best and dearest,
For the Savior's sake.

Without thee I pine in sadness,
With thee I rejoice,
And my soul is full of gladness
When I hear thy voice.

Other love than thine may fail me,
Earthly friends forsake,
Till my soul be filled with sorrow,
And my heart shall break;

Yet I know, though faint and failing,
Firmly I shall stand,
With the Savior's arms around me,
Strengthened by his hand.

One I loved stern death has taken
From my heart away,
But I know that thou wilt waken
That dear form of clay;

I again shall see and greet her—
With her, hand in hand,
Roam fair Eden's blissful bowers
In the "goodly land."

Earth is cold, and dark, and dreary,
I would fain go home;
Of its scenes I'm weary, weary,
Jesus, quickly come!

Hasten, Savior, thine appearing,
Let the Day-star dawn!
Close the dreary night of weeping,
Bring the glorious morn.

Human Ghostology.—No. 6.

VII. RESURRECTION OF GHOSTS. Discovering that the Bible frequently brings to view a resurrection, and,—upon the hypothesis of ghostology,—seeing no need of the resurrection of the material body, the conclusion has been arrived at, that only the soul is to participate in the resurrection glory, that there is no resurrection OF the dead, but merely a resurrection FROM the dead; a simple resurrection, or raising up, of the internal living man, from the external dead man, at the hour of death. Before attempting a refutation of this new and plausible item of theology, let us notice its foundation.

1st. We are told there is no need of raising the material system if the soul-man lives after the body-man dies. That "IF" is well employed. And here we inquire if the soul-man has no necessary connection with the body-man, and can live, think and act without it, why did God ever make a body-man to put the soul-man into? If the soul-man does not need the body-man after death, did it need it before? If the body-man is only a prison house for the soul-man to live in, why was it first imprisoned there? If the body-man has ever been a detriment, a clog, a shackle to the soul-man, was it not folly upon the part of God to make a body-man, for the soul-man, which would always have been much better off without it? If the body-man forever goes into nonentity at death, and has only been a hindrance during its life, why was it ever made?

2nd. We are told that it is impossible for the body to be raised, as it passes through a change once in seven years, before and after death. We remark in the first place, if this is a valid argument against the resurrection, it can be used with equal force in favor of several absurdities. For instance; a man and woman are married, and thus the woman "is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth." Rom. 7:2. But at the end of seven years, the woman can claim that she is not the lady that entered into a marriage covenant with that gentleman, there not being a particle of matter about her system which helped make up the lady to whom he was married. Thus, if this theory is good for anything against the resurrection, it liberates people from their marriage covenant once in seven years. Should the objector say, they have the same souls that they had at marriage, I ask, are souls married to each other as "long as they live?" If so, it would not only carry the marriage covenant into the other world (if the soul is immortal), but it would involve the ridiculous idea that the man who had married several wives here, would have several wives there, and that the man who had married a widow here, would have to contest his claim there with her former husband! Besides, what if the soul-wife should be saved, and the soul-husband should be damned? Who believes that every seven years releases people from the marriage covenant? It does if this argument against the resurrection is good, unless it be claimed that the soul is married, and those who believe that the marriage covenant is carried into heaven and hell, with its plurality of ghost-wives, and the strife in deciding which ghost-man shall claim the ghost-widow who has been married several times? This is the legitimate result of this theory.

Again: the murderer, who for seven years has eluded the grasp of the officer, is finally taken upon the stage to be hung till he is "dead." But he denies that he is the man who committed the murder, claiming that there is not a particle of matter in his system that helped compose the body of the murderer! Now, if this theory is valid against a resurrection of the body, that man can justly claim his release. But will it be said that he has the same soul that dwelt in the murderer? Well, can you inflict the penalty upon a soul which you say is immortal—hang it till it is "dead, dead, DEAD?" If you could, would you be justified in killing an innocent body with it? If you could not, would it be right to murder an innocent body, when by so doing you could not expect to kill the guilty soul?

Once more: a man in London goes to a hotel and bargains for board for a few weeks, agreeing to pay the bill at the expiration of the time mentioned. He daily eats at the well furnished table till the time nearly expires, and then absconds, leaving his bill unpaid. Seven years after this, the landord meets this boarder in the streets of Boston, and presents to him his board bill. The boarder insists that he is not the man; that there is not a particle of matter in his system, that helped make up that boarder. If this argument is worth anything against the resurrection, it will liberate the man from the debt. But, says the landlord, your soul dwelt in that man. Well, says the boarder, my soul never ate your bread and butter, or drank your tea and coffee, nor did I; hence neither are holden for the debt.

It has been scientifically demonstrated that man is made up of a certain number of "life cells," which are the receivers of nourishment for the system, and are capable of contraction or expansion; thus man is sometimes lighter, and sometimes heavier, in proportion as the "life cells" are replenished or diminished. But where is the proof that there are additions or substractions from the number of "life cells" (which compose the material identity of man,) by the revolution of time? That there is a gradual passing off of substance received into the "life cells, we admit, as they are receivers of nourishment, and are susceptible of contraction or expansion,—can hold more or less nourishment,—receive and remit.

Those who deny a resurrection of the body render themselves obnoxious to the charge which the Savior thundered in the ears of the Sadducees, "Ye do greatly err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God." God's power to raise the dead should not be limited or questioned. When he speaks let us believe, even if it clashes with "vain philosophy." Said Job; "Though after my skin, worms destroy my body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." Job. 19:25. He here makes a thrust at modern skepticism, which claims that the body cannot rise after worms eat it up. The nature of the resurrection is clearly foreshadowed by the resurrection of Christ, who was raised as the "first fruits," or in other words, as the sample or specimen. (See 1. Cor. 15:20, 23.) The harvest must be like the "first fruits," or specimen. Therefore, if Christ's resurrection merely consisted in the rising of the soul, from the body at the hour of death, then may our resurrection be of the same character. After Christ's resurrection, he exclaims, "I am he that liveth, and was dead." Rev. 1:18. That part of Christ which shared in the resurrection, had been "dead." Thus that part of the saint which is "dead" must rise, as the harvest must compare with the "first fruits." "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption." "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual BODY"—not a spirit. We are reminded that Paul, in speaking of the resurrection, refers us to the practice of sowing grain, and then we are told that there is a certain "germ" connected with the grain which does not die. But Paul speaks not a word about a germ, and we should not make more of his illustration than he used it for; however, if the theologians will crowd upon us the question of the germ, we inquire, does the farmer separate the germ from the grain when he sows it? Or, does he sow grain and germ together? Does he carry the germ up chamber and leave the grain to rot forever? Of another class, I inquire, is the germ thus separated, and afterwards connected with the grain to make it sprout? Then why insist that a ghostly germ is disconnected from the body. Let germ and body go together, or be silent about the "germ." W. SHELDON.

(Concluded.)

We will now examine some passages of Scripture and see what will be the state of things under this covenant.

1. The people under it shall be all righteous; Isa. 60: 20,—"Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation. I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Please read carefully the entire chapter. Isa. 62: 2,—"The Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory; and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name." 12th verse,—"And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord; and thou shalt be called, Sought out, A city not forsaken." Much more might be said on this point, and many scriptures brought in support of the same. Of course when men are cleansed from all their idols, they will cease to be idolaters; and when the laws of God are written on the heart, and put in the inward parts, they will not backslide from God as did their fathers, and break God's covenant. This new one they cannot break. God does the work thoroughly. They shall all know him, and all obey him; and this is not done for their sakes, but "for my name sake, saith the Lord." The promises made to the fathers must be fulfilled, or the Scriptures must be broken; and as Joshua did not put them in possession of the land according to the promise of God, Jesus must and will. If Joshua had given them rest, then another day would not have been spoken of by David, as saith the apostle; and it is worthy of note that the same people are spoken of in both cases, namely, the people that did not obtain rest under Joshua but will obtain it under their greater leader, Jesus. Now if we can find what people Joshua led over the Jordan, then we have found the people with whom God made the first covenant; and if they did not obtain the promised rest under the first covenant, then Jesus will give them both the land and the rest promised under the second, or new covenant: for thus it is written,—"Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, as yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the CITIES thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity, The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness." Jer. 31: 23; Jer. 30: 3, 8, 11, 12, 16, 18, 22; Jer. 31: 27, 28; Jer. 32: 37; Isa. 62: 3–5; Isa. 66: 19–21; Hosea 1: 7–10, Hosea 2: 17–19; Joel 2: 19–28; Amos 9: 9–15.

Another point is, the people with whom this new covenant is made, must be in the land promised to the fathers, never more to be plucked up or thrown down. "In that day will I raise up the Tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I will raise up his ruins, and I will build it as in the days of old, that they may possess the remnant of Edom and of all the Gentiles which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos 9: 11, 15; Acts 15: 17. The apostle Paul locates the new covenant in the future, and shows that it was not to be made with Gentiles but with Judah and Israel; and it is admitted that the apostle was writing to his Gentile brethren when he uses the following language: "For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree. For (he continues) I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel (how long?) until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written (Isa. 59: 20), There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Rom. 11: 24–27. The apostle here refers to the covenant of Jeremiah 31st, and locates it in the future; and when the Deliverer shall come out of Zion and take away their sins, it is admitted that their sins are not yet taken away, and the apostle says they shall be, and under the new covenant; and Jesus is the mediator of that covenant.

Now it may be said that he cannot be the mediator of a covenant that does not exist. We might just as well say that there could be no mediator between two nations to bring about a treaty of peace, unless the treaty was already in existence; when, in fact, if the treaty existed there would be no need of a mediator. John said of Christ, "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world!" The sin of the world is not yet taken away. But shall we say that it never will be in the future? But it may be asked, are we not under a covenant? We answer, yes, verily, we are under the Abrahamic covenant, which runs thus: "In thee and thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blest." And the way the Gentiles have the benefits of the promise is, by being in Christ, for that is the only way Gentiles can become Abraham's seed; and in no other sense; for when God promised him the land and a son, he also instituted the ordinance of circumcision, which separated him and his seed from the surrounding nations. Now the Gentiles come in as grafts; not into the new covenant, for that is to be made with the natural seed; but to all the blessings of the covenant made with Abraham. The rich man and Lazarus make an illustration of this. But it may be asked, Did not Christ make a new covenant when he came? If so, with whom was it made? That it was not made with the Jews is plain from the following facts: The prophet says Jerusalem shall be the joy of the whole earth; her people shall no more be a reproach among the Gentiles; thy sons shall come from afar, and thy daughters from the ends of the earth. But Jesus says, Jerusalem shall be trodden under foot of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. The prophet says they shall build the waste places. Jesus says, "Your house is left desolate." In the parable they are represented as desiring light in their dispersed condition. Jesus says, "Ye have Moses and the prophets." The disciples, understanding the conditions of the new covenant, ask, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (not to the Gentiles.) Jesus answers, "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons which God has placed in his own power."

It is said that all the commandments graven on the tables of stone are carved into the new covenant save one, namely, the Sabbath. Now we ask, are not the ten commandments binding on every believer to-day excepting the seventh day Sabbath? Jesus said, "I come not to destroy the law, but to fulfil" (or establish). Did he do anything but make that law more binding than ever? But this is not a new covenant, for the following reason: it is not to be according to the one made with the fathers. That was written on stone tables. The new one is to be written on the heart, and in the inward parts. Under it they were to be gathered, to dwell safely in their own land. "They shall teach no more every man his neighbor, Know the Lord, for they shall all know me from the least of them to the greatest of them." "I will be their God and they shall be my people."

Can it be that we are living under this covenant when we are so full of sin, and scarcely ten men can be found who can agree upon the great subject of What is truth? J. M. MUHLIG.

Traitors.

Somebody is fulfilling this portion of God's word. Who is it? A traitor is one who betrays his trust, or a treacherous dealer. Woe to the man that deals treacherously with his brother, it were better for that man if he had never been born. Could we always realize this we should be more faithful in telling our fellow men where they stand, while there is an opportunity for them to change their position. "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth to life; and few there be that find it." If we realize the straitness of the way, and see some who suppose themselves ready for the kingdom, but are lacking, and warn them not, but otherwise tap them on the shoulder and say, "You are doing well, (especially if they help us,) go on;" will not their blood be found in our garments, and we be called "treacherous dealers"? Woe will be upon us if we deal not faithfully with our brother: a traitor's doom will be ours. Let us use "great plainness of speech," that we may be acquitted at the tribunal of God. Sweet will be the words, "Well done!" which will fall musically from the lips of "Judah's Lion" when we have finished our course, walking through the paradise of God, while a voice salutes our ears, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, behold! I will make thee ruler over many things." See to it that you are willing to disclose the true condition to any and every brother, as duty may require, that you be not stamped with the name of a traitor. To all, and especially to watchmen.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 12, 1862.

Second Coming of Christ.

All classes seem to be convinced that some "great event" is at hand, and a large number think Christ is soon coming; while they differ very widely as to the manner of his appearing. The following is one definition of Christ's second advent: "Spiritualism is the second coming of Christ."

We have reason to believe that this doctrine, as set forth by the Spiritualists, will have a very wide circulation beyond its present extensive reception.

When Jesus was asked to give signs of his second coming, he informed his disciples, as recorded in Matt. 24, that a long chain of events would transpire, that the saints would pass through the "great tribulation," after which, if men said, "Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not." It is common to meet with men at the present day, who say, "Christ has come to me." We ask such to explain themselves, and they inform us that he came to them in a spiritual circle, or in other words, he has come in them spiritually. They will then go on to speak very highly of Jesus; while at the same time, they have no more confidence in him as a Savior, than in Andrew Jackson Davis.

It will be observed that the time when they say, "Lo, here is Christ, or there," is after the shortening of the days of the "great tribulation," and consequently must be near the end of the present dispensation. The Spiritualists tell us of "myriads" of Christs,—every reformer is one, according to their teaching. In addition to the claim that many Spiritualists are Christs, because they assume to be reformers, they are also prophets by the aid of the spirits. This class of people have spoken a great amount of prophecy, but as it is not reliable, according to their own testimony, they must be denominated "false prophets," which Jesus tells us will arise in connection with the "false Christs." Besides all this, they will "show great signs and wonders, insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect." We need not stop to show that "great signs and wonders" are witnessed all over the world through the agency of the class of whom we are speaking, and that by these means they have deceived millions.

When the church arrives at the period when these things are fulfilling, they should remember the saying of Jesus, "Behold I have told you before." On this account, the children of the Lord can say, "this is that which was spoken by the prophet," and, therefore, they are not in the dark that the day of the Lord should overtake them "as a thief." Our Savior has pointed out the coming of these deceivers, so that when they appear, we may have unshaken confidence in his word, and know that his coming is near.

As the demons know full well that our Savior is about to return, they are making great efforts to divert the attention of men from the real and true coming of Christ to a false one, in order to prevent as many as possible from being ready. They know that passing events are well calculated to arrest the attention of the thoughtful and lead them to a preparation for the great day of the Lord, therefore they admit that Christ is coming, but deny the manner, saying it is spiritual, and in all parts of the world.

The Savior goes on to say, "Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold he is in the desert, go not forth; behold he is in the secret chambers, believe it not." He then goes on to show that the spiritual coming is only a fable, and that when he comes all will know it, as certainly as they can see lightning when it shines from the east to the west. He is coming in "great glory." The "glory" of the Lord is so great that it renders the light of the sun unnecessary; hence the glory that precedes and accompanies his advent is very properly represented by lightning; the most brilliant of all lights that we have seen. A momentary sight of lightning often injures the eyes; but the glory attending his coming is so great, that men unchanged are unable to bear it. Accordingly we read of a wicked class "whom the Lord shall . . . . destroy with the brightness of his coming."

To us the evidence is very clear that we have arrived at the point of time where we should be in constant readiness for the coming of the Son of man, because the signs, that were to satisfy us that he "is near, even at the doors," are now in the past; therefore, the great event cannot be far off. We firmly believe the present generation will witness the closing scenes of the christian dispensation. Let us all keep upon our watch towers, waiting for the Blessed One, so that when he comes, we shall be able to give him a hearty welcome, and shout his praises with all the redeemed.—o.

A New Sect of Spiritualists.

In the Herald of Progress, for Dec. 14, '61, published by Andrew Jackson Davis & Co., New York, we find a notice of "A new sect of Spiritualists," who are sending out "several talented persons," who are traveling through the country giving lectures, and spreading their peculiar views. The following extract will give one some understanding of their sentiments. The writer says:—

"Within a short time a new sect has arisen, which is not yet organized so as to present any peculiar belief, but which admits into its ranks the most profligate persons, and, at the same time, ignores all civil law so far as its requirements can restrict any of their licentious practices.

The adherents of this new sect are willing to be known as hostile to all Government, and are ready to meet all consequences growing out of their defiant position.

They aver that 'spirits have taught them new doctrines, and that it is the duty of all Spiritualists to conform to those teachings, so as to introduce into society the free indulgence of all our sensual natures.' . . . Several talented persons of this character are traveling the country as 'Spiritual Lecturers,' and are making great pretensions of giving a new unfoldment to the world. They insidiously hold forth a doctrine that all mankind have a right to live in accordance with their sensual natures, and are under no obligation to make any sacrifices for the good of humanity."

The foregoing gives the reader an idea of the progress which Spiritualists are making; and the direction of that progress. We are expecting that these immoral principles will spread rapidly, as they are adapted to the natural man. It is due Mr. Davis, to say that he does not endorse this new sect; but already there are many who claim to be "reformers" that are advocating these doctrines and morals of devils. They will not be satisfied till they have persuaded men to be as wicked as possible.

All who hold to the conscious state of man in death are in danger of being deceived by these lying spirits. Thank the Lord for the light of truth now shining upon our pathway.

The Day of the Lord.

We have remarked that the period embraced by the term "day of the Lord," is seen in the nature of the events then to transpire, as really, as by the passages already considered.

Whatever judgments may be poured upon the seat of the beast, and the apostate church, the first grand fact that marks decisively the beginning of the thousand years, is the second advent of the Lord. The emphatic language of Rev. 20—"The rest of the dead lived not until the thousand years were finished: this is the first resurrection," together with other Scripture, places the matter beyond doubt. Take for example the following passages:—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. "I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."—2 Tim 4: 1. St. Paul contemplating both the resurrection and translation says, "We shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed."—1 Cor. 15: 52.

Then follows the destruction of the antichristian nations in the battle of Armageddon. "The spirits of devils, working miracles," are seen going forth "unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty"; whereupon the seventh vial of wrath is poured out, when there are thunderings, lightnings, and an earthquake; the cities of the nations fall; mystery Babylon comes in remembrance before God to receive of his wrath; mountains and islands are moved out of their places, and men blaspheme God (Rev. 16). Immediately following the judgments upon mystery Babylon, "the kings of the earth and their armies" are "gathered together to make war" against Christ and the heavenly host, when "all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven" are called to the supper of the great God, to "eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great." (Rev. 19. Compare with Ezk. 39: 11–29.)

However symbolical this language of the Apocalypse may appear, these passages are so much in harmony with numerous other passages scattered through both the Old and New Testaments relating to this point, as to preclude the thought of anything less, than would be taught by accepting it in its most literal sense. If the language is symbolical, then how vastly more terrible than anything we would gather from its literal interpretation! Compare Dan. 7: 9; 12: 1, with Luke 21: 25, and Rev. 11: 15–18. To the same period we may apply the language of Joel 3: 9,—"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: LET THE WEAK SAY, I AM STRONG." It is probable that then will be fulfilled the threatenings and the promises found in chapters 24, 25, and 26 of Isaiah. And perhaps there, while God's people are in mid-heaven, will be realized the declaration, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain."—Isa. 26: 20, 21.

How long ere the heavenly escort shall then descend from mid-heavens to the earth, we are not informed: but in the passage referred to (Joel 3), it is immediately said, "The Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel." From this passage, and from the expression, "little moment" in Isaiah, we are led to believe it will be but a short time before the Lord will descend with the angels and myriads of redeemed ones to earth. The prophecies referring to this are most beautiful, though time and space forbid that we notice more than one or two of them. The prophet Joel continues: "So shall ye know that I am the Lord your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no stranger pass through her any more. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and the fountains shall come forth of the house of Lord. * * * * For the Lord dwelleth in Zion." Again, "Behold the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee. For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle. * * * Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle. And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, [the very place from which our Lord ascended 1800 years ago,] which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley." "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one."—Zech. 14.

But all this is more fully seen by taking into consideration several passages in the New Testament, two or three of which we will notice. In the third chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, St. Peter denominates the periods now to follow, "The TIMES of refreshing", and again, "The TIMES of the restitution of all things." "Times of the Gentiles" (Luke 21: 24) mean at least eighteen hundred years; and why "the times of restitution of all things" may not embrace as long a period, we should not know, were it not specifically determined that one thousand years—ten successive centuries—should pass, when shall come the final consummation, and the time when He that sitteth upon the throne shall say, "Behold I make all things new."—Rev. 21: 5. In Matt. 19: 28, it is said, "In the REGENERATION, when the Son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." The same period is again clearly set forth by St. Paul: "For He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet."—1 Cor. 15: 25. To these might be added many passages, but we have given what we hope will suffice to put in the way of fruitful investigation, such as are disposed to give the subject a fair canvassing.

Brethren, the day of days is upon us. How can we fail to be interested in the grand and glorious scenes that await the church of God in a little from this? Or how can we be indifferent to the accumulating signs of the times, that so clearly indicate the day at hand when the doom of the ungodly shall be fixed, and a world receive their just dues from the hand of a holy and impartial God. May God grant us that preparation that shall make us meet for the coming kingdom.—M.

Family Prayer.

Much has been said about family prayer, and some things written, and I feel like writing a little. Religious families ought to pray together—as well as in secret—when there is unison in prayer. But there is no form of worship that is as likely to become formal, stale and irksome as this, if not conducted properly. No particular formulas are commanded in the Bible, therefore none binding. Circumstances alter cases in religious ceremonies as in other duties. For instance. Here is a family in independent circumstances. They can spend fifteen minutes in reading, and fifteen to twenty more in praying in the morning. Another family are poor, work in a factory village, and cannot attend to it. What is to be done? Can he live his religion? Yes. God adapts his grace to our circumstances. Hence no particular form is necessary to please God. Some have substituted giving themselves up to God a few moments in prayer before and after rising, which God accepts. Others at the table ask the blessing of God, comprehending all that they expect or need in one minute, and they feel justified.

I find that some preachers have all the praying to do in some families. The preacher must read and pray of course. It is fashionable. Where there is no family altar erected, I never felt it duty to set one up, unless in case of young converts just starting. A short time ago I visited some of my relatives, who were Universalists. I was asked to pray. I asked if that was their habit? They said "no." I refused on the ground of there being no sympathy in my praying—no one to join with me. This had a good effect. The circumstances dictated to me such a course. A few weeks since a family had abandoned family prayer from seeming necessity. The preachers generally put up with them, and would sit up and talk till eleven, then read and pray, and ask all to pray, and get to bed at twelve. This is a tedious form. One man told me he had got so tired he got to sleep on his knees. This frightened him; so when he aroused, to atone for his sin, he said "Amen" so sharp and out of place, that it revealed the fact he had not paid attention. How much worship was there in this? Is it not a form?

A man said I must excuse him from staying to prayers; he must attend to his work or lose his job. I said to him, "Go ahead." On inquiring, he had been killed by preachers lying in bed until eight or nine o'clock in the morning, after breakfast reading and explaining and praying, and the man anxious to have him get through. The bell then calling him, the preacher had done, and asked the man to follow. Under such circumstances could this man pray, or just say a prayer, which is nothing but a form? Such preachers as these are tolerating coldness and begetting formality. No wonder altars are being given up. We must adapt ourselves to time and circumstances, and not to forms. I have been to places where I dreaded to have the hour arrive for prayers, on account of the long, formal ceremonies performed. This is so Pharisaical, more hurt than good is done generally. It serves to tire and harden, instead of interesting and softening the heart. I think preachers ought to reform in this respect, and learn to adapt themselves to others' positions.

HIRAM MUNGER.

For the Crisis.

Indispensable Characteristics.

1st. Faith, without which it is impossible to please God, and which "worketh by love and purifies the heart."

2nd. Add virtue, or "fortitude," or "courage."

3d. To virtue add knowledge, even the experimental "knowledge of the Lord."

4th. To knowledge add temperance, or self-control.

5th. To temperance add patience which will enable you to be "patient in tribulation."

6th. To patience add godliness—an element that will make us more like God, and less like self.

7th. To godliness add brotherly kindness—not brotherly animosity. Oh! what a lack of "brotherly kindness" among professors.

8th. To brotherly kindness add charity, or Divine love, which is the crowning grace. "He that lacketh these things is blind." Do we lack "charity," "brotherly kindness," or "godliness?" Are these graces abounding in us? W. SHELDON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. M. Ingham.

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS SCATTERED ABROAD:—I take this way to let the friends of Jesus know where I am, and of some of my travels for a few months past. I left Nova Scotia Aug. 23d. Stopped at St. Johns over Sunday, preached twice at Eld. Bills' church (Baptist), and once at the Baptist church in Carleton. Left St. Johns in the steamer for Boston. Arrived there Tuesday morning. In the afternoon reached the Wilbraham camp ground. Stopped during the meeting. Had an excellent meeting, good preaching, good singing, and good order. Returned to Boston. From thence to Truro, Cape Cod. Stopped there three Sundays. Had some very good meetings. There are a few here striving for the better land. They have a neat little chapel, and are glad to see the ministering brethren, and to help them on their way. Winter is the best time to visit them, for then the most of the people are at home. Had a few evening meetings at Wellfleet—quite a free time speaking. Some few there that love the doctrine of the speedy coming of the Lord. From thence to New-Bedford, Mattapoisett, Westport, Fairhaven, and Head of the the river. Had some good meetings. More interest to hear in some places than usual. May the Lord bless the word spoken. Had two evening meetings at Tremont, where they had the campmeeting last summer. There are a few here looking for the speedy coming of the Lord. Had some meetings at North Abington, baptized one. Held meetings two Sundays at Scituate. Here are a few interested in the speedy advent of the Lord. Put up at Bro. Cottle's, the pilgrim's home. It is a home indeed. I felt that I was in my father's family. It is cheering to the pilgrim stranger to find homes in this dark, dreary world. But this is the promise to those that leave all for Christ. Visited Lynn, Salem, Haverhill, Lawrence, Natick and Boston. Held meetings in most of these places.

Had a pleasant tour. Find some decided to go through. Praise the Lord! Returned to Nova Scotia by the way of St. Johns. Preached at Carleton, part of the day, Dec. 1st, in Eld. Hartley's church (Free Christian Baptist). Arrived at home Dec. 3d. Found family and friends generally well. Thus we have passed over three months without harm or accident. Had meetings at Clements, Bear River, and Smith's Cove. Some few here yet, I trust, are holding on their way. I expect to stop in the Province during the winter and labor for the salvation of my fellow men. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few. What is done must be done quickly. The Master is soon coming to receive to himself his tried and waiting ones. I am glad. I mean by the help and grace of God to be among the ready ones. Dear brethren and sisters, let us fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. Then the kingdom will be ours. Amen.

Clements Port, N. S., Jan. 1, '62.

From Thos. W. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—Without wishing to occupy unnecessary space in the Crisis, perhaps a brief recital of my progress thus far may not be uninteresting to some of the brethren and sisters. I have endeavored to preach the truth on some sixteen occasions since I came here, Nov. 6th. As I had expected, I met considerable opposition from some narrow-minded people, mostly professors of religion. Last Sunday evening our Methodist friends thought to interfere with our appointment by holding a prayer meeting in the immediate neighborhood. It often happens that "man proposes, but God disposes," so in this case; their intentions were evidently frustrated, as there were fully double the number present than on any previous occasion, and we were permitted to speak with freedom and success. I had also an appointment at this place on last Monday evening; but was refused the use of the school-house, the result of misrepresentation and bad influence of some who are numbered among us, but not of us. We were invited to preach in the house of a good Baptist sister. We accepted, and called on all who were desirous of hearing the word of the Lord to go to the said house. All but five went, three of whom came just as we were concluding our remarks. Some said they were anxious to hear more, and promised to read the word and see whether these things were so. I gave away some of Bro. Hastings' tracts, which he very kindly sent me. I also gave a couple of your excellent tracts to two gentlemen who wanted to read on such subjects. I had the pleasure of spending an evening with one of them since, and I believe he now sympathizes with us fully. There has been quite a number here who have asked me to organize a church on the Bible platform. I shall try to do so this week. I think we can have about fifteen or twenty persons to begin with. The gentleman I spoke of, will very likely become a subscriber of the Crisis.

A great many want me to confine my labors to this neighborhood, but I cannot refuse the numerous calls elsewhere. The cry constantly is, "When will you come again?" "Can't you come sooner?" I am entirely alone in this field. I am not aware of any preachers living within fifty miles of here, except Sr. Henry, and I do not know her exact locality. Bro. G., there are many zealous and talented young men in the east who ought to be here. There is more than one in Philadelphia that I know of. Why wont they come? I cannot attend half the calls for preaching. Will not some one come? They will not get rich, but they will not starve. I used to think that some of the calls for labor out here were not real, but I know that every call comes from the heart. Every man who can be spared East can have as much work as he can attend to here.

Near Vandalia, Fayette Co., Ill.

From D. R. and M. S. Mansfield.

BRO. GRANT:—We have just closed one of the best meetings that we have ever held in Buchanan. The whole length of time was about five weeks; meetings every evening, and twice on Sundays. The good news of the soon coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ has aroused the church to action and to duty. We often listen to from forty to sixty testimonies at a prayer and conference meeting, besides prayers and singing. What more interesting is, the voices of young converts mingling with older members, all of one accord, making melody in their hearts to the Lord. Six converts were baptized, eight additions in all to the church at this time. Bro. Geo. Moyer, of La Porte Co., Ind., has been with us a part of the time during this meeting. Our health is very good considering that we have been in meeting almost every evening for fifteen weeks.

We have just now arrived at this place, (Jonesville) distance 124 miles, to hold a meeting of days with the churches who have waited patiently a long time for us. As near as we can learn, the prospects are bright for a good meeting. The church here was signally blessed listening to a few discourses given by Bro. Berick, on his way east last fall. They have hired the Universalist house until the coming spring, with strong hopes of being able to commence building a meeting-house for themselves as soon as spring opens. We shall do all we can to forward the enterprise, and bring about a place of worship for all whose hearts yearn to hear the glad tidings of Christ's glorious reign on earth.

Jonesville, Mich., Jan. 25th.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Haverhill, Mass., Aug. 16, 1861, of cholera infantum, Ada Gertie, youngest daughter of Horace and Mary A. Thompson, aged ten months and sixteen days.

Our little one became a prey to this disease which so often terminates fatally, and soon ended the life which had but just begun. She was the favorite of our household, and our hearts were filled with sorrow as we laid her in her lowly resting place. She was unusually beloved, as death's victims generally are, by both parents, her brother and sister. Death made a deep wound as he snatched our treasure away, but though he may wound, he cannot always destroy, for soon this lovely one, together with the others we have laid in the cold, dark grave, shall soon awake to immortal life and beauty; and when that bright morn dawns upon our sight, we shall expect with all the ransomed ones to meet "our Ada" in that fair city, where sickness, sorrow nor death shall ever come. E. T.

Died, in Hallowell, Maine, Jan. 19th, 1862, Dr. Nicholas Smith, aged seventy years.

Thus we are called to mourn the loss of one of the most faithful and useful men of the age. Our dear brother Smith was a very robust and healthy man, until about four years ago, when he was disabled by paralysis of the heart, which was followed by dropsy in the chest; since which time he has been unable to do much active service, often very ill, but generally able to look after the wants of his family, and sometimes to visit the brethren abroad. About five weeks before his death he grew much worse, and his sufferings were very great the most of the time until a few hours previous to his death, when they became less severe, until he fell asleep in Jesus at 2 o'clock, Sunday, P. M., to rest in death until the resurrection of the just.

By this death a widow, three daughters, and a large circle of relatives and friends are left to mourn the loss of a kind christian husband, father, brother and friend. One worthy to be called a christian, whose godly life and examples are worthy of imitation. The church has lost the society, counsels, instructions and influence of an Elder indeed,—a father in Israel. I may therefore be indulged in giving a few words of his past history.

Bro. Smith was blessed with a more than common mind. He was studious, capable of great endurance, unassuming, unconscious of his own mental ability, cautious in his decisions, determined in his purposes, careful and judicious in his counsels. Some thirty years ago he acted a prominent and important part in the rise and progress of the reformed system of medical practice, during which he obtained a very high reputation throughout Maine as a physician and medical adviser, which drew around him many physicians and students for instruction, and an extensive patronage of the sick for help. In the midst of all this laudable toil and worldly ambition, with political reputation, which he had also gained, the Lord brought him to fully realize his lost condition in a lukewarm religious state. Though moral, temperate, an anti-slavery man, a church member in good standing, yet he was unsaved. He counted the cost, gave up all for Christ, covenanted with Christ anew, to follow him in all things for life. This covenant he faithfully kept until death. I have been more intimately acquainted and associated with him than any other man for twenty years. He feared God alway, lived in intimate communion with Christ, and fellowship with his people. He had enemies, but they were sectarian enemies, who could not meet his arguments and would not accept the truth. When they sought his ruin, bore it patiently, and soon lived it down. In 1842, he heard the message of Christ's soon coming, and, after several months careful investigation he embraced it with all his heart, and enlisted to show the truth to others, amid the scorn and derision of many.

When he saw the beauty and harmony of God's revealed plan to redeem man and the earth, of man's unconscious state in death, and the promise of the final destruction of God's enemies out of the universe, his heart bounded with joy unspeakable, for the Bible became to him a new book, harmonious and clear. His interest in politics at once vanished, his strong hold on medical honors relaxed, and he applied himself with all his heart to walk with God, and extend a knowledge of his word to all around him. His time and money (beyond the support of his family) went to spread the truth of the soon coming of Christ, by the circulation of books, tracts, papers, and sustaining of meetings. When the Methodist church refused to allow the soon coming of Christ taught among them, he left it to follow Christ. His house was a place for meetings, where many were converted to Christ, and many christians embraced the gospel hope.

About twelve years ago he commenced public preaching, and has traveled and labored in about thirty towns, as well as at home, much of the time in company with me. In these labors great good has been accomplished in instructing and building up many in Christ. There are hundreds who have been greatly blessed through his instrumentality, and who will mourn his loss. His heart was imbued with the spirit of Christ, and he labored with a zeal worthy the cause. Few are the men that were as well acquainted with the Bible as he.

A few days before his death he sent for me to come and remain with him until death, and then attend his funeral. I did so; and although it was sad to witness his extreme sufferings, and to think he was dying, yet it was a great pleasure to minister to his wants, to witness his patience and strong confidence in Christ, to hear him often repeat choice passages of Scripture and of hymns. He inquired particularly how the cause of Christ prospered in various places, how the brethren were living, etc. He said, "I have been preaching the Lord is soon coming. I am glad I preached it just as I have. It is God's truth." Again, "Tell the brethren, when I [illegible] I preached, and hope soon to be raised up to meet them in the first resurrection." In this hope he fell asleep. His funeral was on Tuesday, the 21st, when we read many select portions of Scripture pertaining to our hope, and by remarks thereon endeavored to comfort the bereaved family "with these words." Bro. L. Wight assisted in the services. May God bless the lonely family, and prepare each to enter the soon coming kingdom of Christ, where death is not known. I. C. Wellcome.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF DR. N. SMITH.

The soldier so brave and so true,
Who foremost in conflict hath stood,
Has fought his last battle, and fell
As ever a warrior should.

At his post the brave soldier fell,
With his armor all burnished and bright
By service for Jesus his King,
For whose cause he nobly did fight.

Sleep on, brave old soldier, and take
The rest thou hast needed so long,
Until thou art bid to awake
And join in the Conqueror's song!

Then in form all-glorious and bright,
With unfading crown on thy head,
Thou shalt hear the applaudit, "Well done,"—
The street of pure gold thou shalt tread;

Jerusalem, the glorious Bride,
Arrayed in a splendor untold,
Will open her pearly gates wide,
And for thee her riches unfold.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says it is not true, as some journals represent, that the French Government has taken any steps to bring about a reconciliation between the North and South.

A speech delivered by Mr. Massey, a member of Parliament, before his constituents at Salford, in which he advocated that European powers should interfere to close the struggle by recognizing the Confederates and breaking the blockade, attracted some attention. The Times in an editorial on it says; "Let France interfere if she likes. England's true policy is to suffer a little longer and let the event work itself out. It will not be long. It may, indeed, be doubtful whether our interference would not rather retard than hasten the desired event of open ports and a large supply of cotton. Let us then pursue our honest policy of standing quite aloof."

After strenuous exertions access had been gained to part of the Hartley coal mine, and about 100 of the 215 buried miners had been discovered dead. It was feared the remainder of the miners would be found dead in another portion of the mine.

ITALY.

The Turin papers publish a dispatch from Rome asserting that the Austrian government was about to address a note to the Great Powers, declaring that the state of Piedmont constitutes a perpetual menace and renders it necessary that she should be required to disarm.

A marriage is talked of between Prince Oscar of Sweden and the second daughter of the King of Italy.

RUSSIA.

An imperial ukase has been published, stating that in view of the increased requirements of the State, an augmentation will be made in the poll and stamp taxes and import duties, which, in case of the latter, will be five per cent on articles entering Russia by European and Asiatic frontiers. A tax is also to be levied on registered letters.

BRAZIL.

Additional details by the French mail report that Gen. Flores had taken possession of Santa Fe. Roma, the late Governor, and Gen. Lopez had fled to the desert. Troops had been sent in pursuit.

Rome, Jan. 23. Some solution to the Roman question is shortly expected. Liberal popular manifestations have taken place in the streets of Rome.

Paris, Jan. 23. Prince Napoleon is seriously ill.

LATER.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 26. A ukase has been published permitting Jews to enter every branch of the State service, and Jewish merchants are permitted to reside anywhere. Other concessions are granted to the Jews.

Ragusa, Jan. 26. The insurgents rejected the amnesty offered them by Omar Pasha, and hostilities have recommenced in consequence.

The steamer La Plata, with Mason and Slidell on board, arrived at Southampton on the 29th. They were taken to St. Thomas by the Rinaldo, as she was unable to reach Halifax. They were received at Southampton courteously, but no demonstrations were made. Both proceeded to London, where Mason remains, but Slidell forthwith left for Paris.

The Times remarks that both gentlemen will probably keep themselves perfectly quiet and await events that are at hand.

The London Morning Advertiser states in positive terms that until the 20th of January it was the full intention of the Emperor Napoleon to announce in his speech the resolution he had come to, to abolish the Federal blockade, but a hitch occurred at the instance of Earl Russell, who deemed it advisable to defer doing anything for a few weeks. The Emperor therefore alluded to the question in his speech in the manner that would bind him to nothing. The Advertiser says that all the co-operation which Napoleon asked from England was a moral co-operation.

M. Ciuffa, President of the Civil Tribunal at Rome, has been assassinated. The assassin has been arrested.

The Pope was again reported ill.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Cairo, Ill., Feb. 7. Fort Henry, on the Tennessee river, surrendered yesterday at 2 o'clock, after a determined resistance. The fight, which lasted an hour and twenty minutes, was conducted by the gunboats Cincinnati, Essex and St. Louis.

The Cincinnati fired 120 rounds, and received 34 shots from the rebel guns, but only one man was killed. The St. Louis fired 110 rounds, but received no damage. The Essex was disabled at the tenth round by a ball striking her boiler.

Thirty-two men were killed, being scalded to death. Captain Porter was badly scalded, but not dangerously. Two rebel generals, one colonel, two captains and one hundred privates were taken prisoners. The Fort mounted seventeen guns.

The land forces did not reach the scene of action until two hours after the surrender. The Memphis and Ohio Railroad bridge, 15 miles above the fort has been taken possession of by our troops.

St. Louis, Feb. 7. The following is announced from headquarters:

"Fort Henry is ours. The flag of the Union is re-established on the soil of Tennessee. It will never be removed.

By command of Major General Halleck.

W. W. Smith, Captain and A. D. C.

New York, Feb. 7. The World's Washington dispatch says it is now currently rumored there that either Gen. Heintzelman or Gen. McDowell will take command of the new expedition to the South which is fitting out in New York, and will comprise a division of the army here.

It is not improbable that, in order to obviate any dispute concerning the blockade, the whole Southern coast will be taken possession of within the coming two months.

Washington, Feb. 7. The pickets of Smith's Division were successful in a skirmish to-day. Five prisoners, six horses, and eight Colt's revolvers were taken.

Paducah, Ky., Feb. 7. Gen. Smith on the west and Gen. Grant on the east side of Tennessee River, are pursuing the retreating rebels. It is reported, and is credited by some of our officers, that the rebel troops at Fort Henry were not true to the rebel cause, and took advantage of the opportunity offered by an attack, to run away from a fight that was distasteful to them.

Augusta, Ga., Feb. 5. A letter from Savannah says heavy firing was heard in the direction of New River, on the South Carolina side, on Monday morning, lasting four hours.

Rebel officers at Savannah say that one of the batteries on New river had been attacked, and one of the Federal gunboats, at least, destroyed.

A gentleman from Norfolk says the rebels are under the impression that Burnside has been completely wrecked.

The troops at Norfolk are being rapidly sent Southward as far as Mobile. Drafting will commence on the 1st of March.

Washington, Feb. 5. The news received here from Europe is of a pacific and encouraging character.

Mr. Dayton has sent a dispatch from Paris, giving the particulars of the recent refusal to receive Americans at a Court ball, to which Mr. Seward has replied.

It is understood that Gen. Burnside will first go to the Marshes, near Roanoke Island, and anchor his fleet, beginning the attack on the following morning. The officers say there will be half a day's fighting on the water, and probably a battle lasting for two days on the land. A stubborn resistance is expected, but Gen. Burnside is confident of success. In fact, when our troops are landed, with no chance of retreat by the boats, they will find themselves in a position where they must fight, even at great odds, and the officers of the expedition believe that the men will give a good account of themselves.

An editorial in the New York World of Saturday, says:

"It will be good news to the country, especially to our Irish fellow-citizens, to learn that Col. Corcoran is to be released from a Southern prison and sent home within the coming two weeks. Such, at least, is the assurance we receive from Washington.

An agent of Maine is here urging the General Government to accept the proposition of that State to fortify its coast at the expense of the State; the coast to be reimbursed by the Federal Government at the expiration of twenty years. The northern border of Maine is badly exposed, and measures are to be immediately taken to put it into a state of defence, in response to the menace of England.

We learn from private, but entirely reliable sources, that the controversy between Governor Andrew and Major General Butler has been decided by the War Department in favor of the course pursued by the Governor.

The organization of the Bay State Regiment, so called, will be given to Governor Andrew, who will appoint and commission the officers, in accordance with the provisions of the laws of the United States, under which all other Massachusetts regiments have been organized.—Transcript.

Temporal Millennium, in Facts.—The Almanack de Gotha, for 1862, has just been published. From the Almanack we take the following statistics in relation to the armies and navies of Europe:—

"Italy.—The official effective, on the 10th of June, 1861, amounted to 327,200 men, and the navy to 106 vessels, carrying 1,036 guns, and 18,000 seamen and marine troops.

France.—Land forces, war footing, 767,000 men, and 130,000 horses. Peace footing, 414,808 men and 73,850 horses. Navy, 608 vessels in construction and afloat, carrying 13,353 guns, 373 of these vessels are steamers, 56 of which are 'plated.' The navy contains on the peace footing 37,375 men, which, in time of war, may be immediately increased to 60,000. The marine troops number 26,870.

England.—Land forces, 212,773 men, and 21,904 horses. The navy consists of 893 vessels, carrying 16,411 guns. It contains 78,200 men, of whom 18,000 are marine troops. There are 9,500 coast guards.

Russia.—The land forces number 577,859 men, besides 136 regiments of cavalry, 31 battalions, and 31 batteries of irregular troops. The navy consists of 313 vessels, of which 242 are steamers, all carrying 3,831 guns. There are also 174 stationary and transport ships.

Austria.—The army contains 587,695 men, and the navy 58 steamers and 79 sailing vessels, carrying 895 guns.

Prussia.—The land forces on a peace footing number 212,649 men, and the war footing 622,866. The navy contains 34 vessels of which 26 are steamers.

Add to all these the million and a half of men in the United States, and we have a formidable series of figures, which may well shake our faith in the proximity of that millennial time when 'swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, and spears into pruning-hooks.'"—Chicago Times.

ITEMS.

The Queen, since her bereavement, has lived in the greatest retirement. Her Majesty has only one of her children as a companion at dinner. Even the King of the Belgians—near as he is in blood, and intimate as he has been with her from childhood—has not been excepted from this privacy. All the members of the royal family dine together with those relatives or connections who may be on a visit to Osborne, and each is in his turn selected to bear Her Majesty company in her private apartments.

The only living male descendant of Benedict Arnold is a grandson, Rev. Edward Arnold, who is Rector of an established church in Herefordshire, England. He is a man of great decision, and in his profession exhibits much ability and energy of character. To a recent visitor he voluntarily made known his relationship.

There is another fuel panic in Washington. The condition of the roads is such that fuel carts and wagons cannot come in from the country, and the consequence is that many of the wood dealers are asking ten and twelve dollars a cord for good oak wood.

Capt. Drew, a prisoner at Columbia, S. C., writes to his friends in Vermont, under date of Jan. 27, that the men are all well clothed and comfortably cared for, having received from the government a large lot of blankets and clothing. The health of the men is good, and they continue to receive kind treatment.

The Lowell News states that orders have been sent to Liverpool for full 50,000 bales of cotton, which is nearly a quarter of the whole stock on hand by our factory corporations.

Letters from Port Royal state that rebel emissaries are burning all the cotton in the vicinity of Hilton Head they could reach.

Washington and Prince Albert died in the same month, and on the same day of the month and about the same hour in the evening—14 December—1799 and 1861. This is a very curious coincidence.

Persons are stated to be going through Ireland swearing young men into a secret "brotherhood." The oaths are of a most treasonable character, in an English point of view, but national in the Irish sense.

Europe consumes annually thirty millions dollars worth of gold and silver for plate, jewelry and ornaments. Gold coin wastes half per cent in sixteen years' wear, and silver from two to five per cent.

During the month of December, 1861, four thousand five hundred emigrants reached Liverpool on their return to their homes. They were principally natives of Ireland.

A project is on foot in New York to introduce the Turkish bath there—a regular Constantinople affair with real imported Turks for attendants—and $25,000 have been raised for the purpose.

In the Province of Nova Scotia, as we learn by a Halifax paper, there are 13,230 hand looms, which produced 1,700,000 yards of home-spun flax and woolen cloth last year.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the Christian Publication Society, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once Five Hundred Dollars, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than any Tract Society in the country, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in Tracts, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite, and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts

Suggested by reading a notice of the death of little Charley Mayhew, in the Crisis of Jan. 22d, 1862.

"This only son of his mother, and she was a widow.—Luke 7: 12.

She was a mother and a widow too!
What other words so fraught with joy and wo?
Brief words! yet in them I can read full well
How on her path the lights and shadows fell.
I seem to see her leave that home for aye,
Where golden sunshine lingered all the day;
With a sweet, trusting faith, go forth to prove
The mighty, matchless power of woman's love!
The sacred altar she had knelt beside—
A maiden knelt—arose a cherished bride.
But how the rich bloom mantled o'er her cheek—
How her heart throbbed—of this I need not speak;
Enough, that on her young heart's altar burned
Love's purest flame, that nobly was returned.
But ah! her trial-hour came all too soon!
Dark clouds her sun o'ercast ere yet 'twas noon.
Relentless death across her threshold strode,
And yet, methinks, he signs of pity showed;
Else had not spared him who was all her joy,
Till to her heart she'd clasped this noble boy,
And heard him bless his son, ere he was pressed,
A helpless orphan, to his mother's breast.
A helpless orphan—yet all sparkling gems,
And glowing pearls, and glittering diadems,
Weighed 'gainst her child, would dust and ashes prove,
She lavished on him such a wealth of love.
Her fingers nestled in his sunny hair,
She pressed her kisses on his forehead fair,
Gazed on him lovingly, glad to descry
His father's glances beaming from his eye.
With tears of gratitude she now perceives,
Each day, fresh buds of hope unfold their leaves;
Beholds her boy to noble manhood rise,
(How perfect in his mother's loving eyes!)
With rapture sees developed, one by one,
His sire's virtues in her only son
But ah! her hour of agony drew near—
Too deep for e'en the semblance of a tear.
Again her cruel foe had drawn his dart,
And aimed it at the widow's trembling heart;
Again her all of earthly hope he slew,
And forth they now must bear him from her view.
But while the throng, with measured tread and slow,
Was moving on, One saw that widow's woe,
And, as the mournful pageant passed Him by,
Wondrous compassion kindled in His eye.
He touched the bier—its bearers, awed, stood still—
And through that weeping group there ran a thrill
Of hope, of wonder, and of glad surprise,
As, with calm brow and with uplifted eyes,
He spake the word that clove death's icy chains,
And sent the life-blood circling through his veins,
And woke the slumb'ring pulses in his breast,
Who, calm and still, was passing to his rest.
Again the flush of health was on his cheek—
His palsied tongue again had power to speak;
The light of love was in his eye, once dim,
"And to his mother He delivered him!"
* * * * *
Thou art the same as when Thy sacred feet
Pressed Juda's hills and vales in days agone;
As when that sad procession Thou didst meet,
And raise to life the widow's only son
Thou art the same—in Thy great heart of love
Lives yet a fount of tenderest sympathy;
With deep compassion from Thy home above,
Thou dost behold our helpless misery.
Look down from off thy throne, we meekly pray,
And comfort that lone, sad, and sorrowing one.
Again the monster fattens on his prey—
Again hath slain the widow's only son!
With gentlest care soo he Thou her bleeding heart,
Lead her steps softly through this world of sin;
From this fresh wound extract the poisoned dart,
And pour the oil of consolation in.
Bid her forget her weeds of widowhood—
Forget her cheerless, desolated hearth,
Forget her patient toil for others' good,
In gazing on a glory-gilded earth!
Ah! it will come! that day will surely come,
When Thou wilt slay the insatiate monster grim,
Snatch from his hateful toils the widow's son,
And to his mother will deliver him!

For the Crisis.

Hospital Rambles.—No. 3.

"CARONDELET."

"Call me early, brother, will you?" said I, on retiring to my little room, as I looked into their room to say my "good night" to Bro. and Sr. Bywater. "Where away, to-morrow, Sis?" "To Carondelet; a hard day's work before me, and must away early, so good night." How welcome to the weary is a comfortable bed. My feet were swollen with my constant walking, for this "distributing tracts" is much more easily written about, or said, than done. After a good night's rest, I was awakened by those city nuisances, screaming, "Here's your Democrat and Republican; two for five cents—all about the battle" of some place; for by that time they were under some other window. Soon a gentle knock on my door, and, "Come, Sister Henry, six o'clock!" told me that, like my little plagues, the news boys, I must "be stirring." After asking Father to protect me from evil and danger, and to bless my efforts for the poor soldier, I descended to the back parlor, where the colored servant (a slave boy hired of his master) had my coffee and rolls ready.

"Where's Missis gwine to-day?"

"Away to Carondelet, Hunter."

"'Pears like that's a mighty ways, Missis. You don't go alone, sure?"

"No, Hunter; don't you know that the Good Master says, 'I am with you always'?"

"Your boun' to go safe anyhow, 'pears like," said the pleasant fellow; "anyhow, I hope you will." "Thank you, Hunter; I shall be back all safe for my supper."

If my friends will look on their maps, they will find Carondelet some five or six miles south or a little south-west of St. Louis. Forty minutes' ride in the street cars brought me to the famous "Arsenal" grounds, then into an omnibus, into which a young soldier was vainly essaying to get. His left leg had been shot off; his crutch proved a poor substitute. "Let me help you," said I, holding open the door and taking his crutch, while he managed to get in. He belonged to the "Artillery" and [illegible]

In old Massachusetts we called the coldest season of the year, here the grass was green, and the sun shone as warm as your last days of May or first of June—open doors and windows, and singing birds. I walked briskly on, with no feeling of fear, although parties of soldiers on foot and on horse were continually passing. Excepting the gracefully raised cap and respectful bow, I received no notice, but pursued the "even tenor of my way," as suited me best.

At last, as my feet began to ask me to let them rest, I saw the Hospital come in sight. It is a magnificent building, situated on an eminence overlooking the surrounding country. A splendid grove of trees adds beauty to the site. It is called "The new House of Refuge," to distinguish it from the old one, which is situated near in an enclosure. It is under the supervision of the Catholics; the "Sisters of Charity" are the nurses; and the beautiful order, so neat and so comfortable—not a particle of dust or disorder of any kind; and here let me notice (if I have not already done so), that among the many hundreds of soldiers that I have visited, in all degrees of suffering, I have never yet heard one hasty, impatient or fretful exclamation; such a thing as an oath I have never heard in one of the Hospitals, and I have met with nothing but respectful and kind treatment. The dress of "the Sisters" is plain black, with neat striped aprons, and a huge white head dress of starched linen,—I should say a sort of cross between a bonnet and shed. The crown looks like a bonnet, but the front and sides, with their great white wings, look as much like a shed, with two piazzas, as any thing. At first sight you feel like laughing; but a glance at their kind, pleasant faces makes amends; and they are so gentle and quiet, so kind—sisters truly. The Protestant is just as kindly cared for as are the Catholics.

Everywhere my books were received with evident pleasure. One poor sick fellow took hold of my hand and drew me to him. "Sit down here and let me look at you. You look like my mother," and his eyes filled with tears at the thought of her and home. Another said, "If I had known what trouble I was bringing on my mother by enlisting, I never would have done it. If I could only tell her how sorry I am." Poor fellow! he will probably never see his mother again. Another says,

"I have been thinking as I lay here, how wicked I have been! I used to love the Lord, but have wandered from him. Will he receive me again?"

I assured him he would. When I left him he promised to lead a praying life. One poor fellow was in a raving delirium. "Mother!" said he. He was thinking of home and mother—perhaps of the clear, sweet water from the spring, or the cup of cool, sweet milk. Poor boy! no mother was there. A lady nurse in one of the St. Louis Hospitals, told me she was often called up from three to four times a night. Some of them would be dying, and they felt as though they could not die without some woman's face to look upon, and would draw her down and kiss her for their mother or wife. But I must hasten.

There is Doctor Pattee, of the brave "Kansas 1st," dressing a wound. Shall we look at it? The Dr. greeted me with a pleasant smile and bow.

"Would you like to see the ball that came from that?"

I told him I should. He took from a piece of paper a bit of lead that looked no more like a "minnie ball" than the most scraggy piece of lead you can imagine, and that was imbedded so firmly that it was all he could do to pull it out, and you could see where his instruments slipped off a number of times. He showed me another ball that was split in two on a man's jaw, one half coming out of his neck, under the collar bone, two months after, and the other half through under his tongue. "But come to my room, lady, and rest you, for you look tired, (and indeed I was, for it was near three o'clock, and my coffee and roll was all I had eaten since the day before) and I will show you something more curious yet." Now here is something for Mr. Loveland to chew on, put in his pipe and smoke.

"Here is the skull," said he, "of Joseph Nathalli, of the '1st Kansas Regt.' He was wounded in the battle of Springfield by the bursting of a bomb over his head, wounding him on the back and front of his head. It was a break in the skull at the back, but on the front the skull looked red—a spot about as large as a twenty-five cent piece. After he was wounded he walked one hundred and twenty miles to Rolla, then came on to Carondelet. He lived fifty days. All this time his brain coming through the wounds. At forty days his memory began to fail. In five days more he forgot his English, but his native tongue (Italian) he spoke fluently till the last. Walked out under the trees till the day he died, which was like the going out of a lamp. I sawed off the skull, as you see, and found the man had lived just as long as he had any brains. The brain was all gone."

Now, Mr. L., if man can think without brains, what made that man stop thinking and remembering only the want of brains? The Dr. and I conversed on the immortality of the soul [illegible]

Santa, Bro. G., on "Soul," "Spirit," "What is Man?" then at four o'clock started on my "back track"; missed the omnibus, and had the pleasant prospect of walking to St. Louis; but a good German took me in his wagon to where I met the cars; and after twelve hours' hard toil, without tasting food or drink, I was home again, having conversed with over five hundred men. Don't you think I was weary? Yes, in "well doing." Adieu. N. M. Henry.

Maine State Mission.

Dec. 15th, 1861 (Sabbath), I preached in Portland. There having been but little, if any, notice given of my appointment in the city, all the friends were not apprised of my presence, and our congregations were comparatively small, as many concluded there was to be no preaching on that day. We however had a good and free time with the friends of the cause and those who were present; and the Lord's Spirit was present with us, and our three services were profitable. In the evening I preached a short discourse to the sinner, and gave an account of some recent cases of conversion I had been permitted to witness in my labors. At the close several brethren and sisters spoke with much freedom. The day was not lost.

Dec. 17th, I attended our Conference at Vienna. The going was bad, it being neither wagoning or sleighing, and accordingly our representation at this conference was not large. The ministering brethren however were generally present,—Elds. Wellcome, Seavey, Haggett, Hanscomb, Leverton, Lombard, Reed, Dudley, and myself; all in the spirit of union and labor. This conference was signalized by much of the influence of the Holy Spirit and a revival interest in the neighborhood which has continued to this day. The first evening I preached, a person came forward to the desk whom I fancied was under concern of mind. On inquiry I ascertained that he was a backslider, and once an Advent believer. He was very serious for himself, and I exhorted him to return to Jesus and begin to pray. He promised me he would, and has since found renewed peace, and salvation has also visited his house in the conversion of his dear companion. His family altar is renewedly erected, thanks to the Lord. During the conference a young lady (the school mistress) was converted and embraced hope, who still is faithful to her Master.

On Monday evening after the conference, several of us being blockaded in by a severe snow storm, we concluded to hold an experience meeting, in which each one should give an account of the Lord's doings with our individual souls. The meeting, as Eld. Lombard remarked, was one of the most profitable he had ever attended; it lasted until a late hour, and was followed by a similar one the next evening, of like interest. One soul found peace, and other unconverted ones present were deeply convicted. Wednesday, 25th, Eld. Lombard and myself went to Rome, and on the evenings of the 26th and 27th held meetings in the "Wood school-house"—the neighborhood of Bro. Fifield, with whom we put up and shared the comforts of his home. Bro. Fifield and his companion in life have recently been converted to God and his truth. Our audiences were large and attentive to the word, and there is a prospect of much good being done in this region. The people are inquiring, as we learned in our visits and in the interest to attend meeting, and some were under conviction of sin and their need of salvation. Eld. Lombard was to return to this place. Saturday evening, 28th, I preached at Belgrade Mills to a small audience convened in a severe storm. We had a good time in speaking of the fearfully gathering storm of the nations, and those present seemed spell-bound by the truth that fearful times are at hand. I gave tracts to those present, who received them with pleasure. I wish I could distribute these little silent messengers a thousand times more freely, as the people everywhere are now desirous to read them. Never were they more so.

On Sabbath, Dec. 29th, Eld. Lombard and myself preached during the day; and were anxious to hear more upon our doctrine. Bro. Towle, Watson and Martin are the leading brethren in these parts who are with their families interested for the truth, and entertained us kindly. Monday evening, the 30th, we were at Mercer. The prejudice in this village is very great against us. We had but few out. We gave notice of a second meeting the following evening; and the school committee the next day dismissed school and set masons and carpenters to work to repair the school-house. So we provoked the people to jealousy to add to the comfort of the children; and also set them to discuss the merits of our faith and hope, and stirred up some of the citizens of the town to give the promise that a door shall be open for the publication of the truth on a future day. Bro. Watson of Rome came, urging my return immediately to that place to hold a series of meetings; but such were my arrangements that I could not then comply, as I was under special engagement at Vienna and Wayne. I however gave promise to return soon and hold a protracted meeting at Rome.

Jan. 1st, 1862, New-Year's day, on my return to Vienna, Eld. Lombard and myself, by a previous invitation, took dinner with Eld. Tibbetts of Rome. Bro. Fifield and wife also enjoyed this season of social and hospitable converse with this brother of "the Christian Band." Eld. Tibbetts is convinced upon some of the doctrines of our faith, and is inquiring in regard to others. May the Lord bless and further enlighten this good brother of the Christian Connection. Our interview was pleasant and profitable. On the evening of Jan. 1st, I preached at Vienna, Bro. Seavey's neighborhood, and at the close three persons desired prayers. On another invitation given by Eld. Seavey, that all should arise who meant to live differently the present year than in the past, all but two, I think, arose! It was a solemn and good time. The three that first arose came forward, prayers were offered for them, and they are now happy in a Savior's love. The interest had increased in this place since the conference, and there had been one or more remarkable conversions of persons hardened in sin, but who were now joyful in hope and exhorting neighbors and friends to repentance.

Jan. 3d I visited Wayne. At North Wayne, calling on Bro. Young with whom I dined, I visited the scythe establishment and found it converted into a manufactory of sabres for the army! which brought forcibly to my mind Joel's prophecy, "Prepare war!" It was solemn to stand and reflect upon the use of these destructive weapons, and the fulfillment of the Scriptures in the manufacture of such deadly hostile implements as are being prepared in our day. Bro. Young informed me that the door was open here for the warning of the people and the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom, and I shall one day improve it.

The 3d and 4th inst. I preached in school-houses in South Wayne. The nights were tedious cold, and our audiences were not large. A Mr. Sawyer, with whom I had formed an acquaintance through friends from Boston, had informed me, if I would give him notice of a Sabbath in which I could preach in W. he would see that I had the Free-Will Baptist church to occupy. So I had written him that I would be in W. Jan. 5th. He was, however, unexpectedly refused by the committee the use of the house. Though not a believer in our faith, nor having any interest save in me as a recommended friend, he wished me to visit on Saturday, the 4th, the clergyman of the Calvinist Baptist denomination, to see if an opening could not be obtained there. On visiting this minister and introducing the object of our visit, he seemed to have no special desire for me to occupy the desk. His wife however seemed more inclined and anxious to have the people hear on the subject of the Lord's coming. After further consultation the pastor remarked that he would abide by and coincide with the opinion of Dea. W. of his church, and if we would see him and obtain his consent for the occupancy of the house and pulpit the whole or a part of the day, he would agree with him in whatever decision he should make. We therefore with some degree of hope visited the Deacon; but when we came to tell the object of our call, however complacent the Deacon before, he now seemed much changed and with a decisive "No!" gave us at once to understand his mind. Seeing the Deacon was so crusty and short, I thought I would have a little pleasant sparring with him, and I inquired,

"Do you not know, Deacon, that the Jewish church rejected the first advent of Jesus Christ?"

"Well, a part of them did."

"But do you not know that the majority of them did? And the teachers and those in authority?"

"Hem,—yes."

"Well, Deacon, have you not read the Bible enough to know that the christian church will stumble at the same stumbling-stone, and reject the second advent of the Savior and King?"

"I don't know that they will—there may be a few who will."

"But if you have read your Bible critically, Deacon, you will learn that the majority will."

"Well, we don't know anything about the time of His coming, and are not to know."

"But for what was the Jewish church rejected? Was it not because they knew not the time of their visitation?"

"Yes," says the Deacon hesitatingly.

"And are you not in danger of being rejected for the same, and the christian church at large?" He thought not. "Well, Deacon, your minister gives his consent for me to occupy his pulpit. If you are of the committee of the house, will you give your consent for the use of the house? Now it all rests with you. Your consent will open the house, your refusal will close it. There are people in this place who want to hear. Now what's your decision?"

"My decision is, that the house cannot be opened."

"Very well. But, Deacon, don't you know that the Scribes and Pharisees anciently sat in Moses' seat, and held the key of knowledge, and would not go into the kingdom themselves, nor allow those who would to enter? And now don't you see that you are doing the same in respect to the great and glorious doctrine of the Lord's second return to establish that kingdom? Martin Luther said that when this doctrine should be announced to the churches and world, that the houses of worship would be closed against it, and those warning the people would be compelled to publish it in the streets and lanes of the city, high-ways and by-ways, stables, etc., and we find his prediction about true. Good-bye, sir; I should be glad to converse more with you, but my time will not admit."

"Good-bye, sir, I don't know that any further interview would enlighten us," said the Deacon, as we parted in good spirit, with no hate, I think, in either breast toward each other for this sharp, brief controversy.

On the Sabbath, therefore, I occupied a school-house in the neighboring region, and had a good season with those inclined to come out and listen to the truth. I am informed that many in W. and vicinity are dissatisfied with this exclusiveness and decision of the committee of these two churches; and individual members of the churches, and some pew-holders have informed me that if I will give an appointment, with ten days' notice, I shall have the privilege of occupying either church. I however shall wait a little, till I can see the Lord directing—with no disposition to press the consideration of these most important themes we advocate beyond prudence. My thanks are due to Messrs. Sawyer, Roberts, Bro. Bartlett and others of Wayne, for their kindness to me.

Monday, Jan. 6th. At home and find my family in usual health. The 9th to 14th attended the conference at Hollis, tarrying two days after, and holding meetings on Monday and Tuesday evenings. This conference was held in the Methodist church, through the christian liberality of the resident minister, Mr. Perrin, and the church. The people in the region were busily engaged in improving the snow and good going, in getting out lumber and wood from the forests, so that we had not a large attendance of the citizens until Sabbath; and then it was stormy, and prevented an overflowing house, as we calculated. A good audience, however, was present during the day. This conference will leave a healthy and vigorous influence behind. Bro. Wm. Mitchell and wife, and myself and wife, enjoyed the christian hospitality of Mr. Perrin at his residence on Sunday afternoon, with whom we took tea and conversed upon the reasons of our hope. Mr. P. is inquiring, and convinced upon some doctrines of our faith. On Monday I again enjoyed an interview with Mr. Perrin, and he was present at my meetings each evening. His wife is much afflicted with a broken limb, etc. May the Lord bless our brother in Christ with light and knowledge, and fidelity and boldness in the truth of the "coming One," and give him a reward with the "faithful servants" who shall be found giving "meat in due season."

The 15th I received a gratifying letter from Dr. Eaton of Rockport in reference to the result of our meetings in that place last fall. The Lord is carrying on his work there among ministers and people. By request of Bro. Robinson of Cape Elizabeth, I went this day to hold a series of meetings on the Cape. The evenings of 15th and 16th we had a good attendance, and the people seemed earnest to hear. But a storm set in, blocking us up for the rest of the week, and we were compelled to abandon our meetings. The friends thought, had it been pleasant on the Lord's day, the Methodist chapel, a beautiful structure, would have been filled with hearers of the word. The Lord overrules all, and we hope yet to warn this people and preach to them the "word of the kingdom." I visited and distributed some tracts from house to house. They are left on the Cape without a shepherd. The Congregational minister has gone, and the Methodist clergyman has joined the army. Many of the people think this inconsistent, and so they are left to famish for the bread of life, or one to break it unto them. I wish some judicious, good brother would visit the Cape before I can spare the time, and hold some meetings there. I shall visit that destitute region soon again. Bro. Robinson and family kindly entertained me, and helped me on my way after a godly sort. I was glad to become acquainted with so good and kind a brother and his family. He, with Bro. Stubbs and one or two sisters, constitute all the believers in our faith on the Cape. The Lord's day being so stormy, by invitation I spent most of it with an influential and prominent citizen and resident of the Cape, Mr. Hasty, and had a pleasant interview and chat with him and his companion and Bro. Stubbs during the day, upon our prominent doctrines, faith and hope, and personal religion, as Mr. H. and his wife are both unconverted persons. I left them tracts to read, having joined in the reading of the Scriptures and in prayer, and left them in the hope that the day is not far distant when they shall love and serve the Lord their Master, and secure a mansion and home in a more happy and heavenly clime.

I can record that the Lord is good, and that his abounding mercy is with me, and still aiding me in my mission and work, for which I praise him.

To the "Try Company."

Perhaps, young friends, you would like to hear something about the little boys and girls in Boston. I will give you a brief account of yesterday's (Sabbath) experience. In the forenoon I attended a Mission Sabbath School at the Tremont Temple. Most of the children attending this school are gathered from families not connected with any church or society except the Catholics. The exercises are reading the Scriptures in concert, singing, etc. At noon I attended the Sabbath School connected with the Tremont Temple church. This school numbers about two hundred. At the close of the school I found two little boys getting names to a paper containing a constitution of a society called the "Band of Hope." The pledge is abstinence from intoxicating liquor and tobacco, also to refrain from taking the name of God in vain, keeping the Sabbath day holy, etc. They will have a meeting soon, and I will let you know how the society prospers. At six o'clock I attended the Sabbath School concert of this school, which is held every month; the exercises of which are repeating portions of Scripture, hymns, etc., by the children, singing, short addresses by the teachers and others. A hymn was sung by some little boys and girls, entitled "Marching Along." There was a poem repeated by a little girl respecting the Last Supper. Also a composition by a little boy was read respecting the birth of Christ. After this, I attended another mission concert in the large hall of the Temple. This room will accommodate twenty-two hundred persons. It was nearly full. The exercises were singing by the children, declamation upon various subjects, addresses, etc. This Mission is under the direction of Henry Morgan, Methodist missionary. D. N. Smith.

Answers to Questions.

(See Crisis Jan. 15th.)

Question 1st. Rechabites. Jer. 35: 5, 6,—"And I set before the sons of the house of Rechabites, pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, drink ye wine. But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab, our father, commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye nor your sons forever."

2. Gen. 4: 21, 22.—"And his brother's name was Jubal: he was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. And Zillah, she also bare Jubal-cain, an instructer of every artificer in brass and iron."

3. The resurrection. John 5: 28, 29,—"Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

4. Gen. 5: 27,—"And all the days of Methuselah were nine hundred sixty and nine years: and he died."

5. James 1: 23, 24,—"For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: for he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was."

Henrietta Muhlio, aged ten years.

Another sends the following answers to the same questions:—

1. Rechabites.
2. The Levites; for we read in 1 Chron. 9: 33,—"And these are the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers were free: for they were employed in that work day and night."
3. At the judgment. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27.
4. Methuselah.
5. The sky; for we read in Job 37: 18,—"Hast thou with him spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking glass?"

Now I hope that a good number of little children like myself will join the "try company"; not only try to read and answer questions from the Bible, but try to understand it, and follow the example of our dear Savior Jesus Christ, who died on Calvary's Mount for our sins, that we might have eternal life and reign with him forever. O! had we not ought to love and obey such a Savior?

I have been an invalid, Bro. Grant, for over a year, and hope that you will pray for me, that I may prove faithful, and be gathered in the everlasting kingdom with the saints to praise the great Redeemer forever. A. L. Nichols.

Exeter, N. H.

For the Crisis.

Bro. Grant:—I send a candidate for Bro. Smith's proposed "Try Company." The idea gratifies the children much. While writing, I may be permitted to say that we have in connection with our little church in this place, a Sunday school, which though small is very interesting. They are indeed already a "Try Company." A subject is announced each Lord's day, and each scholar tries to repeat a verse of Scripture the next Lord's day containing that subject. Things new and old are brought out from [illegible] you. So well pleased are they with their Home company, I presume many of them will hasten to join Bro. Smith's general encampment at the Crisis office. I will let one of them speak for himself. M. V. C.

Danielsonville, Jan. 21st, 1862.

Bro. Grant:—I should like to join the "Try Company" that D. N. Smith proposed. I think it is a very good plan.

You will find the answer to the first question that was asked in the Crisis week before last in Jer. 35: 5, 6. Second question in Gen. 4: 21, 22. Third question in Rev. 11: 18, and 22: 12. Fourth question in Gen. 5: 27. Fifth question in James 1: 22, 23, 24.

I should like to ask the "Try Company," What was the name of Moses' father?

Who hid one hundred prophets by fifty in a cave and fed them on bread and water?

If the righteous be scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?

Martin L. Howard.

For the Crisis.

Elder Grant:—As friend Smith proposes the formation of a "Try Company," I would like to be one of them, and will do what I can to get others to join. I am not very large, and as I like the company of children, I can easily become as one of them, in order to get them interested.

The thing which I want most is, to be a humble christian, that I may be blest of God, and meet my dear departed father where sickness and death shall [illegible].

Answer to question 1st. The ancient Egyptians drank no wine.

2. David's family were the most musical.

3. The righteous will receive their reward when Paul does his: at the coming of Christ.

I wish to ask these questions:

Who are to be chased out of the world?

Who was sold for a pair of shoes?

How many feet high was Goliah?

What kind of a bedstead did Og the King of Bashan lie upon?

Bath, N. H. Louisa H. Collins.

For the Crisis.

Dear Children:—I wish to say a few words to you. First, I think we ought to be thankful to somebody for such a medium of communication as the press. There are multitudes to whom we can communicate our thoughts and wishes whom we shall probably never see in this present life, and were it not for this mode of conversation should not know they were in being. And as this is the most familiar mode of talking we can enjoy, let us be sociable. And what subject shall interest our thoughts? Methinks I hear a response from many youthful hearts saying, "The Kingdom of God, and an inheritance in it, is the most important subject that can engage the attention of youth or age." To ensure an inheritance therein, it is necessary we should love God with all our hearts, and love his Son and his appearing; which it is to hoped every little boy and girl will try to do.

And now, little children, until we have another conversation, try to keep your thoughts on God, and your lips from speaking guile.

Question. Where in the Bible is the first prophecy of Christ, and by whom was it made? D. N. Smith.

For the Crisis.

Questions.—1. In what part of the Bible do we find an account of the first Bible class?

2. In what part of the Bible is there an account of a battle, in which there were ten thousand men killed and not one escaped?

3. Who was the first tent-maker?

4. Who is the oldest man now living?

☞ Talk to little boys and girls? Yes, you should, always, everywhere, in the house or out of it—in the street or out of it. Tell them that childhood is the time to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness—to commence the good fight of faith.—Golden Rule.

Humility.

Grant me, Savior, sweet submission,
Make me like the humble rill,
That in patience waits fruition,
Hasting on its loving mission,
Down the parched and barren hill.

Let it be my great ambition,
Not o'er limits marked to swell,
Not that I possess a mission,
Or so many plants can freshen,
But the little have done well.

Then while I may lift in pity,
Though it be the smallest blade,
Let me find content in duty,
Clothing wither'd stems with beauty,
Waking flowers that never fade.

While my tiny waters mirror
One sweet star, 'tis all I crave;
Star of hope! oh! still beam o'er me,
'Till my Savior comes in glory,
Or I find a peaceful grave.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER SEVEN.

It is clearly shown in the gospel that Christ never intended to enter co-partnership with the rulers of earth, nor expected to convert the nations to himself and his government. Although he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," and that the Father had "given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man," he also said, "And ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." He knew the hearts of men. He had full knowledge that the governments of earth were wicked, basely corrupt, and would remain so until the time of his second advent, and the resurrection of the dead, when the nations must be miserably destroyed for their rebellion against the God of heaven. Jer. 25, Ezk. 38, Dan. 7, Rev. 11 and 18.

The general character of human governments, notwithstanding all their virtues, is most graphically described by the symbols of beasts of prey, and venomous serpents, as in Dan. 7, Rev. 12, 13, 17. These descriptions declare that they continue until the judgment. The disciples understood that he would take the dominion promised him, and begin his reign then; so they attempted to crown him king, "but he departed from them." When ascending up to Jerusalem, he sought to correct their ideas of his kingdom by saying, "A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return."—Luke 19. On another occasion, when about to be delivered to the mob for crucifixion, he said to Pilate, "My kingdom is not of this world: if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." John 19: 36. Now with all this evidence that christians "are not of this world," even as their Master is not of it,—that the laws of Christ have no connection nor agreement with those of men, and they have pledged allegiance to Christ,—that the kingdom of which they are members is not here, but "in the world to come," on the new earth,—how can christians be "living as pilgrims and strangers," enjoying God's favor and Christ's fellowship, while members of the governments (with all their interests involved) of men, and fighting with murderous wrath their enemies, violating every great principle of Christ's law? As for the men of this world, whose kingdom is here, we should expect them to fight. It is a part of their law; all the interests they have are in this world. Their affections are on this world. Their rulers and demagogues are their teachers. They are pledged to defend their laws, for, forgetting or neglecting God's law they have aided in making laws to govern themselves; these are the only protectorates they know. But christians have "one lawgiver," "one Master, even Christ." They are to obey him, and if in doing so they lose their lives, they are promised that they "shall save them unto life eternal."

But some may urge, Did not the children of Israel fight? Did not David fight, and many other good men? Yes, and did so by the Lord's direction. That is no argument that you should do so. Abram came from the land of his fathers, and dwelt in Canaan, offered his son as a sacrifice to God. Moses returned to Egypt and pleaded with its ruler, wrought miracles, and led out the host of slaves from thence. David slew the Philistine giant with the sling. Israel captured Jericho with rams' horns. But will any of you christians undertake such exploits without God's special direction? Then why fight for the commands and statutes of men, directly against God's commands? In all things which do not conflict with Christ's law, we should be careful to observe all human law in the places of our sojourn; not as our law, or our government, but as patterns of good works, with all fidelity. Yet when required to act a part which is in conflict with our Master's law, we will do as the apostles and early christians did—"obey God rather than men." God is better and stronger than men, and "is to be had in reverence of all them that fear him."

While we have no ill will towards men, but will do them all the good we can, we will not forget that we are only to "fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life." We will remember in times of war, as well as in times of peace, that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds." We will remember that Christ rebuked Peter for using the sword, after giving him an opportunity to act out human nature, and told him, "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." We will remember to "be subject to the powers that be,"—that "the powers that be are ordained of God" for purposes before stated; and while we refuse to obey all their statute laws, we will passively be subject to their penalties, obey God, and receive eternal life.

Divine Aid.

We need the assistance of the Spirit of God. It will be in vain for us to strive against temptation unless we are clothed upon with divine power. The strongest intellect and will may not be sufficient for these things. The purposes of man to overcome evil and walk in a path of rectitude and fulfill the commandments of Christ, without the assistance of the Holy Ghost, will be futile and unavailing. How apt man is to trust in his own strength! How he will struggle and toil and throw all his energy and strength, ingenuity and executiveness into action, to work out a salvation of his own! What checking of passions and bridling of tongue and exercise of mental government to bring one's self into subjection to the commandments of Christ! But the wisdom of human reason and the decision of human will combined, are inadequate to the work of bringing ourselves into subjection to the will of God. We cannot transform ourselves into the elements of the divine nature. But we must become partakers of the divine nature before we can successfully overcome temptation and keep ourselves pure and unspotted from the world. Our sinful, perverted natures cannot overcome their own evil tendencies and desires. And although the motive and the will may be good, like Paul under the law, "When I would do good, evil is present with me." And even if works could be performed which are morally perfect, they might not be the works of God, for "the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God."—1 Cor. 2: 11. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." If the carnal mind is at enmity with God, then it cannot bring itself into cheerful and acceptable obedience to the commandments of the gospel. And how many have been weeks and months, and even years, under the conviction of sin, striving to moralize themselves into holiness of heart, and as a result have waded through trial and sorrow, heart-sickness, agony and tears, rising for prayers once a week or fortnight, and finding no relief whatever.

The heart is too proud to humble itself entirely to the will of God. It wants to have its own way, and that is never God's way. Like Naaman, after his leprosy had been healed and he had resolved to "offer neither offering nor sacrifice to other gods but unto the Lord" (2 Kings 5: 17), he asked to be pardoned for supporting his master when he kneeled down to worship Rimmon the heathen god of Syria. Although his resolution was good, and his joy great for his own marvelous cure, and his love warm towards the Lord on that account, yet he loved his reputation so much better than he did his God, that he would not leave the honor of being the servant of a king, to forsake the worship of idols and worship the true and the living God. He wanted to serve God, but in his own way. Many are like Naaman, but never go in peace. It requires a complete sacrifice of soul, body and spirit, of wealth, reputation and human pleasures, to get into a position where God can govern us by the Holy Ghost and we can become partakers of the divine nature, and have the Spirit of God in which to crucify the old man and his deeds, and have love unfeigned to dwell richly and abidingly in our hearts. With that Spirit to help us, we can overcome the vile aspirations of sin in our own natures. Our wandering imaginations and corrupt desires can be brought into subjection to the mind of the Spirit. And the "Spirit itself helpeth our infirmities" and teaches us what we ought to pray for, "and maketh intercession for us with groaning which cannot be uttered." Rom 8: 26.

Then let the sin-sick cast their burden upon Christ. Consider your own strength perfect weakness, as it is, and pray to God for the assistance of his Spirit. Think not that Christ will cast you away comfortless. Think not that he will overlook the simple, honest petition. He will hear and answer. "Ask, and ye shall receive; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Then come to Christ; not in your own strength, but in the strength of God; not in your own righteousness, but in your filth and sin and degradation, and Christ will give you robes of righteousness instead. There is no need of wading weeks through bitter heart-anguish, to find Christ and forgiveness of sin. He is near to every one of you. The moment we will throw ourselves upon the mercy of Christ by forsaking all our sinful gratifications here, we shall feel the justification of the spirit of Christ. Our sins will be washed away; our consciences made void of offence towards God and towards man. This is not necessarily the work of weeks and months, but may be the work of a moment. It is the work of Christ. It is accomplished by God's Spirit witnessing with our spirits that we are his children. It is the great favor of God towards lost, wretched, death-doomed mortals. And if we receive not the pardoning grace of God it is not because he is unwilling to forgive our sins, but because we are unwilling to submit ourselves to be forgiven. He invites us to come. His mercy pleads with us. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." But we must come by the way of the cross, by the assistance of his Spirit, denying ourselves, taking up our cross and following him. And he who will forsake all earthly and sensual gratifications, and plunge into the waters of salvation, shall safely arrive on the shore of immortality.

Human Ghostology.—No. 7.

VIII. A KINGDOM OF GHOSTS. When the position is taken that a ghost-man leaves the body at death, it becomes necessary to assume the existence of a kingdom or home for its reception. But inspiration informs us that the time of our entrance into glory is at the coming of Christ; "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, THEN shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 4. When are we to enter glory? Not at death, but when Christ shall appear. Peter also remarks, "When the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—1 Pet. 5: 4. Not at death, but at the appearing of the chief Shepherd. Christ likewise informs us when the saints are to inherit the kingdom prepared for them; "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: . . . THEN shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 25: 31, 34. Not at the hour of death, but at the revelation of Christ. Not until the coming of Jesus are we to enter glory, wear the crown of glory, and inherit the promised kingdom; hence, all this talk about going to a kingdom of glory at death, is in oppositon to the plan of Jehovah.

Moreover, the kingdom which the saints are to "inherit," is not a kingdom which was prepared from the foundation of heaven, or from before the foundation of the world, but "from the foundation of the world." That kingdom is now under the curse, and under the dominion of the "god of this world," who "rules in the hearts of the children of disobedience;" but it is ultimately to be redeemed; hence, Paul speaks of "the redemption of the purchased possession." [Eph. 1: 14.] Christ not only purchased salvation for his people, by his death upon the cross, but he also purchased a "possession," or a home for them; and that possession is one which needs to be redeemed. Surely heaven does not stand in need of "redemption," therefore it cannot be the possession which Christ has purchased as a home for his people. But "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," now groaning beneath the curse, and under the polluting tread of the enemy of righteousness, needs "redemption." It is to be redeemed, firstly, from the possession of its present occupants. Said Christ, "Many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."—Matt. 8: 11, 12. The "children," or previous residents of the kingdom which the saints are to inherit, are to be "cast out." Was that threat made against heaven above? Are the angels to be "cast out into outer darkness?" No! But the present wicked "children" or occupants of "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," will be disinherited when the King of glory comes to gather his saints.

Again: "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. THEN shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 41-43. The kingdom in which the saints are to shine forth, is one out of which workers of iniquity and evil doers are to be gathered. Are there any that work iniquity or do evil in heaven above? No. But there are multitudes of them in the kingdom "prepared from the foundation of the world," which is now a theatre of sin in all of its forms and phases.

Christ declares to the Jews, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."—Matt. 21: 43. Certainly a kingdom above the skies is not to be taken from its possessors. Then what kingdom is meant? Let us read the context. "There was a certain householder which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-press in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country; and when the time of fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. And his husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another. Again, he sent other servants, more than the first: and they did unto them likewise. But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son. But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance. And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard and slew him. When the Lord therefore of the vineyard COMETH, what will he do unto those husbandmen? They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons." Jesus replies, "Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." When? "When the Lord of the vineyard cometh." This is the great truth here illustrated. Ever and anon, God has been sending messengers with messages of mercy to the world. The messages have been spurned, and the messengers ill treated. Still God has continued to send, and the messengers and messages have again been treated with contempt. Finally, God sends his Son. They crucify him. But "when the Lord of the vineyard cometh," the "kingdom of God" ["the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world,"] shall be taken from them, and be "given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," even to a holy nation who now sleep in dusty beds, "a nation (that shall) be born at once," at the sound of the trump of God. Then "the kingdoms of this world" will have "become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." Rev. 11: 15. Then the saints "shall reign on the earth." Rev. 5: 10. Then "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom ☞UNDER☜ the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High. Dan. 7: 27. Then "the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever." Dan. 7: 18.

The "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world, which the saints are to receive for their home, is to be redeemed from the curse. It now presents the appearance of a broken mirror, with some lovely portions of territory, interspersed with its ragged hill and mountains, its boiling volcanoes, and dismal swamps. But it is to be cast into Jehovah's refining crucible, and come out refined, renovated, beautified, and lovely. Says Peter; "The heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment . . . the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat . . . nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a NEW EARTH wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter 3: 7. 10, 13. On the other side of the fiery deluge, earth will wear its Eden dress, and forever be resonant with the sweet songs of the saved. Thus the "purchased possession" will be redeemed, not only from the sway of satan and his emissaries, but also from the deplorable effects of the fall and the watery deluge, as well as from the results of earthquakes and volcanoes which have disfigured the once lovely countenance of our world. The saved of all ages will be there, not as ghost-men, but as real men. The saints who now slumber in their beds of death will be there, with smiles of felicity on their immortal faces. The living saints, too, will be among them, as real beings, forever beyond the reach of death, "equal to the angels," having their vile bodies changed and fashioned like Christ's glorious body." Thrice glorious kingdom of immortal ones! How unlike a kingdom of ghost-men—a realm of immateriality, inhabited by beings of immateriality! Nonentity multiplied by nonentity, only amounts to nonentity!!! A kingdom with nothing for its territory, with beings made of nothing for its subjects, has no charms for me. I love to contemplate a time when I shall be a real, undying being, with a real home to live in, with real companions to converse with, and real scenes to attract my attention. It would be a punishment, rather than a consolation to me, to tell me that I must be turned into an immaterial ghost, and be sent off to some ghost region.

Lines.

Weary of gloom and weary of tears,
Weary of mourning o'er wasted years,
Tired of false and mocking smiles,
The outside show of deserts wild;
Weary of words that are oft untrue,
The fettering bands of the many o'er few;
Tired of the clamor and bustle of war,
Of the glory that hides where the dying are;
Sick of the crimes that keep us back
From walking in the narrow track,
The sneering scoffs of wicked men,
Who fain would have us lost with them
Tired of the ghastly stream of pride,
That sweeps o'er hearts with a lava tide,
Distilling o'er all its fatal breath,
And blinding our eyes till we stalk on death!
Weary of seeing the loved go down
To the lonely shades of the darkened tomb;
Weary of weeping o'er pain and grief,
Fainting and longing, yet no relief;
Weary of hearing the endless cries
Of fettered slaves ascend the skies,—
The wild laments of the sunny land,
Rising from many a mournful band,
Weary of waiting,—oh, Savior, return!
And take us to rest in the kingdom at home!

For the Crisis.

Which is Right?

In a late sermon of Mr. Beecher's, published in the Independent, some assertions are made which we propose to compare with Scripture, and in so doing present the above inquiry. His text was from Matt. 24: 44,—"Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." The context is also quoted—"Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come," etc. The whole scope of his discourse is relative to death. He first dwells upon the natural love of life, assuring us that there is an instinctive dread of death, which he avers has been greatly increased by wrong sentiments which have been diffused among men; that it has ever been represented as something gloomy and forbidding. He relates his own experience when a child—what deep gloom overshadowed him at the funeral of a little brother. He then proceeds to speak of the glories appertaining to that which is so dreaded by the human family—asserting that the act of dying is often attended with little or no pain. Moreover, that the christian is immediately introduced into the society of heaven, entering upon a glorious immortality; and closes by exhorting his hearers to watch, and be ready, because the Son of man (that is Death) might come at any moment.

It is not my intention to enter into a full review of this sermon, but I wish, as before expressed, to compare a few of its more striking points with the plain language of the Bible. And first as to the general theme of the discourse. Does the text suggest it? Is there one allusion made to death, either in the text, context, or any part of the chapter from which it is taken? After a careful reading, I find nothing, unless it be an allusion to those that were destroyed in the time of the flood; or the prophecy respecting the persecution of christians in a particular age of the world. But, the purport of the whole seems to be, Christ's answer to his disciples of the following inquiry, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and the end of the world, or age?" Prophecies to be fulfilled previous to that event, are very definitely stated, as also something relating to the destruction of Jerusalem. He tells them that there should be "false Christ's, and false prophets, "who should "deceive, if possible, the very elect," but, that all would know when the Son of man came; for it should be as the "lightning that shineth from the east, even unto the west"—as distinct and visible. But, as the "day and hour" of that moment us and thrilling event were not given, the language of the text seemed truly appropriate. How then the idea of death can be obtained from such a chapter is, to my own mind, a great mystery. THE SECOND ADVENT OF THE SON OF GOD, IN POWER AND GLORY, REPRESENTED AS MEANING THE DEATH OF EVERY INDIVIDUAL CHRISTIAN!

Again, Mr. B. asserts that "dying is entering upon immortality." Did the apostle Paul so understand it? Look at his testimony in 2 Tim. 4: 6-8,—"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." Also his letter to the Colossians, 3: 4,—"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Many other texts might be furnished upon this point, but we wish to be brief.

Another assertion, and one perhaps the most startling in the sermon, is this—"The King of Death is the Lord Jesus Christ!" What! such a sentiment uttered as a truth of holy writ? Let us compare it for a moment with express scriptures. In Heb. 2: 14, 15, it is written—"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, THAT IS, THE DEVIL; and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Who then is king of death? Again, 1 Cor. 15: 26,—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." A king verily hath power over his subjects. And is there not proof in the above that the god of this world hath such power over death. And is not the same idea implied in the language of God to Satan in regard to Job?—"Behold he is in thy hand, but save his life." Now we read of Christ as King of saints, King of kings, and King of glory; but where between the lids of the Bible do we find it said that he is King of Death? Which is right?

Once more Mr. B. says, "Why is it not as easy to think of death as a golden gate, as to think of it as a murky gate?" Well, why? Does the Bible represent it as a golden gate? True we have been taught to sing—

"Death is the gate to endless joy;"

but is that true? Ah! what was the matter with that good old prophet, Hezekiah? When brought upon a sick bed, within sight of the "golden gate," he seemed to draw back, and wept sore, and prayed earnestly that he might not yet enter; bringing for a plea that he had walked before the Lord in truth, with a perfect heart, and had done that which was good in his sight. And the Lord heard his prayer, and promised that he should not enter the "golden gate" for fifteen years! And how did he receive such a message? Read the 38th chapter of Isaiah and see. Praise to God seems to inspire his heart, and break forth from his lips. Is this consistent, according to Mr. B.'s theology upon this point? To be filled with praise that he was kept from entering the "golden gate" to immortality? We do not find the mention of immortality, or glory, in his language, but the grave was the subject of his thoughts. "For the grave," said he, "cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee. The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day." If "death" were indeed the "gate to endless joy," why, we would ask, would not so good a man as Hezekiah have had such a view of it?

In conclusion, let us inquire, if there is not abundant testimony in the Scriptures to prove that the resurrection is the gate to immortality and glory; and consequently is it not a perversion to put Death in the place of it? Is it not giving the glory to that which is clearly represented as an enemy, bringing gloom to the inhabitants of the earth, but which is finally to be destroyed by Him who came for the very purpose of "abolishing death," and bringing to light life and immortality through the gospel?

For the Crisis.

Letter from Prof. Hudson.

It is so long since I have reported myself to the readers of the Crisis that some of them may think me estranged. But I have not forgotten them. And if any apology is required for my long neglect, I may say that my day's work is usually ended at eight or nine o'clock in the evening, and I find little time for letters. I read precious few books. I am struggling to get so equal with my creditors that I can honestly enjoy leisure, until then I shall promise to write very little.

Other articles in the Crisis have reported me at Strawberry Point, and at Cascade, Iowa. From Cascade I went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, to visit a sister. A ride on the Mississippi I think worth almost as much, for sight seeing, as a visit to Niagara. At M. I met Bro. Berick, on his way to preach the gospel "in the regions beyond," and it was pleasant indeed to see and hear from "down East." I made a visit to Excelsior, twenty miles west of M., where is the germ of a college, also a water-cure establishment, and where I met a classmate of over twenty years ago. At the water-cure I found a son of an English clergyman—London, gone to the verge of civilization in quest of health. Returning I stopped at St. Paul, Hastings, Red Wing, Lake City, and Winona, finding friends or old acquaintances in each place. I preached only at Lake City and its neighbor Florence, where I found good friends and namesakes, with whom my visit to Maiden's Rock will not soon be forgotten.

Arrived at La Crosse, Wisconsin, Nov. 6th, and spent a week with friends. Part of my time here was devoted to a very able work by a German divine, which I had just received, in support of the doctrine of Life only through Christ. The readers of the Crisis will hear from it in other columns. Visited in Wisconsin, Sparta, Lisbon, Portage, Cambria (two hours here of very liberal patronage from the Welsh,) Randolph, Fox Lake, Beaver Dam, Horicon, Waupun, Ripon, Berlin, Eureka, Waukan, Ormo, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Juneau, Watertown, Waterloo, Hanchettville, Madison, Janesville, Beloit, and Clinton. Was invited to preach by five different orthodox ministers, and in two of their pulpits gave the argument for Life in Christ, apparently to good effect. It does no good to take a congregation by surprise with any doctrine, or to compel them to hear what they have regarded with aversion. Their confidence, at least, must be secured. Much also depends on the custom of the pastor in inviting the hearing of doctrinal variety from his pulpit.

Leaving Wisconsin I spent a few days at Harvard, only just before the death of our dear Bro. Howell. He was too feeble to talk. There seemed a bare possibility of his recovery, but it was a hope against hope. The painful suspense between life and death is ended for him, and he rests from his labors. The hope of his bereaved friends is in Christ, the Lord of Life. Leaving Harvard I stopped at Woodstock, Crystal Lake, Draton, Elk Grove, Chicago, going thence to Sycamore. In Elk Grove I had preached several months, some eight years ago. Lectured at Draton, close by, and found some of my old hearers not afraid to hear me now.

In Sycamore I had preached over four years. Have just now spent there four weeks, visiting, lecturing, and selling books to the amount of about forty dollars. Some of my former hearers are settled in the faith of an End of Evil, and not a few others say that is no heresy. I hope, after a few months, to be beyond the necessity of carrying the carpet-bag. But I find no other way of paying my debts. I have preached almost every Sunday for eight months past. I am willing that orthodox congregations should be welcome to my talk, for the tolerance they grant. And I find heterodox congregations often too poor. So if I have received a benefit but twice during this period, I shall not complain. I simply ask to be excused for selling books.

I go next week to Chicago, expecting to lecture there. If there is any interest I may report.

☞ The Lord careth for us. He knows our wants, and has promised to supply them; our foes, and will deliver us from them; our fears, and will make us ashamed of them. He is thy Father. His love is infinite. Cast then thy cares upon him. Tell all thy desires, fears and troubles to him; and then in the confidence of faith expect him to fulfill his word, and act a parent's part. Bless him for all he has given, for all he has promised; plead with him for all you may need; but never for one moment distrust him.

For the Crisis.

"Make to yourselves Friends."

"Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."—Luke 16:9.

This scripture has, to my mind, ever been one of the most obscure portions of Holy Writ. I have often sought in vain for light upon it. In answer to many prayers, I think I can now see "men as trees walking," at least. For the benefit of our family circle, which gathers around the Crisis from week to week, I will now endeavor to give what light I have, if indeed it be light.

The lesson contained in these words is drawn from the parable of the unfaithful steward, who, upon being notified of his dismissal on account of his prodigality, resolved to make to himself friends who would receive him into their houses, by enriching them with his lord's wealth which he still held in his possession. When the steward came before his lord to render his account, the fraud was doubtless detected, but his generous lord, withholding deserved reproof, commends him for his shrewdness, "because he had done wisely" according to the wisdom of this world, as Jesus also intimates. He had some worldly forethought. He was just then "a prudent man," who foresaw an impending evil and sought to hide himself. Having by this parable thus clearly illustrated to his disciples that trait in human nature so frequently manifest in the transactions of life, Jesus, in the passage now under consideration, enjoins upon them the observance and application of the same principle, in reference however to things eternal and divine.

The difficulties of this scripture lie, I apprehend, in the expression, "mammon of unrighteousness", and "friends; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations." A correct view of the former will furnish us with a key to unlock the mystery of the latter. Let us then inquire, what is meant by "mammon of unrighteousness"? Mammon is defined, "The Syriac God of wealth or worldly acquisitions of all kinds."—Religious Ency. "Riches, wealth, or the god of wealth."—Webster. The Bible brings to view two kinds of riches,—the riches of this world, 1 Tim. 6: 17, and riches pertaining to "the world to come," Luke 12: 21. These latter riches consist in many things. The Apostle (James 2: 5) speaks of being "rich in faith." In this sense, the church at Smyrna was "rich," even amid "tribulation and poverty," Rev. 2: 9. Paul speaks of being "rich in good works," 1 Tim. 6: 18. We read of "the riches of his (God's) goodness," Rom. 2: 4; "the riches of his grace," Eph. 2: 7. Paul preached the "unsearchable riches of Christ." Moses esteemed the "reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt," Heb. 11: 26.

Christ, it appears, has in his mind at this time both these riches (or mammon). He presents them in verse 11 of the chapter before us on this wise: "If, therefore, ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true" (mammon). The one he calls "unrighteous," or as the Greek word adiko sometimes signifies, deceitful. The other he calls "true." That Jesus made no mistake when he called the riches of this world "deceitful," both scripture and human experience amply testify. It promised one foolish man "ease" and "merriment" for many years; yet it did not preserve his life one night. Luke 12: 19. It persuaded the church at Laodicea that it had "need of nothing," yet it was "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." How often have the "deceitfulness of riches" choked "the word," that it brought no fruit to perfection. The apostle well understood that, while it promised the greatest good, it only led in the way of "temptation" and snares and "many foolish and hurtful lusts which drown men in destruction and perdition." 1 Tim. 6: 9.

But while the "mammon" of this world is thus false and unrighteous, how "true" are the "greater riches." Do the riches of faith promise rest? (Heb. 4: 3), how many otherwise burdened and weary souls are now enjoying the "peace . . . which passeth all understanding." Do the riches of his (God's) goodness promise to add "all these things" to those who "seek . . . first the kingdom of God and his righteousness"? Who among such if asked to-day, "Lacked ye anything?" would not look up with tearful gratitude unto their Lord and say, "Nothing." Do the "riches of his grace" promise life and salvation? The moment is not far distant when all shall know what are the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." Well, therefore, may such riches be called "true," while the things of this world merit the title of "deceitful mammon."

The inquiry may here arise, since worldly acquisitions are so dangerous, which shall we do? shall we cast away at random the wealth already acquired, scattering it to the four winds? or, shall we idle away our time for fear that industry will accumulate riches? The Savior does not so teach, but, on the contrary, conveys the idea that they may be used to a good account; yea, even to greater advantage than by the unjust steward, who only obtained with them a temporal abode; while Christ intimates that we may use them in securing "everlasting habitations"; that we may, by a faithful use of them obtain "friends" who will give us the "earnest" of an eternal home. The friends that we are here exhorted to make with the "mammon of unrighteousness" cannot be earthly friends, for such can never assure us of an eternal mansion as these friends are said to do. Whatever therefore secures to us "everlasting habitations" must be recognized as the friends referred to by the Savior. What then must we obtain in order to secure an "inheritance incorruptible"? I answer, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation," which, as we have already seen, constitutes the "true riches." As, therefore, the "true riches," or "the riches of his grace," secure to us "salvation," these must be the friends, who, when we fail, will receive us into "everlasting habitations." But some one will say, "Does our use of this world's goods have anything to do with our receiving or enjoying the riches of Christ? Most certainly, dear soul. Did not Jesus once say, "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God?" When men trust in riches, they put them to a wrong use; they are unfaithful stewards; they waste their lord's "goods"; and easier might a camel go through the needle's eye, than such an one to enter the kingdom.

Again, John the Baptist came to prepare the way for Christ. The people who came to his baptism asked, "What shall we do?" John answered, "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

Suppose they had refused to make such use of their temporal goods; would, or could they have received Christ? Certainly not. Can any one now enjoy Christ who would refuse to share his raiment with those who have none? By no means. [See 1 John 3: 17.] Upon their faithfulness in these things depends, to a great extent, their reception of the "grace of God that bringeth salvation."

Once more. A young man inquires of Christ, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" When told to keep the commandments, he replied, "All these things have I kept from my youth up; what lack I yet?" Jesus adds, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me." Before he could come and follow Christ, or possess riches in heaven, he must first become "faithful in the unrighteous mammon."

The case of Zaccheus is in point also. "The half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken any thing from any one by false accusation, I restore four-fold." Jesus immediately adds, "This day is salvation come to thy house." Alas! how many have sought the Lord in vain, because they have neglected to restore what they have wrongfully taken from others.

Finally, Christ has assured us that the "deceitfulness of riches chokes the word." A wail of "leanness, O my leanness," might well go up from the visible church of God at this time. Why? The spirit of covetousness dwells there. There is unfaithfulness to an alarming extent in our stewardship over the things of this world. We do not use them as not abusing them. Provision is made for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof." Men professing godliness lay up for themselves "treasures upon earth." Men are lovers of "this present evil world." They trust in "uncertain riches," and are "not rich toward God." Very few obtain those "true riches" which will receive them, when heaven and earth pass away, and every fleshly arm shall fail, into everlasting habitations; because few obey this exhortation of the Savior to be faithful in the "unrighteous mammon."

Such, then, is my idea of this scripture. That it is correct, I am encouraged to think. First, because it harmonizes with the Scriptures as already seen. Second, because it was intended to admonish against covetousness. It had its effect. "The Pharisees, . . . who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided him." Third, because this idea is plainly stated by the Savior, as the sum of his teaching from this parable, in the 11th verse: "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches" (or mammon)? clearly implying that God will not intrust his grace to one who is still an unfaithful steward in the things of this world.

Dear brethren and sisters, what we have in this world is not ours. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." We are only stewards. Some are stewards of wealth, some merely of health and strength, or talent; some are stewards of much, others are stewards of little; but all are stewards. We cannot always be stewards of this world's goods. God has notified us of our dismissal. When "time shall be no longer," our account will be required. What shall we do? Let us make the things of this world subservient to the purposes of the grace of God. As servant, the mammon of this world is valuable; as a Master, it is ruinous. Let us then consecrate our all to God. Ye that are rich, be faithful in much; ye that are poor, be faithful in little; lest your unfaithfulness in the "unrighteous mammon" cause you to "fail of the grace of God"; but rather "make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 19, 1862.

Our Tour in Canada.

Our late visit to Canada, like our former ones, has been one of much interest, and accompanied with cheering and profitable results, upon which we can reflect with pleasure. The people in Canada appear to be much more anxious to know the truth, than they generally are in the States; consequently, it is easier to get their attention and persuade them to become the followers of Christ. We have been in no place where they take more pains to come to meeting, thus showing their interest in the subject of salvation.

Another reason why it is now easier to reach the people in Canada is because they are not so filled with the spirit of war, as they are in the States. When men are disposed to fight and kill their fellow men, it is very difficult to reach them with the gospel of peace. The Spirit of Christ and the spirit of war are directly opposed to each other. Where one prevails, the other must depart. They are as wide apart as Christ and Belial.

On our way to Canada, we spent one night with Bro. J. S. Brooks in Portland, where we met Bro. L. Boutell, one of the Lord's faithful ministers, with whom we had a pleasant interview. We talked to the people in the evening in their pleasant hall. Notwithstanding the traveling was unfavorable, we had a large audience of attentive listeners. There is a goodly number in P. who are trying to be ready to meet our coming King.

The next evening, Jan. 21st, we spent at Bryant's Pond, sixty-two miles beyond Portland, on the Grand Trunk R. R., where there are a few faithful souls who are anxious to get the truth before the people. They obtained the Baptist meeting house, where we addressed a large audience, considering the bad traveling. A solemn interest was manifested, and an urgent request presented for more meetings. People seem anxious to hear on the signs of the times. They appear to be well satisfied that some great event is at hand, and they think those who are looking for the coming of the Lord can tell them something about it; and, indeed, we think their conclusion is quite reasonable.

Wednesday, Jan. 22nd, we were unable to get further than Island Pond, a distance from Bryant's Pond of eighty-seven miles, where we were met by Bro. Amos Dyer, with whom we found a hearty welcome for the night. All the passenger trains running from Portland to Montreal or Quebec stop all night at this place, which is one hundred and forty-nine miles from Portland, one hundred and forty-four from Montreal, and a few miles further from Quebec. It is rather of a romantic spot, and affords the traveler some relief after riding for several miles through a new and wild looking country, having here and there a wood-chopper's hut, looking much like a snow bank with a chimney in its top. We suppose they are as contented there as Napoleon III on his throne; but really, it looked rather lonesome, when compared with a crowded city. When one arrives at I. P. he feels like the forest traveler when he comes to a village. The place is characterized by hills and vales, a pond with an island, a steam saw-mill, several stores, two large public houses, one meeting house, and about six hundred inhabitants.

Jan. 23d. At 6 o'clock, A. M., we left I. P. for Melbourne, a distance of seventy-two miles, where we were met by Bro. Wm. Gilman, in whose kind family we found a hearty welcome. In the evening we had an excellent meeting in their chapel. There are several in this place, and its surroundings, who are looking for the return of Jesus speedily. Three requested prayers. Here we also met our dear Bro. J. Porter, who came from Danville to load us with kind deeds as usual. He is a live man, although he has no left-hand, and but three fingers on his right-hand, and yet with his three fingers he is doing a lively business in the manufacture of tinware. He is the pastor of the church in Danville.

Friday, 24th, we went home with Bro. Porter to D., twelve miles from Melbourne, and on the R. R., from Montreal to Quebec, about midway between the latter two places, where we always find a real resting place, and take sweet comfort in his happy family. When we arrived here we felt as did Paul when he came to the "Three Taverns," where he met "the brethren . . . thanked God, and took courage. One can well endure cold weather and deep snows when surrounded by hearts warm with love for Jesus, and his appearing.

The snow in Canada is about three feet deep,—not badly drifted this winter. It snows a little about every day, but one does not mind it, or the cold, more than we do in the States; but the climate is much healthier. We can preach twelve times a week there as easy as nine times in the latitude of Boston, or Hartford. With extra labor, we always gain vitality in Canada.

Friday evening, we had our first meeting in D. A large audience of people assembled, and manifested their usual interest to hear. One requested prayers, and before the close of our series of meetings, five young converts were buried with Christ in baptism, besides the prodigals who came back to the embrace of the Savior. Others have requested prayers and are almost persuaded to be christians. The truth is spreading in this vicinity. Several members of other churches have become deeply interested. One who has just seen the light on "the state of man in death," remarked to me, that he was now on "the rock," and felt very thankful that he did not shut his eyes against the truth.

We had an interesting communion season, in which about ninety-five participated, and felt it to be a season of refreshing from the Lord. Among these were several members of other churches, who feel quite at home in our excellent meetings.

About three and a half miles from Danville lives a sick Sister Perkins, who loves Jesus. We visited her, in company with Bro. Porter, and found her calmly trusting in her Savior. She requested that we should visit her again and administer the sacrament before she fell asleep in death. With this request we most cheerfully complied, and had a refreshing season as we partook of the sacramental emblems with her and three daughters, one of whom is entirely blind. She is waiting for Jesus to come and open her eyes, that she may behold the "King in his beauty."

The 3d of Feb. we returned to Melbourne and preached three evenings and had profitable meetings. Some eight or ten requested prayers and resolved to live the life of the christian. We closed our meetings in Melbourne by a very pleasant communion season at Bro. Lot Wetherell's, who has been out of health for some years and is longing for the day to arrive when Jesus will place him where he will never be sick.

During our visit in Canada, we spent some time at Kingsey Falls, a place about seven miles from D. We were informed Bro. O. R. Fassett once visited this spot, and called it "the end of the world," on account of its locality. The Baptists have just built a new meeting house in the place. Before this was erected, meetings were held in private houses. This house is for the accommodation of all denominations, when not wanted by the Baptists. Large audiences assembled to hear, and much interest was awakened. The Baptist minister was present at several meetings, and asked quite a number of questions touching the state of man in death. The Lord gave his truth a great triumph, which caused the saints to rejoice. Several prominent men in the church became deeply interested, and expressed their sympathy for the truth, and some felt opposed and showed a different spirit, in keeping with the side of error. One evening, after the word of the Lord had triumphed gloriously, and torn the mask from the fables of these last days, showing that the only hope for the dead is in a literal resurrection of the identical man that is put in the grave, as we were about leaving the house, we were seized by one of the members of the church and violently thrust towards the door. Another, seeing our situation, took hold of him and forced him away. While he was pushing us, he said in a very sarcastic manner, "You had better go home and get some meal for your niggers." Being satisfied that none but a church member would treat us in this manner, we said to him pleasantly, "Do you love Jesus?" He replied, "Yes" ! !—o

Will it Live?

Will what live?—Spiritualism. Many who have looked upon this strange system as a matter of no consequence, that would have only a mushroom growth for a short period, are beginning to be astonished at its continued progress. They have prophesied its end, and expected its termination long since, but it doubles every year in strength and extent, till now its continued existence seems to be a settled problem. But it has progressed to a point where it may soon be expected to assume a new phase, which will eclipse all its past history in the work it is about to accomplish; a work which will astonish the most incredulous. At the Spiritual Conference in Boston Jan. 8, 1862, when speaking on "the tendency of Spiritualism," Mr. Chapman said, as reported in the Banner of Light, "The 'Harmonial Philosophy' is the pedestal upon which we are to expect the true image of Spiritualism. The image is about to be set up, and you and I are invited to the inauguration . . . I am talking of Spiritualism in its broad sense. . . . It is not a doctrine for a sect, but a religion for the world. . . . If Spiritualism stops at philosophy, it will perish; if it progresses to religion it will live. . . . It will progress to religion, because it will live. Not more certainly shall the flower come from the seed when nourished by soil."

We are satisfied there is more of truth in the foregoing statements than most people are now ready to admit. We are expecting to see Spiritualism become the religion of "the world." Its sentiments are entertained, more or less, in all the churches of the day, and many clergymen do not hesitate to speak openly in its favor, while thousands of church members are bold advocates of this system of demonism. The whole world appears to be drifting into it, and the time of its "inauguration" is evidently near at hand. No other system has ever spread so rapidly as this; nor has any one ever had such a paralyzing effect upon christianity, which has more to fear from this crowning work of Satan than all other forms of infidelity combined.—o.

FORTS HENRY AND DONALDSON.—As these forts have become objects of great interest at present, our readers may wish to know their precise locality. Fort Henry, which has just been taken from the rebels, is in Tennessee, on the east side of the Tennessee river, just north of the crossing of the Memphis and Ohio R. R., and also near the boundary line between Ky. and Tenn.

Fort Donaldson is on the south side of the Cumberland river, in Tennessee, about ten miles north-east of Fort Henry, near the crossing of the Memphis and Ohio R. R. into Ky. These two forts, which command the passage down the two rivers, have both been taken, which is a great loss to the enemy. With the latter fort some 15,000 prisoners were taken and two generals. These forts are about seventy-five miles from the entrance of these rivers into the Ohio. The capture of these forts also opens the way to Memphis on the Mississippi, and thence to New Orleans.—o.

QUOTING SCRIPTURE.—If our contributors only knew how much labor they would save us by turning to the various passages of Scripture they wish to insert in their articles, and writing them WORD FOR WORD, just as they stand in the Bible; we are confident they would always favor us with correct quotations from the Scriptures. Every one who quotes from the Bible should be very careful not to add to the word of the Lord, or take from it. Please do remember this request, as it will save us much time, which we very much need for other duties in the office.—o.

SCRIPTURE REFERENCES.—Again we would suggest to those who have occasion to refer to any passage in the Bible, when writing for the Crisis, that it is always best, not only to give the chapter and verse, but the Scripture itself; because a large number of readers do not have their Bibles at hand to look out the passages while reading; and many others, if their Bibles were at hand, would not take the trouble to look out the references. Put all into your article that you wish them to read, and then they will be without excuse.—o.

☞ Do not fail to read the article by Bro. H. F. Carpenter, headed, "Make to yourselves friends." When you have read it, lend to your neighbor.—o.

DISCUSSION WITH DR. LITCH.—We can now fill orders for our discussion with Dr. Litch. Price 25 cents. Postage 3 cents.

Something Good to Consider.

DR. AND MRS. PALMER IN ENGLAND.—Dr. and Mrs. Palmer were at Madeley at last accounts, laboring in the work of the Lord among the Wesleyans. The doctor, who has been indisposed, is improving, and as soon as his health permits he and Mrs. P. will leave for Wales, thence for Ireland. Under their labors five hundred and thirty, it is supposed, found the Lord at Madeley. One thousand two hundred and sixteen names were recorded as hopeful recipients of saving grace at Liverpool.—Advocate and Journal.

The remarkable success that has attended the efforts of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer in winning souls, has but justly attracted the attention and admiration of the christian world. How, or why it is, that so many ministers of the gospel, armed and equipped with all the paraphernalia afforded by scholastic lore and theological drilling, go and come, much "like a door on its hinges," and with about as little effect, so far as relates to converting sinners from the error of their ways; while here are two private persons, belonging to the laity,—himself claiming no honors not common to a christian physician, and his companion with no pretentions beyond those of a professedly consecrated life,—are the means in the hands of God of gathering in hundreds, and thousands, who can say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see"; whose lips, once breathing wickedness, now delight in praising God day and night;—who can tell? Yet we suspect there is an interesting sequel to these facts could it be got at. Surely it will not do to say that the learned and honored clergy are lacking power to instruct the understanding, to grapple with the will, and convict the conscience;—certainly not; while the unlettered exhortations of a humble female can do this. It would be base in us to say that, for the love of ease, or for filthy lucre, or because they love to be called rabbi, or for any worldly emoluments, these learned men—ambassadors direct from the court of heaven—do not, and will not, and finally dare not, speak out so plainly for Christ as is necessary in order to effect the radical reformation and conversion of sinners. True there are in the world, as there always was, the money-loving, pleasure-seeking, and the proud: all congregatins are supposed to have their quota of scribes, pharisees, and hypocrites, with simpering females, and tender youth; all bound for the judgment—for eternal life, or eternal death. Heaven pity them! These people are not heathen; they all have a profound respect for christianity; many of them were blessed in early youth with Heaven's best earthly gifts—a praying, godly mother; they remember their parents' prayers and tears, and say they often wish they were christians. But the "many" go in the broad road that leadeth to destruction. They delight to go where is displayed the most art in architecture and music; where is the most show of wealth, fashion, and glitter; and they must go where in keeping withal there is such a sense of pulpit dignity on the part of the preacher, that all these "tame," "commonplace," "mere matter-of-fact" items, receive a severe letting alone; and in lieu thereof comes not the pompous, nor the vehement, nor "words that burn and thoughts that breathe," but the learned, elegant, and sometimes eloquent disquisition on the principles that are (or ought to be) an integral part of moral law. And where the fault lies we do not pretend to say, but such congregations will not tolerate plain, home, gospel preaching. A John Wesley may preach outside such a church, (on his father's tomb-stone,) but he must not go into it. The cases of Wesley, Geo. Whitefield—the "prince of preachers"—Dudley A. Tyng, William Miller, and a whole host of God-fearing men, are before us, yet with all our garnished sepulchres, the facts are much as in the past.

While on the other hand, a layman with his meek and devoted wife go forth, and at most only pray and exhort, and lo! how many thousands of starving souls receive the word with gladness: souls that shall be as stars in their crowns of rejoicing in the day of the Lord Jesus.

But this we know, that, while many were to come in the last days (and they are already here) who should have "a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof" (2 Tim. 3), yet the efficacy of the gospel is none the less than it was formerly; the moral power with which God would clothe them who speak and live out the truth as it is in Christ, is not less; and while Mrs. Palmer and her husband have nothing more peculiar to themselves than thousands of others—except it be that she has recently published to the world her faith in the soon coming of the Lord—their wonderful success must, if it does not humble and put to shame the formal and fruitless professor, and preacher, be at least the occasion of much profitable consideration.

We may add that it is our conviction God will teach us by these facts as by those of many ages past, that "the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong"; that "unless the Lord build the house, in vain they labor that build it"; that it is "not by might, nor by power, but BY MY SPIRIT, SAITH THE LORD."—M.

The Cause in Plymouth.

It affords me much pleasure to say that the cause of the Lord in this place looks encouraging. It is well known that the church in Plymouth, as in other places, has suffered so much from various causes, that there seemed to be little or no interest left. The brethren tell me that the social meetings have been kept up by a very few, but these have continued to pray on and implore aid from on high. Their prayers have been heard; their faithfulness has been rewarded by Him who hath declared that a sparrow falleth not to the ground without his Father's notice.

On the 10th day of Aug. last, our young Bro. Burbank, feeling it his duty to warn sinners to flee from the wrath to come, and being recommended by J. S. White, came to Plymouth and commenced laboring for the Lord in good earnest. The brethren rallied round him, forgot in a measure their former differences of opinion, and labored together for the one great object, namely, the upbuilding of each other in the faith of the gospel and the conversion of sinners. The result is, the Lord has poured out his Spirit, backsliders have been reclaimed, the brethren united, and sinners converted to God. I have visited the brethren several times, and my heart has been made glad. I had the privilege of seeing nine led into the baptismal waters, though the day was intensely cold. Others stand ready to obey the Master. At nearly every conference meeting some rise for prayers. The work is still going on. Bro. Burbank visits much, especially the poor at the workhouse and other places. This savors of the religion of the Bible. Prayer meetings have been established in the worst localities,—one in Water St. I attended this meeting twice. It put me in mind of olden times. It was held in a private house. About fifty were present. After the meeting four or five rose for prayers.

I am satisfied that there is plenty of work to do, and many sinners that may yet be converted to Christ. The story of the cross has not ceased to affect the hearts of sinners. Some have supposed that the harvest is all gathered in. I don't believe a word of it; but if some do think so, the corners of the field have not been gleaned. Who will go as gleaners? Many sheaves may yet be gathered into the garner of the Lord. Come, brethren, let us use our money, our good name, our influence, our prayers, yea, our all in the cause of the Master; benefit each other all we can, and try to save sinners, that when the Master comes he will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

For the Crisis.

The Ruling Passion strong in Death.

It is a common saying, that men generally die as they live. It is also true that the manner in which people are educated, and their occupation in life, are brought vividly before the mind just previous to their death. The military chieftain on the field of battle, the statesman, the banker, and the different sects of christians, often, in their last moments, develope by expression what has in life occupied their minds and energies.

Commodore Perry's last words were, "Don't give up the ship." Chesterfield, noted for his politeness and order, seeing something out of order in his room just previous to his death, requested it to be adjusted. Many other instances might be cited in which the ruling passion has found expression at the hour of death. The christian, who has been educated to believe that he goes immediately to heaven at death, often gives expression to this idea, such as, "one more step, and I shall be over the river," "I shall soon be with Jesus," etc. And those who believe the resurrection is the consummation of the christian's hope, look forward to that event as the time when they will receive their reward.

A little girl in this city, (Ella Rowe,) about five years of age, died a few days since, and a few hours previous, she would often say, "I want to go." Her nurse would say to her, "You shall go," and this would quiet her for awhile; but she continued to give expression to this desire as long as she could speak. No doubt, she had heard of heaven from her Sabbath School teacher, or mother, and may have had a consciousness she was about to die, as she showed no signs of insanity. In a few hours she fell asleep, we trust, in Jesus.

I think we may learn from this subject, that death makes no change in a person's character; it only stops its victim in his course, whether right or wrong. May we be prepared to welcome it if it calls upon us.

Report of our Meeting in Milroy, Knox Co., Ill.

BRO. GRANT:—Thinking that the scattered flock would be interested to hear from all parts of the country, I thought I would give a sketch of our labor in this field.

Thursday, Jan. 16th, 1862, I left my home in company with Bro. D. S. Clark, of Amboy, for Knox Co., to hold a protracted meeting, a distance of seventy miles from here. We left home with the thermometer at 16 degrees below zero, traveling southwest in a covered carriage, over snow drifts for the whole day, and stopped at night, having driven forty miles, where we found a stopping place for the night. When our host, upon being apprised of our mission, would not take any thing for our keeping, we thanked him and the Lord, and started on our journey, arriving at Bro. King's, the place of our appointment, at 2 o'clock, P. M., who was anxiously waiting our arrival.

We commenced our meeting Friday evening, 17th, with but very few out to hear the word. Bro. Clark preached from Rom. 1: 16, showing what the gospel was that was preached to Abraham; he also showed what constitutes the power of the gospel.

Jan. 18th, the writer preached from Matt. 24: 27. We endeavored to show that the church would not be in darkness in regard to the coming of the Lord. Our house was well filled with attentive listeners.

Sunday morning, Bro. Clark preached again from Rev. 1: 8, showing Jesus as taught in the prophecies and in the types, etc. House well filled, and good attention.

Sunday afternoon, I preached from 1 Cor. 15: 3–4, showing that Jesus died and rose again, according to the Scriptures.

Sunday evening, we preached from Acts 17: 31, showing that there is a set time to give rewards and punishments, which time is at the coming of the Lord Jesus.

Jan. 20th, Bro. Clark preached from 1 Cor. 15; 21, 22, showing that there will be a resurrection of the dead. All seemed to be impressed that we have the truth. Infidels here began to confess that they could see how the Bible could be true; and the Freewill Baptist church, that worshiped here, began to labor in harmony with us for the revival of pure and undefiled religion. Thank God, skepticism and infidelity began to give way, and truth began to triumph, when a professed Methodist man came into our midst, and pronounced our doctrine a second edition of Millerism, called us dangerous men, and challenged us to a discussion of the immortality of the soul; which challenge we accepted. We discussed the question with him and his preacher, and we trust truth has lost nothing by the discussion. People came ten miles to hear the arguments. One Protestant Methodist preacher acknowledged that the Methodist had no argument; he was sadly disappointed. We learn that the general opinion is that the Methodist will not attack us on the Bible again in that vicinity.

We resumed our meeting again after the discussion, which seemed still more interesting than before. Many confessed that we preached the truth. One man, a Methodist, who held a license to exhort, confessed the truth publicly, and is going preaching the doctrine of the Bible. Our meetings progressed in interest for two weeks, and many resolved to live more devoted to God and his cause; while others embraced the Savior as the one altogether lovely, and "the chiefest among ten thousand." Never had I witnessed such an interest to hear the truth since 1853, when the cry was made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!"

I have not time, nor space, to enumerate all the texts and subjects upon which myself and Bro. Clark preached, but suffice it to say, we preached fifteen sermons besides holding our social meetings and the discussion, and never did I leave a people from whom it was so hard to part. It reminded me of the time when you and Bro. Henry Pratt used to come upon the mountains and through the valleys of old Berkshire, Mass., to sound the alarm. Oh, how hard it was to part! and so it is now with those who have been led to the Savior by our humble efforts. Four happy souls we buried in the likeness of Christ's death, which we trust have risen to "walk in newness of life."

Thus ends the first tour of the kind, that Bro. Clark and myself have been permitted to enjoy. Pray for us, that an effectual door may be opened to us and God's name be glorified. The field is large, and the laborers are few. May the Lord send forth more laborers into this new field.

Yours in hope of eternal life,
WM. MCCULLOCH.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Scott.

BRO. GRANT:—Thinking your readers would like to hear from the cause of truth in the far West, we are seated to pen a few lines for publication.

There has been an increasing interest manifested by the church here for the few past months. Eleven have been added to our numbers; our hearts have been cheered by the way, our faith strengthened, and we encouraged to press forward, believing that a Prince is soon to reign in righteousness, and his dominion be from the river to the ends of the earth.

Bro. and Sister Mansfield, from Michigan, spent four days very acceptably with us, commencing Nov. 14th. Hearing they were to be in Brown County in Oct., we determined to procure a house if possible and give them an invitation to spend a few days with us in Hancock. The Freewill Baptist meeting-house being the most central, and in fact the only house in the community which would be convenient or comfortable for a large audience, (notwithstanding we had been turned out of it a year or two since for our heresies,) yet we resolved to ask permission to occupy it once more, on condition that we should fully remunerate them for the same; but they received us not, replying by a short communication after the fashion of the world, which we enclose for your publication.* We then fitted up a new barn, which had just been completed, belonging to one of the brethren. Uncomfortable as it was, it was filled to overflowing, above and below, the interest increasing to the last. Some of the Baptists came to the barn to hear what they were not willing to have preached in their own house, and among them came two of the trustees whose names are attached to the communication.

At the close of our meeting we appointed 10 o'clock, Monday, A. M., for the church to meet to confer with each other upon the necessity of erecting a convenient house of worship, not only for our own accommodation, but that the whole community and country may be accommodated, and an opportunity extended to all to come and hear and judge for themselves. The result was, that we have a house progressing but a short distance from the Freewill Baptist, and by the permission of God we hope to finish it. Thus, what seemed at first an almost insurmountable obstacle, has proved thus far a blessing. Pray for us, that we may quit ourselves as true men and good soldiers of the cross, that the word may have free course, run and be glorified, and God's abundant mercies prove blessings and not curses.

*"ST. ALBANS, Oct. 30th, 1861.

MR. WILEY:—Dear Sir,—The undersigned Trustees of the St. Alban's meeting-house would respectfully say, in answer to your request asking for the use of said house, that we cannot conscientiously comply, except under the following restrictions, viz., that you do not permit the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, or the annihilation of the wicked, to be preached in said house.

Respectfully yours,
——— Trustees."

From Bro. F. Douglas.

BRO. GRANT:—I deem it proper to inform the brethren interested in our welfare, that we have returned to Syracuse. Dr. Newton gratuitously benefitted Mrs. D. very much. Although yet unable to walk, the prospect is that in a few months she can do so. We would advise the afflicted to seek the Doctor's remedial aid, so freely granted to the poor. When I hear and read of the good my brethren are doing in leading many to the Fountain where Life's waters flow, and successfully proclaiming a retributive future, I am but wish to be a sharer in their labors. The mindful, [illegible] which present and future hopes are being tried, is separating the Spirit workings of renewed hearts from the natural promptings of unregenerate natures. May it be ours to hear the Master say, "Well done."

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1862.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Hesper, Winnesheik Co., Iowa, our beloved Sister LOIS M. MCKEE, aged twenty-eight years, four months and eighteen days.

Sister McKee was an amiable woman, a fond mother, and above all, an humble christian. She leaves a husband and four small children, together with a wide circle of friends, to mourn her loss. Bro. McKee feels deeply the stroke of the enemy which thus deprives him of a fond companion; but his cup of deep sorrow is sweetened by the reflection that his dear wife had a bright hope of soon joining immortal hands with him when the Life Giver comes, (she being conscious and happy until her last breath.) The writer was happy to improve the occasion to speak to a large, intelligent, and attentive audience from Ps. 17: 15. The words being suggestive of sentiments which we deem important for the people, and which, when candidly listened to, seldom fail of making some impression. May God bless our brother and make the hope of the gospel, that sustained his companion in the dark valley and shadow of death, his comfort and consolation through the remaining part of his lonely pilgrimage.

LEVI LYONS.

Died, at Square Pond, Ct., May 4th, 1857, Sister CHLOE FRANCIS, wife of Wm. Francis, aged fifty years.

While at her funeral, as I spoke of my acquaintance with her, I remembered well the words of the dead mother, spoken a few months before,—"Bro. Pratt, when I am dead and gone, remember my children." Oh, what words! And who can speak them like a mother? They burned down deep into my heart. Already I had been lifting them up to God in prayer, but not till then had I felt that they were mine. Years had intervened since we had followed that sainted one to her rest in the dust, the children had married and left; I might not see them again. A few months ago, when at Danielsonville, I was invited home by a friend, and as the Lord would have it, I was permitted to bow the knee to God and again offer prayer in the house of the two daughters, and in their behalf. As I bid them adieu, (Sarah's eyes being all drowned in tears as she requested me to notice her mother's death in the Crisis,) again like the mighty surges of the sea, came rushing into my soul those words that time could not efface,—"Bro. Pratt, when I am dead and gone, remember my children."

Sister, though all unconscious thou,
Whene'er I lift mine eyes and bow,
Though far away is cast our lot,
Thy children shall be ne'er forgot

Wales, Feb 7th, 1862 H. PRATT.

Died of diphtheria, in Bangor, Me., July 11th, 1861, WILLIE STRATTON, only child of James N. and Roxy A. Crowell, aged five years and ten months.

Willie's mind showed signs of early maturity. His sensitive nature, and aptness to learn, together with an affectionate disposition, made him the idol of doting parents. At an unexpected hour, cruel disease got hold of him. Medical skill was early procured, but to no effect. He had his senses to the last. He would often tell his mother she would not have him with her long. He chose the parlor for his place of secret prayer, and would ask his mother if she prayed to God to make her good. When struggling with death, he would say he never should die again. He met death, the king of terrors, with the christian's faith. When death struck, he wished his friends to sing,

"I want to be an angel,
And with the angels stand,
A crown upon my forehead,
And a harp in my hand!"

When finished, "there," said he, "you need not try any more to get me well." He knew the grave could not hold him, he would soon come forth blooming from his dusty bed, and rise to meet his Savior, and forever bask in the sunbeams of his glory. While his parents are left to mourn, let them remember, God hath said he would bring them "again from the land of the enemy." Then let your hearts be fixed, let your whole souls be stayed upon God, and while you mourn, be careful not to mourn as those that have no hope; but try and be all ready, waiting, looking, longing, for Jesus will soon come, and those that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." O let us all be very good. May God bless you, is the prayer of the writer. C. DAGGETT.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Teutonia, we have news from Southampton to the 1st inst.

The Russians have been defeated in Circassia.

French troops are being dispatched rapidly to Mexico.

The Constitutionnel says: "We find that the French population comprises in its totality 37,472,732 souls. France, therefore, finds herself to-day the second of the European powers as to population, Russia being the first with 58,470,000 souls, and Austria the third with 36,965,300."

The latest acquisition of property made by the Emperor is of the mansion in the Isle of Elba, in which his uncle was sent to hold his court by the Allied Sovereigns. His Imperial Majesty has purchased it from the husband of the Princess Mathilde, for the sum of 1,500,000f., and bestowed upon it the title of "Musee Napoleon."

TWO DAYS LATER.

By the arrival of the Steamship Asia, we have news from Liverpool to the 1st inst., and Queenstown the 2nd.

PARIS, Feb. 2. The Independence Belge asserts that the Southern Commissioners have informed the English government that in return for the recognition of the Southern Confederacy, they would establish an absolute free trade for fifty years, abolish the external slave traffic, and emancipate all the blacks born after the recognition. These offers, however, will not determine Lord Palmerston to abandon the policy of neutrality.

LONDON, Feb. 2. The proposition of Mr. Gregory for the recognition of the Southern Confederacy will be discussed soon after the opening of Parliament. An interesting and exciting debate and rejection of the proposal is expected.

BOMBAY, Jan. 13. The exportation of saltpetre from India, except to English ports, is prohibited. A large gold field has been discovered in Southern Mahratta.

MASON AND SLIDELL. These individuals, with their Secretaries, received a "severe letting alone" from the English public. There was not the least demonstration by the people on their arrival; not a cheer was raised, and they hurried on to Paris as quickly as possible.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Burnside's Expedition.

Fortress Monroe, Feb. 11. By a flag of truce to-day we learn of the complete success of the Burnside expedition at Roanoke Island.

The Island was taken possession of, and Commodore Lynch's fleet completely destroyed.

Elizabeth City was attacked on Sunday, and evacuated by the inhabitants.

The city was previously burned, but whether by our shells, or the inhabitants, it is not certain. The first news of the defeat arrived at Norfolk on Sunday afternoon, and caused great excitement.

The previous news was very satisfactory, stating that the Yankees had been allowed to advance for the purpose of drawing them into a trap.

The rebel force on the island is supposed to have been only a little over 3000 efficient fighting men. Gen. Wise was ill at Nag's Head, and was not present during the engagement. When the situation became dangerous he was removed to Norfolk.

All the rebel gunboats but one were taken, and that escaped up a creek and was probably also destroyed.

One report says that only seventy and another that only twenty-five of the Confederates escaped from the Island.

General Huger telegraphed to Richmond that only fifty on the Island escaped.

There appears to be no bright side of the story for the rebels.

The Richmond Examiner in a leading editorial says: The loss of an entire army on Roanoke Island is certainly the most fearful event of the war. The intelligence of yesterday by telegraph is fully confirmed. 2500 brave troops on an island in the sea were exposed to all the force of the Burnside fleet.

They resisted with the most determined courage, but when 15,000 Federal troops were landed against them, their retreat being cut off by the surrounding element, they were forced to surrender. This is a repetition of the Hatteras affair on a large scale.

The following dispatches on the subject are taken from the Richmond papers of this morning.

Norfolk, Feb 10. The latest news states that Capt. O. Jennings Wise, son of Governor Wise, was shot through the hip and disabled, though his wound was not mortal. Major Lawson and Lieut. Miller were mortally wounded. About 300 Confederates were killed. Our wounded numbers over 1000. The number of Yankees wounded is about the same. Midshipman Cann had his arm shot off. The other casualties are as yet unreported. A late arrival of this morning says that Elizabeth City had been shelled and burned by the Yankees, and that the enemy were pushing on to Edenton.

Roanoke Island, Feb. 11. Gen. Burnside's expedition has won a glorious victory. We bombarded the fort on this island for seven hours on Friday, 7th inst, and at night a division of the troops were landed.

On Saturday forenoon there was a severe fight in Cypress Jungle. A masked battery was attacked and taken from the rebels.

The fight was a terrible one, one hundred and seventy Federals being killed and wounded in the engagement.

After the capture of the battery the enemy took to flight, and were pursued by our forces.

We captured over twenty-five hundred prisoners, together with five forts, forty cannon, and a large amount of ammunition and provisions.

The rebel fleet of eight steamers was destroyed, and one was made a prize of.

Gen. Burnside at once pushed on to Elizabeth City, and that place is now in possession of the Federal troops.

The canal communicating from Elizabeth City with Norfolk is now being destroyed by the rebels.

About four thousand Federal troops were engaged in the fighting on this island.

The rebels numbered six thousand, and possessed great advantage in position.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF GEN. BURNSIDE.

Headquarters Department, N. C.,
Roanoke Island, Feb. 10, 1862.

Major General Geo. B. McClellan, Commanding U. S. Army, Washington.

I have the honor to report that a combined attack upon this island was commenced on the morning of the 7th by the naval and military forces of this expedition, which has resulted in the capture of six forts, forty guns, over 2000 prisoners and upward of 3000 small arms.

Among the prisoners are Col. Shaw, commander of the island, and O. Jennings Wise, commander of the Wise Legion. The latter was mortally wounded and has since died. The whole work was finished on the afternoon of the 8th, after a hard day's fighting, by a brilliant charge in the centre of the island, and a rapid pursuit of the enemy to the north end of the island, resulting in the capture of the prisoners mentioned above. We have had no time to count them, but the number is estimated at nearly 3000. I am sorry to report the loss of about 35 killed and about 200 wounded, ten of them probably mortally. Among the killed are Col. Russell of the 10th Connecticut and Lieut Col Victor De Monteil of the D'Epineuil Zouaves.

I am most happy to say that I have just received a message from Commander Goldsborough stating that the expedition of his gunboats against Elizabeth City and the rebel fleet has been entirely successful. He will, of course, send his returns to his Department.

I have the honor to be, General,
Your obedient servant,
A. E. BURNSIDE, Brig. Gen. Commanding
Department of North Carolina.

Washington, Feb. 11. The President is not receiving visitors nor attending to much public business to-day, owing to the severe illness of his son William, to whom he is giving the most constant attention.

The correspondent of the New York Commercial writes from Washington:

"Gen. McClellan's headquarters will soon be removed across the Potomac, as everything has for some weeks been in readiness, and from the preparations made it is evident that he will be—or rather that he expects to be—far away from the shops of the metropolis.

Baltimore, Feb. 14. The Richmond Dispatch says: "Our Tennessee exchanges give us gloomy prospects for the future in that part of the confederacy. There is really a threatening state of affairs in East Tennessee, growing out of the idolatrous love of many of the people for the old Union."

The Port Royal correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer, writing 10th inst., says advices had been received from the fleet then on route for Savannah, up to Sunday afternoon, 9th inst.

Not only had the vessels succeeded in cutting off all communication between Fort Pulaski and Savannah, but the forces have destroyed the water pipes leading to the city and supplying it with water.

New York, Feb. 15th. The Times special Washington dispatch states that military men believe that Manassas will be evacuated.

[illegible] in our possession.

Chicago, Feb. 17. Fort Donaldson surrendered yesterday forenoon.

Generals Johnston and Buckner, with 15,000 rebels, are prisoners. Floyd stole away with 500 men on Saturday night.

Cincinnati, Feb. 17. This morning's Commercial has the following special dispatch:—

On learning that the rebels were evacuating Bowling Green, Gen. Buel ordered a forward march by Gen. Mitchell, to save if possible the railroad and turnpike bridges on Big Barron river. They had, however, all been destroyed when Gen. Mitchell reached the banks of the river.

The brigades of Gen. Breckinridge and Geo. Hindman were until Thursday evening at Woodland station. The rebels left nothing at Bowling Green but a few old wagons.

A part of the town is reported as being burnt.

It is believed that no rebel forces exist in Kentucky east of the direct road from Bowling Green, via Franklin, to Nashville.

Gen. Crittenden is trying to organize another army at Carthage on the south bank of the Cumberland. This is the only rebel force on the line from Bowling Green to Nashville.

Cumberland, Feb. 14. Gen. Lander made a forced march Thursday night, surprising and breaking up a rebel camp at Bloomey Gap, killing 13, capturing 17 commissioned officers and 45 privates, and losing but two men and six horses. He led the attack in person at the head of the 1st Virginia cavalry.

This opens the Ohio and Baltimore Railroad to Hancock again. Gen. Lander having cleared his department, renews his request to be relieved on account of ill health.

St. Louis, Feb. 16. This city is wild with excitement and rejoicing. The news has just been made public that the American flag waves over Fort Donaldson. The loss is heavy on both sides. One of Gen Grant's batteries was taken by the rebels, but was recaptured by our troops. The gunboats are said to be badly damaged.

The Eighteenth Illinois is badly cut up. The men fought like tigers. The loss on both sides is severe, but the amount is not known.

Schwartz's battery, taken by the enemy was recaptured.

The troops engaged in the fight were nearly all from Illinois. They are rivaling Buena Vista by their valor. They use the bayonet.

We find in the New York papers of Thursday evening last, Feb. 13th, interesting and important intelligence from Port Royal.

Expeditions against both Savannah and Charleston were in progress, and it is reported that a force of 4500 men had succeeded in marching to within eight miles of Savannah, reconnoitering parties penetrating four miles further.—Boston Journal

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The sale of these islands to England has been mentioned by telegraph. It appears by official documents received by the Government that the Hawaiian rulers, having become deeply involved in debt, have sent to England to negotiate a loan on a mortgage of the islands, and that the prospects are such that an early foreclosure is certain, and that, consequently, England will take possession of the territory. It is more than hinted at that the extravagance of the Hawaiian Government, which has led to this proposition to borrow, has been connived at by the English Government, and it is also said to be certain that had our representatives at Hawaii only acted with common regard to our interests there, they would not have been in peril—as, if the contract in question is carried out, and its specified consequences ensue, (as they assuredly will,) we will be cut off from the only spot at which it is possible for us to have a coaling station on the route between California, China and the Indies.—Boston Journal

☞ The Chicago people are in a bad way; their hydrants give out fishes and tadpoles, and their water pitchers and tanks smell like the last run of shad. They have to strain all their drinking water, and the noise of the finny tribe in the pipes disturb the people so at night that they are compelled to muffle the pipes and wad up the faucets.

☞ The small pox is raging in Jewett City, Conn., to such an extent that the mills are stopped, the district schools suspended, public gatherings forbidden, and a general blockade proclaimed.

Quite a revival of religion is in progress in the Mount Holyoke female seminary. Thirty or more have lately professed to be converted.

NOTE OF ELDER HIMES.—To those interested I wish to say that I have been detained in Lowell longer than I expected by the deep interest and successful gathering of the Advent people into a new and commodious place of worship. It was my intention to go direct from here to Canada West; but the pressing call from the New York church, with the fact that I could not so well serve them on my return, has induced me to change my plan and go to C. W. from New York about the first of March. I shall go by the Erie R. R. and call at Dansville, Springwater and Lewiston, and take the cars at Suspension Bridge, stopping at Hamilton a day, and then drive out to London, C. W., where I commence my work in that field.

Meetings will commence in New York in the Seventh-Day Baptist Chapel, in Eleventh Street, Friday evening, Feb. 21st, and continue about two weeks. J. V. HIMES.

Lowell, Feb. 14th, 1862.

For the Crisis.

The Year 1861.

Like a wave of the sea,
That dashes on shore
And is gone in a breath,
To be seen never more;
Like the vapor that fleeth
So quickly away,
When shines in its brightness
The orb of the day,—

Our days and years vanish,
We greet them—and then
Where are they? Gone, gone,
To return not again.
Yet their records are kept,
And we'll meet them at last,
When Time's number'd cycles
Are all in the past.

The year that hath left us
But yesterday, bore
A scroll full of import—
Its reign is now o'er;

Yet its deeds will live on
Till that great final day,
When the heavens shall flee,
And the earth melt away;

When the Ruler of all,
From his place on the throne,
To all nations and tongues
Shall these records make known.

And the impress that's left
On the year that is past,
Will be met and reviewed
By each mortal at last.

For the Crisis.

What is Truth.

God said, Gen. 2: 17,—"Thou shalt surely die." Ezk. 18: 4,—Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

The Serpent said, Gen. 3: 4, 5,—"Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil."

God said, Ps. 37: 20,—"But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." Ps. 49: 20,—"Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Ps. 104: 35,—"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more." Prov. 29: 1,—"He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy." Isa. 43: 17,—"They shall lie down together; they shall not rise; they are extinct." Isa. 60: 12,—"For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish." Ezk. 18: 20,—"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Obadiah 1: 16,—"Yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been." Mal. 4: 1,—"For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

The Serpent said, or, as orthodoxy has it, man is an immortal sinner, or is possessed of an immortal soul that will have to live forever and eternally in misery; or burn eternally and never burn up; or be eternally dying and never die; or, as a Methodist minister expressed it, "Die the death that never dies"; or, as Benson says (and I believe he is a Methodist commentator), "Infinite justice arrests their guilty souls, and confines them in the dark prison of Hell till they have satisfied all its demands by their personal sufferings, which, alas! they can never do. God is present in hell in his infinite justice and Almighty wrath as an unquenchable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture. The presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be no hell if God did not there display his wrath."

God said, Matt. 3: 10–12,—"Therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire. And he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Luke 13: 4, 5,—"Or those eighteen upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, and slew them; think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Acts 3: 23,—"And it shall come to pass that every soul that will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." Rom. 6: 23,—"For the wages of sin is death." James 5: 20,—"Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death." Rev. 21: 8,—"But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

The Serpent said, "It is the presence and agency of God that gives everything virtue and efficiency, without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is therefore himself present in hell to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt. His fiery indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit. Number the stars in the firmament, the drops of rain, the sand on the sea shore; and when thou hast finished the calculation, sit down and number up the ages of woe: let every star, every drop, every grain of sand, represent one million of tormenting ages, and know that as many more millions still remain behind, and yet as many more behind these, and so on without end."

God said, Ps. 37: 11, 29,—But the meek shall inherit the earth. The righteous SHALL inherit the land and dwell therein FOREVER." Ps. 104: 5,—"Who laid the foundations of the earth, that it should not be removed forever." Ps. 115: 16,—"The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Prov. 11: 31,—"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." Isa. 60: 21,—"Thy people also shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever." Dan. 7: 27,—"And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High; whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; and all kingdoms and dominions shall serve and obey him." Matt. 5: 5,—"Blessed are the meek; for they SHALL inherit the earth," (not heaven). Rev. 11: 15,—"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 21: 2,—"And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven." Rev. 5: 9, 10,—"And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the EARTH."

Dear Brn. and Srs., this is God's truth.

The Serpent said, and this same orthodoxy has it, that if the wicked turn to God, that at death, or soon after, the soul goes to heaven, or paradise, and is around the throne of God, singing, and enjoying his presence; or, as I heard a Baptist minister say a few days since, on a funeral occasion, (the little dead girl lay there before him,) "She is in heaven, before God's throne, in great enjoyment." He then spoke of a favorite hymn that she used to sing while alive—and he took the position that her desire was now gratified, that she was now an angel. I could see no reason why she might not "communicate," as Spiritualists say.

"I want to be an angel,"

This is the serpent's first lie continued.

Correspondence.

From Eld. S. S. Brewer.

Dearly Beloved:—With a heart more conscious of my own weakness and inability to do that which is well-pleasing in the sight of my heavenly Father without his assisting grace, and yearning over a generation criminally guilty of an unconsciousness both of their religious obligations and their approaching doom, I now pen a few lines for the Crisis. In surveying the past, and placing myself by faith amid the dim distant ages anterior to the fulfillment of judgments, I feel humbled and awed into reverence in marking the goodness of God, when inspiring the hearts and guiding the pens of holy seers and prophets to write in advance the rise, fall and destiny of nations. The question then recurs to my mind, if a holy being has thus fulfilled his good pleasure in demonstrating the declaration of the one "among the herdmen of Tekoa, "surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secrets unto his servants the prophets." He has to this generation given a greater amount of instruction than to any previous age of the world. Heaven-favored people! blest above all others! great will be thy condemnation. If the great teacher denounced a woe on Chorazin and Bethsaida, declaring it to be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, oh mercy! what a fate awaits the present world when the Almighty shall fulfill these awful maledictions, Job 21: 30,—"The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath. 2 Pet. 2: 9;—"And reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." The great day of his wrath hasteth greatly, when the words of Jesus shall be fulfilled—"All that are in the graves shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation." That same Jesus that made the declaration that heaven and earth should pass away, but his words should not pass away, will certainly fulfill this plain, positive sentence. It doth appear to me that awful day is very near.

For several weeks I have been confined at home on account of sickness of Mrs. B. and myself. Either one of us has felt loth to see week after week pass away without being able to meet with and encourage the little flock, or warn poor impenitents to flee from the approaching day of doom now so manifestly casting its shadow but little in advance of its dread, yet ever blessed realities. Great day! that terminates the conflicts of a universe, when all must appear before the judgment seat of Christ. Day of sacred and eternal re-union to God's grief-stricken and weeping saints! Their night of weeping has been long and dreary. Their pathway has been strewn at times with the mangled bodies, smouldering ruins of once happy homes, where once the altars of prayer sent up a sweet smelling savor to that ear ever intent to listen to the plaint of his suffering saints. They have trodden amid the ashes and calcined bones of fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, children. They have wept at the cross, and mourned at the tomb of Joseph. They have fallen prostrate in secret with hearts burdened and overwhelmed in mental anguish at the recollection of Calvary, as they have waked afresh the tragic scenes of that doleful day; while from the head, the hands, the side, the feet, blood, sorrow and love flowed so freely from the thorn-crowned sufferer. In humble penitence and godly sorrow they have wept, mourned and repented of and over wrongs inflicted and received. They have wept at the severing of tender and affectionate ties, that have entwined around kindred and sympathetic hearts. The coffin, earth and winding sheet, with the graves of loved ones, continue to afflict the weeping Bride of Christ. The despised ones who have distinguished themselves within a few years past by believing in and preaching the coming of the Just One, are made sad week after week at the indiscriminate ravages of the enemy, Death. The loved, the dear ones, are passing away. Our fathers and mothers are falling

"Like leaves in wintry weather"

Look at the standard bearers that have been stricken from our midst within a few short years. Brn. Miller, Fitch, Kent, Barry, Smith, Hastings, Hazelton, Porter, Merrill, and still the monster cries give! give! And now again my heart is made sad. A prince and good man is fallen in Israel. Bro. John Howell is no more! Fallen with his armor on. He sleeps sweetly. Peace to thine and thy dear little Johnny's precious dust! O death! thou insatiate monster, thou hast crushed another fond heart, and made many sad. Dear Sister H., my prayer for thee is, that the divine consolations flowing from the Rock of Ages may be neither few nor small in thy lonely pathway, through thy night of weeping. Praise to Him that alone can succor in these days of trial and peril! The morn of joy hasteth—

"When these, new rising from the tomb,
With brighter lustre far shall shine,
Revive, with ever during bloom,
Safe from distresses and decline."

Plymouth Hollow, Conn.

From Eld. A. N. Seymour.

Dear Brethren:—For the last six weeks I have been visiting the brethren in Gilead, Jackson's Prairie, Middlebury, Pine Creek, Goshen, and Waterford. We had a good hearing as a general thing, although some of the time the roads were so extremely bad that only a small congregation was obtained. We found the friends of Jesus all stable, firmly established in the glorious hope of eternal salvation soon to be realized by the coming of the great Head of the church. There was only one thing that produced a feeling of regret in my mind, and that was a lack of self devotion, a real hungering and thirsting after God and godliness, and more fervency of soul in laboring for the salvation of dying men from error to truth, from sin to that righteousness connected with faith. May God's people every where break loose from the world, worldly amusements, and every influence calculated in its nature to produce coldness, formality, and a spirit that too much resembles the popular christianity of these degenerate times. Would we accomplish good; would we scatter light and salvation among men; would we be the means in God's hands in arousing the Pharisaical religionists and the world in these eventful and perilous times, and succeed in bringing many souls to Christ, which will ultimately be stars in our crowns of glory,—we must elevate the standard of our holy religion. It runs much too low; it partakes too much of the spirit of the age. The tone of our piety must run deeper, broader. There must be a God in it—the God who knows every thought and scrutinizes every act and desire of the human soul. If I mistake not, I discover while contrasting the church now with the church of God in apostolic times, a marked difference. There was then a faith, a zeal, a sacrifice, a holy ardor, a toiling for the salvation of unregenerate men, that demonstrated to an unbelieving world that God, Christ, and the Holy Ghost were with them with power; and the result was, multitudes embraced and confessed Christ. We need just such a christianity now. We must have it in order to save souls and to hail with joy the opening day of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dear Brethren, there are two truths which I consider present truths for this generation; and all who cherish the expectation of being saved must believe them heartily, and with a heart devoted to God live in the enjoyment of the same. These truths are, a deep overflowing love and desire for the coming of Christ, and holiness in all our thoughts, conversation, desires and actions. Oh! dear brethren and sisters, will you lay these thoughts to heart, weigh them impartially, that you may be found without spot and blameless at the appearing of Christ?

Jan. 4th, 1862.

From J. A. Sober.

Bro. Grant:—You will see from the date of this letter that I am located in a new field of labor. I was formerly at Burlington, Mich., but at the earnest desire and request of the brethren in this part of the State, I have located in this place, to proclaim the good news of the coming kingdom of our Lord and kindred truths, to the people of this portion of Michigan. You will also recollect that I was unanimously appointed by the Holly Camp-meeting to act as their evangelist for the coming year. Well, here I am on the ground, and in my appointed field of labor, where I arrived Nov. 21st, about noon, and, after unloading my goods, etc., drove nine miles on my way back to Burlington, and preached in the evening in the town of Holly to an interested congregation, from Gal. 6: 7, 8. The next day I rode about forty-five miles, and so on until I reached Burlington, Nov. 26th. Resting two or three days, I started off again for Grand Blanc, and reached here Dec. 4th, after a tedious journey through rain and snows. My health is so much impaired I have preached but two sermons since my return, but I am in hopes of being able in due time to harness anew for the conflict.

I wish, therefore, to say to those brethren who are expecting preaching from me in their respective localities, that in the providence of God I will be among you soon to hold forth the good news. Meanwhile, beseech God on my behalf that his word may reach the people, that I may present it in such a manner that it will convict and convert the unbelieving to God and his word. If we would see souls converted to God, we must labor for that object. Brethren, are we not dilatory in this matter? Do we not as a ministry preach more theology, or what is termed doctrine, than we do practical godliness and holy living? I think we do. Will we reform? The cause will never prosper until we do reform in this respect in good earnest. Now is the time. Again: Are you not censorious and sarcastic with those who differ from us in theology? Let us be more mild, more like our Master. When reviled, revile not again. I have learned a little molasses will catch more flies than gallons of vinegar. "Preach the truth in love." God's servants must not strive.

Another thing. We don't pray enough. If we would spend in praying to God what time we consume in debating questions to no profit, we would do more for God in one month than we now do in twelve. Come, brethren, pray more and debate less. Do you pray in your families? Do you pray in secret? Do you pray anywhere?

Grand Blanc, Mich., Dec. 20th.

From Bro. A. Chamberlain.

Bro. Grant:—Eighteen years I have been looking for the Lord. His coming and kingdom has been my only hope and comfort. I have been through much tribulation, but the Lord has blessed me in the conversion of my eldest children, and we are happy in the glorious expectation of the speedy return of our Lord, and though we are poor in this world, we are rich in faith.

"O land of rest, for thee I sigh"

I would say that we prize the Crisis very highly. We could not well get along without it. I am astonished that some parents, who call themselves Adventists, allow their children to play cards, and go to dances, and to all the places of vain amusement, and seem to say nothing against it. Oh! how astonishing that they can do so, and still profess to be looking for the Lord. May the Lord bless you abundantly, is my prayer. It is very evident to me that the end is right upon us, and what we do, must be done quickly.

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 25, '61.

From Bro. John Taylor.

Bro. Grant:—I like the present title of the paper. It appears to me to be the only title that could be given, considering the hope of the church and the present state of the world. Crisis is a Greek term. It is the root of such words as criterion, critic, etc., words which indicate a refined activity of the mind. The law of Crisis in its operation is defined to be that climax of silently operating forces, which, when reached, turns the balance and rushes to a result. The last judgment is in the Scriptures called a Crisis. That the world has arrived at a climax, or crisis, cannot be denied, but is believed in by all.

In talking with a most rank infidel and Spiritualist (two years ago) on the present state of the world, he said he knew that the world was dawning on a better age, or, as it is called by the popular church, the millennium, because the world at present was as bad as it could possibly be; consequently it must be better, as the world was never to be destroyed by fire. I directed his attention to 2 Peter 3: 7,—"But the heavens and the earth which are now . . . are reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." He replied that it was strange that any reasonable man could believe such stuff as that God would burn this beautiful world, and mankind too, seeing that man was a part of God himself, being naturally immortal. "Every thing here was only a change for a better—from one sphere to another—from the body's shell to the realities of the spirit land." Such language fully fulfills the Scriptures.

For the Crisis.

The World to Come.

BY GEORGE W. GREEN.

Beyond these scenes of mortal woe,
Beyond this life where sorrows flow,
There is a world—'tis yet to come—
Where humble saints shall have a home.

Resplendent is that world of light,
Where saints shall reign in glory bright;
All free from care, and toil, and strife,
They there shall have ETERNAL LIFE.

No more shall Satan's tempting hand
Beset the saved, the shining band,
But they shall there behold the face
Of Him who saved them by his grace.

Nor grief, nor pain, shall enter there,
For all is glorious, bright and fair,
And saints immortal on that shore
Will sing and shout forevermore.

For the Crisis.

Will the Wicked Dead live again?

(Concluded.)

That the wicked dead will live again is still more evident, from the fact that the Scriptures declare they must die a "second death"! Rev. 20: 14, and 21: 8. In order for the wicked to die a second death, they must have a second life; for no one can die a second time unless they are first made to live again.

The phrase "second death" needs special attention. The original word for second is duteros, and is the same word as found in Matt. 26: 42, John 4: 54, 1 Cor. 15: 47, Heb. 9: 28, Rev. 2: 11, 8: 8, 16: 3, 20: 6, 14, 21: 8, and reads as follows: "He went away again the second time"—"This is again the second miracle," etc.—"The second man is the Lord from heaven"—"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation"—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death"—"And the second angel sounded"—"And the second angel poured out his vial"—"On such the second death hath no power"—"This is the second death"—"Shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Greenfield defines duteros to mean "again, the second time, another time."

The original word for death, (thanatos) is the same word as is found in Rom. 5: 10, 12; 6: 9, 21, 23; Rev. 2: 11, 20: 14, 21: 4, 8, which reads as follows.—"We were reconciled to God by the death of his Son"—"Sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men"—"Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him"—"For the end of those things is death"—"For the wages of sin is death"—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death"—"This is the second death"—"There shall be no more death"—"All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." This word thanatos, is defined by Greenfield to mean, "death, i. e., the extinction of life," etc.

Now I confess my inability to perceive how any one can die the duteros thanatos, (second death), unless they live "again, the second time, another time"! and then suffer the "extinction of life;" for no one can suffer the "extinction of life," unless they shall have first lived "again, the second time, another time"! T. M. Preble.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 21, '61.

P. S. In my last article on this subject, which appeared in the Crisis of Oc. 9th, I am made to spell anazao, anazoo; and in my reference to Rom. 14: 9, where the word is found, I am made to refer to Rom. 14: 3. The critical reader will notice that in my reference to Rom. 14: 9, and Rev. 20: 5, I follow the marginal reading, anazao, as found in Greenfield, the meaning of which, as defined by him, is, "to live again, recover life."

Selections.

Books of the Bible.

When and by whom were the books of the Old Testament first collected and arranged?

By Ezra, about 450 years before Christ. The five books of Moses had been kept with the ark of the covenant, Deut. 31: 25–26, and Joshua had written the portion of Scripture bearing his name "in the books of the laws of God." Joshua 7: 25–26.

What are the most prominent translations of the Bible that have been made?

The Septuagint, the Vulgate, Douay, and the English of King James' Bible.

What is the meaning of the word Septuagint?

Seventy. The translation was so called because it was made by seventy, or more strictly speaking by seventy-two men; six having been chosen from each of the twelve tribes of Israel for this purpose.

When and where was this translation made?

At Alexandria, in Egypt, about 400 years before Christ. It was a translation of the Old Testament only from the Hebrew into the Greek.

How was this regarded by the Jews in time of Christ?

It was regarded with peculiar reverence. Our Savior and the Apostles in their discourses generally quoted from this version.

What is the Vulgate translation?

It is a Latin translation of the Septuagint, not of the Hebrew, and so called the Vulgate, because, being the only version which the Roman Catholic Church holds to be reliable, it is in that Church the common version.

When and by whom was this translation made?

By Jerome, about the year A. D. 400. It was hastily made, and became very incorrect by many changes.

What of the Douay Bible?

It is an English translation of the Vulgate, with notes and comments, and is the only English Bible approved by the Roman Catholic Church.

From what did it receive its name?

From the place where it was first published—Douay, a town in France.

When was it published?

In 1610.

Why does it differ so much from our English Bible?

Because it was made, not from the original Hebrew, but from the Vulgate, which was from the Septuagint, and very imperfect. It could not be as correct as a translation made directly from the Hebrew.

Why is our English version called "King James' Bible?"

Because it was made during the reign of James I., King of England.

When was it begun and when completed?

In the year 1607 the work was commenced, and was finished in about three years, and published in 1611.

By whom was this translation made?

Fifty-four of the most learned men of the kingdom were appointed for the task. Seven did not serve, leaving forty-seven as the number who were actually engaged in the work.

How was the labor apportioned among this number?

They were divided into six classes, to each of which a certain portion of the Bible was given to translate, not from the Latin nor from the Septuagint, but directly from the original Hebrew and Greek.

How will our English Translation compare with other versions of the Bible?

It is said by the most competent judges to be better than any other.

When and by whom was the Bible first divided into chapters?

It is generally said to have been done by Cardinal Hugo, A. D. 1240. But as early as the third century, the four Gospels had been divided into chapters.

When and by whom were the chapters divided into verses?

By Robert Stephens, in the year 1551. It is said that he performed the greater part of this laborious task while on horseback, on a journey from Paris to Lyons.—S. S. Journal.

The Way to do Good.—It often happens in our efforts to do good, that a tender interest manifested in the temporal wants of those whom we would benefit, opens a way for their spiritual profiting. As is wisely said by Mr. Barnes, "If we wish to incline others to our opinions, or to bring them to be christians, nothing is better adapted to it than to show them kindness, and even to minister to their temporal wants. Benevolence toward them softens the heart, and inclines them to listen to us."—Tract Journal.

Advancing.—How the world advances! A railroad is now in operation thirty-seven miles from Smyrna to Ephesus; and at a meeting of the company held in London on the 29th of November, the chairman, Sir Macdonald Stephenson, announced that in about a month the line would be extended ten miles, and afterward ten more, making fifty in all; this last ten miles being a deviation from the original by which they would reach a no less important place than Ephesus itself.

The Vastness of a Trillion.—Not a trillion of seconds has elapsed since the creation of Adam! nor will that number have elapsed until Feb. 1st, in the year of our Lord 25,825! for in a trillion of seconds there are 31,687 years, 32 days, 1 hour, 46 minutes, and 40 seconds.—City and Country.

"This is for your Health."—Paul

Well Done.

Some two or three years since, the "Congregational Friends" adopted the following resolutions at their yearly meeting, in Pennsylvania. We are indebted to the Christian Messenger for a copy of them. They are as follows:—

"We record our earnest testimony against the use of tobacco on the following grounds:

1. It is unnatural, unnecessary and useless. The appetite for it is wholly artificial.

2. It is offensive to a refined taste. This is evident from the fact that men of cultivation instinctively shrink from even the suggestion that their mothers, wives and daughters may become slaves to the use of this noxious plant.

3. It is expensive—a waste of money. What a shame that men should pay more for this poisonous, filthy weed, than for the support of schools and colleges! Few countries, in proportion to their population, consume so much of it as the United States.

4. We have the authority of eminent physicians for declaring that it is exceedingly injurious in its effects upon the human system—that it tends to produce various diseases, and to shorten life. In the light of physiology, more lives are destroyed by tobacco than by intoxicating liquors.

5. Like every other poisonous stimulant, it tends to blunt the intellectual faculties, and the moral feelings. Other things being equal, who would not have more hope of enlisting the influence of an assembly of men in favor of any good cause, if they were in no way addicted to the use of tobacco? What preacher of righteousness would not be encouraged by the knowledge that his audience was too refined—too much under the influence of their higher feelings to indulge so vulgar a habit?

For these reasons and for others which we cannot now specify, we earnestly advise all whom our voice may reach, to banish the use of tobacco from their families—to discountenance it in the community, and especially to warn the young against acquiring a habit so pernicious, filthy and degrading. We are the more careful to utter our testimony against this evil, because it exists among OURSELVES. Not a few of those whom we love, and who are associated with us in the cause of reform, are the SLAVES of TOBACCO. They are bound, is! these many years? and having no strength to break their chains. We rebuke them with christian fidelity, and in the spirit of love."

Dear reader, if you are addicted to the use of tobacco, we entreat you in kindness to break the habit at once. In the strength of the Lord, now say, I will never touch it again. Do not be conquered by tobacco any longer. Be a free man, unfettered by any bad habit. Do not let another boy or man refer to you as an example of a christian who uses the filthy weed. Come, brother, quit it to-day.—o.

How People Take Cold.

The seeds of a million deaths of the beautiful, the honored and the good, will be sown this year by indifference to the statement I am going to make in reference to the time and manner of taking colds. I will not now perplex the reader with a disquisition on the physiology of colds, but will simply bring to mind what any reader will recognize as an old but forgotten acquaintance.

The time for taking cold, is after your exercise; the place is in your own house, or office, or counting-room. It is not the act of exercise which gives the cold, but it is the getting cool too quick after exercising. For example, you walk very fast to get to the railroad station, or to the ferry, or to catch an omnibus, or to make time for an appointment; your mind being ahead of you, the body makes an over effort to keep up with it, and when you get to the desired spot, you raise your hat and find yourself in a perspiration; you take a seat, and feeling quite comfortable as to temperature, you begin to talk with a friend, or if a New Yorker, to read a newspaper, and before you are aware of it, you experience a sensation of chilliness, and the thing is done; you look around to see where the cold comes from, and find a window open near you, or a door, or that you have taken a seat at the forward part of the car, and it moving against the wind, a strong draft is made through the crevices. Or may be you meet a friend at a street corner, who wanted a loan, and was quite complimentary, almost loving; you did not like to be rude in the delivery of the two-lettered monosyllables, and while you were contriving to be truthful, polite, and safe, all at the same time, on comes the chilly feeling from a raw wind at the street corner, or the slosh of mud and water in which, for the first time, you noticed yourself standing. . . .

I cannot give further space to illustrations to arrest the attention of the careless, but will reiterate the principle for the thoughtful and observant: Get cool slowly. After any kind of exercise, do not stand a moment at an open door or window. When you have been exercising in any way whatever, winter or summer, go home at once, or to some sheltered place; and however warm the room may seem to be, do not at once pull off your hat and cloak, but wait awhile, some five minutes or more, and lay aside one at a time; thus acting, a cold is impossible. Notice a moment: when you return from a brisk walk and enter a warm room, raise your hat, and the forehead will be moist; let the hat remain a few moments and feel the forehead again, and it will be dry, showing that the room is actually cooler than your body, and that with your out-door clothing on, you have cooled off full soon. Among the severest colds I have known men to take, were the result of sitting down to a meal in a cool room, after a walk, or being engaged in writing, have let the fire go out, and their first admonition of it was that creeping chilliness which is the ordinary forerunner of a severe cold. Persons have often lost their lives by writing or reading in a room where there was no fire, although the weather outside was rather comfortable. Sleeping in rooms long unused, has destroyed the life of many a visitor and friend. Our splendid parlors, and our nice "spare rooms," help to enrich many a doctor.—The Mute and the Blind.

"They die in consequence of inhaling their own breath."—The coroner's inquests in London daily show that every week, in that city, children are suffocated in bed, or under the shawls of mothers. They die, as the coroner is constantly stating, in consequence of inhaling their own breath, which is a compound of carbonic acid gas. They are, in fact, in the same situation as a person who is locked up in a room which is full of the fumes of charcoal. The children are gradually overpowered by the deleterious atmosphere, and die without a struggle, it being thought that they were in a sound sleep.—Exchange.

Pilgrim Longings.

I long to see the Savior come
In yonder clouds of glory bright,
And take to their eternal home
His ransomed people, clothed in white.

I long to see those loved ones dear,
Triumphant from the grave arise,
No more in pain to suffer here,
Forever safe in Paradise.

I long to see the ransomed host
Of every age and tongue and tribe,
O'er death and graveyards make their boast,
And glory to their Lord ascribe.

I long to see the curse removed,
And sin and death forever die,
And all these who have faithful proved,
Immortal bloom, no more to sigh.

I long to hear the welcome sound—
"Well done, thou servant of my choice,
Thou didst in works of love abound,
And faithfully obeyed my voice."

I long to wear the crown of life,
When victory through Christ I've won,
When freed from earthly toil and strife,
And Jesus' will on earth I've done.

I long to pluck from life's fair tree
The monthly fruit of various kind;
I long to drink life's water free,
And pleasures new forever find.

The Opening of the Third Seal.

NUMBER THREE.

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine."—Rev. 6: 5, 6.

The opening of this seal presents the Mohammedan delusion, predicted in Dan. 8, under the figure of a little horn, the same figure used in the previous chapter to predict the Papal delusion, or the "man of sin," as Paul calls it. 2 Thess. 2: 3. The Mohammedan delusion being predicted last in the order of time by Daniel, would appear first, as the ancient books were unrolled in a reverse order from that in which they were placed upon the roll. Black and white are opposite colors; and therefore Mohammedism is represented under the figure of a black horse, to show that it was no imitation of Christianity, or the white horse, as the Papacy was which is symbolized under the figure of a pale horse, an imitation of white. These characteristic distinctions are sufficient to identify them. Leaving the pale horse, therefore, for another opportunity, I shall proceed to examine the evidence that the opening of the third seal presents the Mohammedan delusion.

I suppose that under the six seals is figuratively embodied the whole that John was commissioned to reveal. The kingdom of Christ on earth is the object of assault by all the anti-christian powers; and the sequel will show that it will not be fully established until he himself shall go forth conquering and to conquer. Mohammedism being one of the strong pillars of anti-christ, it should occupy a conspicuous place among the seals. This false religion has been professed for more than eleven centuries by many millions of the human race, and at present prevails from the Ganges to Morocco, inclusive of a vast number of very populous islands, and every country where the tribes of Malays settle, in one direction, and from the southern extremity of Arabia to the borders of Hungary in another. Mohammed, the founder of this singular and spreading faith, was born A. D. 569. His ancestors were princes, and his family possessed, by hereditary right, the custody of the Caaba at Mecca in Arabia, which was a place of worship resorted to by the Arabians long before the time of Mohammed. The respectability of his descent, together with the relation he sustained to the religious institutions of his country, show the propriety of pointing him out as a star fallen from heaven, Rev. 9: 1. The minister who presides over a church of Christ is called an angel, Rev. 2: 1; and the seven stars in the right hand of Christ represented the angels of the seven churches, Rev. 1: 20. Hence the ministers of true religion are called both angels and stars. In like manner Mohammed, being a minister of a false religion, is called a fallen star; and the angel of the bottomless pit, when he raised armies to propagate it, and compelled men to receive it. Rev. 9: 11. He first tried to persuade men by preaching; in this respect he imitated the ministers of Christ. But failing in this, he resorted to arms.

Mohammed was in the fortieth year of his age when he assumed the character of a prophet. The state of the world at that time was highly favorable to the introduction of a new religion. The purity and simplicity of the doctrines of Christ had been contaminated and perverted by the artful wiles of priestcraft, which caused the grossest impositions to be practiced upon an ignorant laity; pomp, splendor, and unintelligible worship were substituted for the devotion of the heart, while the prayers offered to imaginary and fictitious saints had effaced all just notions of the attributes of Deity.

Such a state of the world in the latter time of the four kingdoms into which Alexander's empire was divided, was the time predicted by Daniel 8: 21–23, "when the transgressors are come to the full," for the standing up of "a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences," the same king which is the angel of the bottomless pit. Rev. 9: 11. Mohammed had made two journeys into Syria, where he had informed himself of the principles of Judaism, and the jargon which bore the name of Christianity. The Arabian tribes, who occupied the country from Mecca to the Euphrates, were at that time known by the name of Saracens; their religion was chiefly gross idolatry, Sabianism having spread almost over the whole nation, though there were likewise numbers of Christians, Jews, and Magians interspersed in those parts. Mohammed began his eventful project by accusing both Jews and Christians of corrupting the revelations which had been made to them from heaven, and maintained that both Moses and Jesus Christ had prophetically foretold the coming of a prophet from God, which was accomplished in himself, the last and greatest of the prophets. Thus "he magnified himself even to (or against, margin) the Prince of the host." Dan. 8: 11. He delivered detached sentences as he pretended to receive them from the Almighty through the angel Gabriel. These were the "dark sentences" of verse 23; and when he employed the fierce Arabs to enforce his new religion, he became "a king of fierce countenance." His power then was mighty, but not by his own power. He "destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practiced," verse 24, else his religion could never have spread over so great a proportion of the earth, and continued to hold so many millions to this day.

The above history of Mohammedism, as compared with the prophecy of Daniel, is sufficient to show that it is the little horn of chap. 8; and that of chap. 7 so clearly points out the Papacy that there can be no mistake in relation to it. Therefore, since these two horns of anti-christ occupy so conspicuous a place in the prophecy of Daniel, which were to arise about the same time in the Christian era, the one out of the Grecian, the other out of the Roman empire; and since they have been for more than eleven centuries the two colossal pillars in the temple of anti-christ, it is reasonable to suppose that they are symbolized, Mohammedism by the black, and the Papacy by the pale horse of Rev. 6. After Daniel had received this vision, he was told to shut it up, at the same time being notified that it should be for many days—verse 26. Consequently this vision composed one of the seals of the book which he was ordered to shut up and seal to the time of the end, 12: 4. Therefore it must have been one of the seals opened by the Lamb.

We will now endeavor to trace some corresponding features between the black horse and his rider, and Mohammedism as predicted by the Revelator; for I suppose the seals to give an emblematical sketch, as the leaves were unrolled, of the contents of each seal, which is subsequently filled out and more fully explained by the use of other and more comprehensive symbols, in the following chapters of the book of Revelation, when the events symbolized at the opening of each seal are given by the use of other figures in the order of time as they were successfully to be fulfilled.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER EIGHT.

Those who have carefully read and considered our previous articles, can readily see that God has made, and kept up, a distinction between his people, and those who live in rebellion against him; and between his government, and their systems of government. We have not made this distinction, but only pointed out some of God's testimony concerning it; yet there might be very much more properly said on the subject. The devil has managed to deceive his followers with the notion that they are all under the special direction of the Lord; that their rebel systems of government are ordered by the Lord, and under his care and protection. By constant connection with this nation, everywhere mooted, many of God's people are beguiled and led astray and become traitors without knowing it; joining hands with the wicked. This plot has been deeply laid, and quite too successfully executed. Multitudes of christians have come to think that the governments of earth are the Lord's, and they should, of course, be members of them and incorporate christian principles into them. But this has always been like putting "new cloth unto an old garment," or "new wine into old bottles."

But says one, "Does not the Scripture say, that 'the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men?'" Yes. And the devil has twisted it round and held it up before the christian church in the same light he did other scripture, when tempting Christ, to make it appear that he and the Lord were in co-partnership in the affairs of this world. Christ knew how to resist him, but many of the church have been too ignorant of this device, and verily think to aid the Lord in making good governments for the people. When it goes ill, and the governments get corrupt, then the cry comes up for help, to revolutionize, and change, and purify, so as to make good fruit grow on a corrupt tree. The Lord is invoked for help, as though he would use his wisdom and power to modify, moralize, and build up these rebel powers against his own authority and purpose. The idea now prevails that God is pledged in some way to aid these rebel nations to have good laws and righteous governments, on carnal principles. But "what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

Is God laid under obligation to aid in building up spurious systems of government among his enemies? Is he bound to encourage the rebels in a mock rule of Pharisaism, against Christ? Suppose the U. S. Government should admit that the rebellious States had a right to confederate against it, and to claim their mercy and protection while in open hostility; that they had a right to form a separate government; and then send among them political documents, and agents to teach them the duty to accept Northern principles of jurisprudence, and to be loyal subjects of the U. S., and also of the Southern Confederacy; all the time claiming to be sustaining and building up the rebel States;—would not all civilized nations frown upon them as a hypocritical people? Yet God is charged with doing the same thing, but charged falsely. The truth is, God's will is to let the nations use up all their wisdom and power, and make them serve a purpose in keeping balance of power among these rioters, until he has raised up a holy people among them all, and then he will dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel (Ps. 2: 9), to give the kingdom to his Son. Could a true Union man of the U. S. Government be an officer, a soldier, or a voter, in the Southern Confederacy? All will answer, no. How then can a citizen, a soldier, or an officer in Christ's government, be a citizen, a soldier, or an officer in the governments of this sinful world? This is unequal yoking with unbelievers, with the godless, graceless, careless, faithless, shameless, of this poor rebel world. Consider this, ye christian fighters, officers and voters.

But you will say, "If we don't sustain the government, the rebels will destroy the nation." So said the Pharisees,—"If we let him alone . . . the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." So they killed Christ, and just what they feared came upon them. Had they obeyed Christ, this would not have happened to them. If you will obey Christ, God will take quite as good care that the governments of earth are kept in their place, and made to serve their purpose. Then when he dashes them in pieces, you will not be of them, and therefore not a partaker of their plagues.

In my next, I will speak of Christ's coming reign, and close this series of articles. I. C. Wellcome.

"This do in remembrance of Me."

What is the "this" so imperatively commanded to be done as a remembrancer of Christ? and what particular feature in his life does he here refer to, which he would have kept in the memory of his friends? Ans. His sufferings in Gethsemane and on Calvary. How do I know? Because as he brake (not cut) the bread and gave to his disciples, he said, "Take eat, this is my body", or, it represents my body. Also when he took the cup, and told them all to drink of it, he said, "This is my blood"; i. e., it represents my blood. Then of course the thing represented is what should be kept in remembrance, which is the broken body and spilt blood of Christ. Notwithstanding all the sophistry of Papacy, and deistical sarcasm, the ellipsis which occurs in this scripture is by no means an anomaly in the Old or New Testament. But when a comparison or similitude is used, it is the common form to speak elliptically. For e. g., "The seven kine ARE seven years," instead of, as our language would render it, The seven kine represent seven years. Also, "The ten horns ARE ten kings." "The field IS the world." "The good seed ARE the children of the kingdom," etc. "The seven stars ARE the seven angels." "The seven candlesticks ARE the seven churches."

One thing is obvious, that Christ commanded his disciples to break bread as a means to remind them of his body broken on the cross for them. But what kind of bread should they use? Shall they take that in ordinary use? Nay, I think not. Why? One reason is, that things in every day use are not likely to make as deep an impression as those which are more rare. And as the bread used on this occasion was to represent no common occurrence, does not the idea of uncommon bread commend itself to our sense of propriety? Again, unleavened bread represents affliction, according to inspiration: "Seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction."—Deut. 16: 3. Now is it not an afflictive event, to reflect on the broken body and spilt blood of our divine Master, on all his agony and bloody sweat, etc.? If so, is it not reasonable that we should use the kind of bread which signifies affliction? A third reason why I think unleavened bread should be used is, that Christ himself used it when he instituted the ordinance. How do I know? I know by divine authority, that God strictly commanded his people to eat only unleavened bread during the seven days feast of passover. Yea, so rigorously imperative was this command, that they must not suffer any leaven to remain in their houses during the seven days feast of passover. Says the historian, "So particularly did the Jews adhere to this command, that they either provided a set of vessels entirely new, for baking the bread, or they kept a set to be used only for this occasion." A fourth reason why I believe we should use unleavened bread in celebrating a feast which shows that we believe Christ has been sacrificed for us, is that an inspired apostle says WE SHOULD!—1 Cor. 5: 8.

Perhaps some will say this is of minor importance. Those who think it is of little consequence whether they keep the ordinances as they were delivered, I expect will say so. Dr. Adam Clarke thinks if we pretend to pay any respect at all to this institution, we should use unleavened bread; then adds, "He who can say, 'This is a matter of no importance,' may say with equal propriety, the bread itself is of no importance; and another may say the wine is of no importance; and a third may say neither the bread nor wine is anything, but as they lead to spiritual references; and the spiritual reference being once understood, the signs are useless. Thus we may, through affected spirituality, refine away the whole ordinance of God; and with the letter and form of religion, abolish religion itself." He says, "Many have acted in this way, not only to their loss, but to their ruin, by showing how profoundly wise they are above what is written." Then he calls upon those who desire to obey God's word, to "attend to this circumstance."

It may be inquired, what kind of wine shall we use? I think Mason has plainly shown that it is that which will not intoxicate; but for one, I should like to have his argument again appear to refresh the memory. But to the command. Many who indulge the idea of friendship to Christ, still hesitate about fulfilling this command. Their excuses are varied, but equally fallacious. Perhaps the most common excuse is unworthiness. Now look here. Suppose your dearest friend is about to die. He has done much for you. Indeed, he has suffered all kinds of privation and calumny to set you up. But he is about to die. He speaks—makes a request. It is his last request. Would you listen? Would you take any pains to carry out this last request, especially when such request is entirely reasonable? In his last effort of beneficence towards you, he has suffered extremely. But he has accomplished the end for which he suffered, which is of incalculable worth to yourself. Now would it be unreasonable if he should ask that at times you should think of,—remember this extreme sorrow he endured for you? And if he were to prescribe certain simple means to bring this to mind, whether it be holding his picture before your eyes, or eating and drinking certain things of a simple kind; would you hesitate? What would he think to hear you plead unworthiness, as an excuse for not complying with so reasonable a request? O! let us be consistent. B. Mathewson.

2 Cor. 5: 1. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle was destroyed, we have an edifice from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we also groan, earnestly desiring to put on our dwelling which is from heaven, if indeed also having put it on, we may not be found naked. For being in this tabernacle we groan, being burdened, because we do not wish to put it off, but to put on (the other), that the mortal may be swallowed up of life. And he that has made us for this is God, who has given us the pledge of the Spirit. Being always confident, therefore, and knowing that while we are present in the body we are absent from the Lord,—we walk by faith, not by sight,—but we are confident, and are pleased rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore also we strive, whether present or absent, to be well pleasing to him. For we must all appear before the tribunal of Christ, that each one may receive through the body for what he has done, whether it is good or evil.—Sawyer's Translation.

The foregoing rendering seems to be the result of a candid translation of this often quoted paragraph of Scripture. The sum and substance of the Apostle's remarks are manifestly this: that as long as we (that is, the people of God) are in this mortal state, "we groan, being burdened," because, in conformity to a natural law, we would not wish to die, but to put on immortality by translation, at the coming of Jesus. It is then that this mortal is swallowed up of immortality, or life. It is a fact patent to every mortal, that Death is an enemy; and to yield up all our hopes to the dire grasp of the insatiate grave, is naturally repulsive to every holy and virtuous aspiration of our being. But we are assured that God has made us for immortality, by the pledge of His Spirit. Rom. 8: 11,—"But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Therefore while we are in the body (in this mortal state), we are absent from the Lord; but we are confident, and are pleased rather to be absent from the body (this mortal state), and to be present with the Lord. "For we must appear before the tribunal of Christ."

Special Prayer.

It is a lamentable fact that there should be any among those who are looking for the Lord's speedy coming who, if not skeptical, seem to have but little faith in specific prayer. It is not necessary to enter into a scriptural argument to prove its efficacy, for there is not a prayer recorded in the Bible which was not for some specific object, nor one that was ever unanswered. How many instances could we mention within our own recollection, where prayers have been offered for some particular object and have been answered according to the petition. And it would seem that any professor who has not faith enough in Christ to ask for things according to his will, and receive a ready response, has reason to doubt his acceptance with God. How many husbands and wives, children and parents, and neighbors, will be left out of the fold to perish in consequence of the unfaithfulness of those who profess to be the servants of God? Faith is a principle that is susceptible of being increased and strengthened. Any christian, who has had his sins forgiven in answer to prayer, has no reason to doubt that God will also hear and answer his prayers in behalf of others. "Lord, increase our faith!"

Human Ghostology.—No. 7.

IX. Fruits of Ghostology. There are a number of systems of theology, and practices, which are revolting to common sense, and generally repudiated by Protestant Christendom, which have their origin in ghostology,—never could have existed without it,—and could not continue to exist independent of it; thus proving that ghostology is the foundation of a host of corrupting errors. Let us notice a few of them:—

1. The ancient system of "NECROMANCY," denounced so strongly and repeatedly in the Bible, which was a pretense of consulting the departed dead, could never have existed, had not the heathen coined the idea that a ghost-man outlived the body. If "necromancy" were a real consultation of the deceased, God would never have denounced it. He would have said, You are welcome to all the encouragement and counsel that you can thus obtain from the inhabitants of the other world, to help you through the trials of life, and enable you to shun the fatal snares of the enemy. He would never have deprived them of this aid. But because it was a hypocritical pretense, and not a reality, God severely denounced it. It sprang from ghostology.

2. That practice of praying to departed saints, so strongly repudiated by Protestants, would never have been thought of, had it not been for ghostology. And if a ghost-man really leaves the dying saint and goes to heaven, what inconsistency in asking them to intercede with God in our behalf? While they were upon earth, we were accustomed to say to them, "Pray for us." Now, if they are in heaven, we know that they cannot regard iniquity in their hearts, to prevent their prayers from being heard, why not still ask them to plead with God in our behalf? Why not pray to the "virgin" to intercede for us?

3. That system of Purgatory,—the theory of praying ghost-men out of Purgatory,—could never have reared its unholy head, had it not been for ghostology. See yonder widow selling her last cow, to obtain money to carry to the Priest, to pay for having the soul of her husband prayed out of Purgatory. Just teach her that her husband is dead, and not alive; that he will remain in the embrace of death till the resurrection, and she will not reduce herself to starvation, nor fill the treasury of the Priest with money to be expended in building papal Nunneries, Convents, and church edifices.

4. Mohammedanism was reared upon the platform of ghostology. The theory of seven ghost-hells, and seven ghost-heavens, is the chief corner stone of the superstructure. Mahomet stimulated his soldiers to spread his religion by the sword, promising them that if they died upon the battle-field, they should thereby win Paradise, and be entitled to all of their former wives, with an addition of "seventy of the girls of Paradise." Here he inculcates the idea that when little girls die, their souls are taken to Paradise, to become the ghost-wives of soldiers. Thus every soldier who died in battle should be rewarded with seventy-four female-ghosts for wives; thus, ghostology is the bone and sinew, the soul and body of Mohammedanism.

5. Spiritualism could never have spread its polluting wing over the land, had it not been for ghostology. If death simply transforms us into ghost-men, it would be strange if we could not do as much as rap a little, or tip a table, or kick over chairs occasionally!!!

6. Teach the Indian that death will kill him, instead of changing him into a ghost-Indian, and his vain vision of chasing the ghost-deer in his "happy hunting ground" would fade away.

7. Teach the transmigrationist that death kills men, instead of opening a door for a ghost-man to escape, and he will no longer dread an imprisonment in a cat, a dog, a mouse, or a skunk; nor hope for a home in the breast of some wealthy man, or earthly king; but will look to a resurrection for future life, and reward.

8. Teach modern theologians that death makes a prisoner of the whole man, instead of subtracting a ghost-man from him, and the doctrine of the spiritual coming of Christ at death, to take the saint to glory, would vanish away.

9. Teach people that death totally deprives man of life, instead of taking a live ghost out of him, and that consequently the resurrection is necessary to restore life, and the denial of a resurrection would cease.

10. Teach the Hindoos that death is an extinguisher of life, instead of an agent that takes a live man out of a dead one, and they will no longer burn their widows, that their souls may go to be with the souls of their deceased husbands.

11. Teach the Egyptian hero worshipers that their heroes are dead, and not alive, and that system of worship would become extinct; indeed it could never have come into existence had it not been for ghostology.

12. Teach ignorant Mexicans that death is death in reality, and they will no longer behead servants, at the death of a nobleman, to send their souls to administer to the wants of a ghost-nobleman.

These are a few of the many errors which owe their existence to ghostology, and which could not exist without it. Many others might be mentioned as the legitimate fruit of ghostology; but we will not now speak of Shakerism, Swedenborgianism, etc. Not a good fruit does it present which is dependent upon it for existence. Future life, glory, felicity and rewards are gained without it. Not a good thing promised to the saint, depends upon this theory for its realization; but many bad things grow out of it. Is not a tree known by its fruits?

X. Ghosts dying the "second death." The threat of the "second death" against the wicked is made, by ghostology, to apply to the soul after the death of the body. The "SECOND death" is next in order after the first, or a repetition of the first. Also, it must be a death of the same nature of the first death; otherwise, it would be the first death of one kind, and the first death of another kind—no second about it. Now there are two kinds of death mentioned in the Bible,—literal death, which kills saint and sinner alike, and spiritual death, called a death in "trespasses and sins,"—hence, the second death must be the second infliction of one of these kinds of death.

1. If the second death is a repetition of literal death, it would prove the non-immortality of the soul, if inflicted on the soul of man.

2. If the second death is simply a spiritual death, or a death in "trespasses and sins," then there must be an end to the first death of this kind, before there could be a second death of this kind inflicted; otherwise it would be a mere continuation of this kind of death, and consequently not a second death. When there is an end to the death in "trespasses and sins," man is no longer a sinner; and to inflict a second death of this kind upon him, would be to make him a sinner again. Would God do this?

3. Theologians tell us about a third kind of death—a "death that never dies," or eternal life in misery. Now if the "second death" is a death of this nature, we inquire in astonishment when and where was the first eternal misery inflicted? For a second pre-supposes the first!!

4. The truth is, the first literal death kills saint and sinner alike; but on the righteous the "second death hath no power"; but literal death will be inflicted a second time on sinners, at the judgment.

The Fruit of the Spirit.

The fruit of the Spirit constitutes practical virtues, and by these we distinguish professors of christianity. Do we who profess to be followers of Jesus, exhibit to the world such traits of character? Are we living epistles, read and known of all men? Are we good soldiers of the cross, having respect to the recompense of reward? Are we striving from day to day to imitate the meek and patient spirit that our Savior possessed? If we have not his spirit, we are none of his. May this important truth lead us to self-examination, that we may know if we are in Christ, for he says, "He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing."—John 15: 5. If we find ourselves lacking in this, and coming far behind following his example, let us awake to duty; for if we have the gift of prophecy, and all knowledge, and faith to remove mountains, and we have not the spirit of Jesus, it profiteth us nothing. O! let us cherish a spirit of watchfulness over ourselves, and not allow opportunities of doing good to be unimproved. As we contemplate the great plan of redemption brought to light in the gospel, should we not delight in obeying the commandments of God, and ever be found honoring him in all things? Let us be faithful and watch unto prayer, that we may be counted worthy to escape those things that are coming upon the earth, and stand before the Son of man. [illegible]

Unbelief:

ILLUSTRATED BY THE "RICH MAN AND LAZARUS."

Unbelief was a characteristic of the Jews as a people, even in the days of Moses. They fell through unbelief. "Let us therefore labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall through the same example of unbelief."—Heb. 4: 11. Tradition had blinded their eyes, and their understanding had been darkened; they could not see how any but the legitimate heirs of Abraham according to the flesh could be Abraham's children, though positively declared "that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham." And to undeceive them Christ and his apostles commenced their arduous task. When pressed to answer the question, "Are there few that be saved?" he says, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out; and they shall come from the east and from the west, and from the north and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God." They stumbled at that stumbling-stone, and nothing but "signs and wonders," or a resurrection from the dead, could affect the least hardened of their stubborn unbelief.

The lost sheep—the piece of money—and the prodigal son, all went to show his readiness to save any and all, yet the elder brother is unrelenting and unforgiving. Unbelief was predominant in all their ways amid all his gracious words and miraculous acts; they demand him from the cross, with the assurance that they would then believe; but ere this, to show them that their pretended faith was all false, he presents them in contrast with the true believer in the case of "the rich man and Lazarus,' the pith of which is this—"Neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." This being a great obstacle in the minds of many, we will present it in the form of a dialogue in answer to the question.

A. With your view of the unconscious state of the dead, what do you do with the case of the rich man and Lazarus?

B. I think it is in perfect harmony with my view when read carefully.

A. How so?

B. It says the beggar died; the same that lay at the rich man's gate full of sores, and was carried—

A. But stop! Does it say that the beggar was carried?

B. It certainly does—the same that died "was carried."

A. But it means his soul was carried

B. If it had meant soul, why not say soul?

A. But we have always believed that it was his soul that was carried.

B. This, as I have observed, is for want of careful reading; it reads the beggar died and was carried.

A. But I think it means his soul, certainly; I think it can mean nothing else.

B. Does the word and in the sentence ("died and was carried") connect and show the relation between "died and was carried"? Or in another light does it read that the agent-man died, and the same agent-man was carried

A. Well, suppose I admit it for argument's sake?

B. I want you to tell me candidly whether the Scriptures declare plainly that the same beggar that died was carried by angels to Abraham's bosom? for I am not talking for argument's sake.

A. Yes, it does.

B. Now, then, I ask, was the beggar carried dead or alive?

A. What do you do with it?

B. I learn from it that the poor in this world, rich in faith, will be heirs to the kingdom; or, in other words, "If ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise"; and when Christ comes he will send forth his angels and gather his elect. The harvest is the end of the world; the reapers are the angels. Here is the time when the true heirs are carried by angels to the embrace of their father Abraham, and alive too; for, says Paul, "For as (by) Adam all die, even so (by) Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits (he is or was made alive first), afterward they that are his (are made alive) at his coming." Then the angels carry them. Therefore they are carried alive by angels, but not till Jesus comes. For proof that the Greek word en should be rendered by instead of in, in this place, read the 21st verse of this 15th chap. of 1 Cor.,—"For as by man came death (not in) by man (not in) came also the resurrection of the dead." See also Rom. 5: 12-19.

A. But the rich man,—I think you will not be so successful in his case.

B. Let us see. The rich man also died and was buried—the same rich man that died was buried; and in hades he lifted up his eyes—the same that died lifted up his eyes, and from the same place where he was buried (hades), the grave. So it reads, does it not?

A. Certainly, but go on.

B. Then if he that died and was buried lifted up his eyes, he must have come to life again.

A. Yes, but some suppose that the wicked dead will never wake up.

B. I know it, but Christ says, they that have done good and they that have done evil shall come forth, even "all that are in the graves"; and in this place he declares that the same rich man that died and was buried lifted up his eyes in hades; therefore he came to life again, and so I preach.

A. But was not all this at death?

B. No, men don't come to life when they die, or when they are buried; if they did, we should take them out of their graves and let them live on again.

A. But he was in torment.

B. Yes, and this shows us when the wicked dead will awake—after the kingdom of God is established on earth; for the Savior says, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and yourselves thrust out." That is when they lift up their eyes.

A. But will they not be tormented forever?

B. No; for the prophet saith, "For yet a little while and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger in their destruction." The flames in which they are tormented shall consume them, for says David, "The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs, they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away."

A. But what of the five brethren?

B. He has presented the two classes in their final condition; the one heir to the kingdom, the other consuming into smoke. His eyes are now opened to the result of rejecting Christ,—he first realizes his own condition and calls for help,—he learns that the gulf is impassable and his doom is fixed. He then implores for his unbelieving brethren, but Abraham in whom all his hopes were placed tells him of their unbelief still, and neither signs or wonders would awake them to a realizing sense of their condition. He is represented as using their own language, thus: If one should rise from the dead they will believe, let Lazarus be raised from the dead and they will believe. Nay, they have Moses and the prophets; if they will not hear them, "neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." The picture is now before them,—their unbelief is to be probed to the bottom. They persist in their declaration that if one should rise from the dead they would believe; and thus out of their own mouth, says the Savior, I will judge them. He comes to the grave of the beggar (Lazarus); the stone is rolled away, and he that was dead came forth. Will they now believe as they had promised? Have they been honest in their pretentions as they walk in their long robes and make long prayers? Hear their own language after the beggar is brought forth from the grave as they had desired, and on which occasion they promised to believe: "But the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away and believed on Jesus." "Neither would they be persuaded though one should rise from the dead." H. PRATT.

For the Crisis.

It Must be Done!

What is that that must be done? Why the publication of a very needful work, a book that will do as much good as any book that has been published in these last days. "That's big talk," says one; "a very bold assertion," says another. It may be, but it is emphatically the truth. Beside the Bible, I have read but little as interesting as that work. And, besides, I believe the times demand its publication in another form. And I believe the author feels impressed that it ought to be published. And I believe his feelings are not moved upon by any other power than love for the truth, and the advancement of the cause of Christ, because he can gain no pecuniary advantage from its publication, at present. And if he would, has he not earned all that he could get? And I believe, too, that if the means cannot be raised to publish it, as proposed, the C. P. S. could do no better thing than to take hold of the affair and push the matter through. But it will be published. It must be done; because it is calculated to do so much good; because we have as liberal a people as ever lived; because so many of them have been benefited by it; because the labor and toil of the author should be rewarded; because the truth demands such a defence; and because our brother's patience, prayer and faith will avail.

And now, brethren, what say you? It must be done. Some of our folks out here pay twenty-five cents, or more, for a pound of coffee; and they wonder what makes them so nervous. Well, now a few of these twenty-five cents would publish that work, and it would not hurt them to give a few. And I am sure they would feel much stronger in body and mind after reading it, than after poisoning themselves with coffee. But I may hurt somebody's feelings, so I will say no more about coffee. Well, who will help in this matter? Who? All will help, of course. Contributions can be sent to Bro. Grant. Let each put his shoulder to the wheel, and we will soon start the publication of the "COMING STRUGGLE." I hope Bro. Lombard will pardon me for this; but I have been so much benefited by the articles, as they appeared in the Crisis weekly, that I earnestly desire to see them in such a form as can be circulated among Spiritualists, &c., of all shades. The World's Crisis

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Feb. 26, 1862.

YOUR ADDRESS.—We wish to make a special request to all who have occasion to write to us. It is this: write your name and post office address very plainly. We are often much perplexed in making out the names of persons and places in the various communications received; and on this account, we frequently make mistakes. Please be very particular on this point. We notice people are inclined to write their names rapidly and carelessly, because written so frequently. It is so plain to them, they forget that to a stranger it may be very obscure. Please do not forget this request.—O.

The "Try Company."

We are very much pleased with the interest felt in the "TRY COMPANY." We think we see bright omens of good that will result from a movement of this kind. We hope parents will encourage their children to unite with the company, and thus assist them in forming good habits in early days. Thousands of young men are ruined, who might have been saved from destruction had they been faithful members of the "TRY COMPANY." The habits of most people are formed in early life; hence the importance of forming good ones. It has been said with much truth, when referring to the character of man, that he is a "bundle of habits."—O.

So the World Goes.

What strange times are these! What would our pilgrim fathers have said, could they have looked onward from their landing on Plymouth Rock in 1620 to 1862, and seen things as they now are? We apprehend they might have returned again to the other side of the great waters, and let the wilds of America continue in the possession of the natives. Truly this is an "age of progress!" But to what point is the progression tending? The reader will get a faint idea from the following:—O.

"The New York Observer says that a Louisiana clergyman, writing to them over his own name, remarks: 'I am one of five ministers, of three different denominations, in a single company, armed for the defence of our rights and liberties, three of whom are between fifty and sixty years old. And I tell you in candor, and in the fear of God, that if you or any of the brethren who have urged on this diabolical war, come on with the invading army, I would slay you with as hearty a good will, and as clear a conscience, as I would the midnight assassin. We will never submit. We will shed the last drop of our blood in the defence of our rights. You are my enemy, and I am yours.' J. F. O."

This is in harmony with the state of things foretold in the Scriptures to occur "in the last days," just before the coming of Christ, when it is said, "men shall be . . . FIERCE."—O.

"At their wits' ends."

The leading governments of Europe are in a very perplexed condition, thus showing their approach to the end of this distracted world. They are in confusion confounded. They know not what to do. Like the worm surrounded by a ring of fire, they are burnt on all sides. There is no way of escape. Destruction stops every avenue. Coming events are coiling around them as the anaconda does around his victim. There is no provision for a rescue. Mene, mene, tekel, upharsin, is written on all the governments of earth, and the Belshazzars stand aghast at the sight.

A distinguished American, now in Europe, writes:—O.

"The statesmen of England and France are at their wits' end, at this moment, to know what to do to keep the people from starvation, on the one side, and to keep the machinery of government in easy operation on the other."

Man.

The following extract from Pliny's Natural History, is an item of interest to the lovers of the truth of the Bible, touching the nature of man. Pliny wrote in the first century.—O.

"After men are buried, great diversity there is in opinion, what is become of their souls and ghosts wandering, some this way, and others that; but this is generally held that in what estate they were before men were born, in the same they remain when they are dead; for neither body nor soul hath any more sense after our dying day, than they had before the day of their nativity; but such is the folly and vanity of men that it extended still even to the future times yea, and in the very time of death flattereth itself with fond imaginations, and dreaming of what life after this; for some attribute immortality to the soul; others devise a certain transfiguration thereof; and there be again, who suppose that the ghosts sequestered from the body have sense, whereupon they do them honor and worship, making a God of him that is not so much as a man; as if the manner of men's breathing differed from that in other living creatures; or as if there were not to be found many other things in the world, that live much longer than men; and yet no man judgeth in them the like immortality. But show me what is the substance and body, as it were of the soul by itself? What kind of matter is it apart from the body? where lieth her cogitations that she hath? how is her seeing, how is her hearing performed? what toucheth she? nay, what doth she at all? how is she employed? or if there be in her none of all this, what goodness can there be without the same? but I would where she setteth, and hath her abiding place after her departure from the body? And what an infinite multitude of souls like shadows, would there be in so many ages as well past as to come? Now surely thou be fantastical, foolish and childish toys; devised by men that would fain live always, and never make an end."—Pliny's Natural History, Book VII., Chap. 55.

Unwholesome Enthusiasm.

It has been said no man can be a good leader amongst men unless he be an enthusiast; and again, that "genius lights its lamp at the altar of enthusiasm:" but a better saying is—"It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing." As in the world no man can succeed in a great enterprise unless he put his soul and being into it, so also in the weightier matters of religion, no man, preacher or layman, can exert an extensive and lasting influence in favor of Christ and his cause, unless he nourish in his heart an unquenchable zeal. We must have a single eye, a resolute purpose, with a perseverance that knows no hindrances—or if it knows them defies them; in fine he must live a devoted life. Such a man, or woman, will succeed in producing results that will be permanent. But unless such persons are devoted to God most truly, their otherwise praiseworthy gifts are perverted, prostituted, and become an evil. Their enthusiasm is madness, and must sooner or later bring upon their possessors a harvest of whirlwind.

Among the things most likely to pervert an otherwise good gift, and injure a good cause, is a one-idea-ism. Men who rant against Popery, and chuckle over the foibles of their fellows, may be all unconscious of their own puerility; but if they are devoted to any one idea, short of the great end and object of human existence, they are themselves the veriest popes and perverts. Men of the one-idea type stick their stakes, make their creeds, have their parties, define their positions, and not unfrequently become themselves the personification of human perfection. They may be extremely sensitive, in which case they (unconsciously perhaps) become jealous; or on the other hand they may be studiously stoical: but if they are enthusiasts, the one idea takes possession of them—instead of their being simply in possession of it—and hence ere they are aware of it, the welfare of the idea is so inseparable with that of their own being, that their own prosperity or adversity is supposed to gauge that of the idea. Themselves then become unconsciously the centre of thought, and without a miracle of mercy, they are supremely selfish. To such minds growth is impossible. They have incased themselves in cast iron jackets, and stretched themselves on procrustean bedsteads, new discoveries, (unless subservient to their own idea,) progress, and similar things, are fit only for the meditations of fanatics.

It is hardly necessary to say, that all such minds must dwarf. They may have truth, much truth, great truths, but THE truth, in the broad, wholesome, and sanctifying sense presented in the Scriptures, they have not. The liberal-hearted, generous-souled, shun them. The better part of their own friends sooner or later become suspicious that something is not as it should be, the conviction sooner or later ripens, and separation ensues. It is what has constituted one of the bitterest elements of modern sectarianism, producing as its fruit bigotry, the denunciation of good men, exparte views of truth by others, come-outism, and in the end, skepticism.

But a wholesome enthusiasm can never be promoted by the opposite extreme. Latitudinarianism has as its crime the taking in good and evil promiscuously, when the evil is always destined to be paramount. The only guarantee against a perverted zeal, is found in the illumination afforded by the truth and Spirit of God. Then instead of being infallible, we are simply disciples of an infallible teacher—Christ always the teacher, ourselves always to be taught, for, in the end, we know only in part. Then we can live and let live; speak and let speak; think and let think, and so it is, "All ye are brethren."—M.

LOWELL.—We have just returned from this city, where we gave two lectures, to large and deeply attentive congregations, in the spacious Unitarian Chapel on Lee St. Eld. Himes has evidently been quite successful in his recent labors in Lowell. Thinking and earnest students of prophecy are multiplying among all classes of religious people. And how, considering the times, could it be otherwise?—M.

Personal.

ELD. A. S. CALKINS. Bro. Calkins' numerous friends in Connecticut will be highly gratified to learn that his self-denying labors in the great western field are being crowned with success. Bro. E. Royce writes in a business letter, dated Polo, Ill., Feb. 6th:—M.

"In company with Bro. A. S. Calkins, I spent a few evenings in the southern part of Lasalle Co. We held meetings there some ten evenings; the audience was overwhelming. Before we closed the meeting, we gave notice that as many as had resolved to follow their Savior would have opportunity to put him on by baptism; twenty-two came forward and were baptized in the likeness of his death, and in the hope of a glorious immortality at his coming. Probably half as many more have been baptized since by Bro. C. Bro. C. is a faithful laborer, and is doing much to enlighten the people in that section. The Lord reward him."

ELD. D. B. MANSFIELD AND WIFE. We are glad to hear God is yet so manifestly blessing the labors of our Brother and Sister Mansfield in their indefatigable efforts to save souls. We clip the following from the Jonesville Independent, Mich.:—M.

"The meetings of Mr. and Mrs. MANSFIELD are to continue through this week and Sunday. They baptized ten persons on Sunday last, showing their labors are rewarded with unusual success. Their meetings are held at the Free Church, the capacity of which cannot begin to accommodate the crowds who flock to hear them."

A New Tract.

Bro. H. K. Flagg has just issued a new tract of 48 pp., entitled, "The Saint's Harvest." We have not yet found time to examine it, but the reader can form some idea of it from the following table of contents:—

"An exposition of Christ's words, Matt. 24: 15, in connection with Dan. 12: 11-12, showing what is meant first, by the daily sacrifice; second, the holy place; third, desolation or to be desolate; fourth, the abomination that maketh desolate; fifth, what is meant by the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, and by whom was it to be set up or established? and sixth, at what time was the daily sacrifice taken away—removed or made desolate, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, or substituted in its place? or, as Mark says, standing where it ought not; or in the holy place?"

A MISTAKE.—In the Crisis of Feb. 12th, an appointment is made for Bro. J. V. Himes at Massena the first and second Sundays in March. It should read Bro. M. Batchelor, instead of Bro. Himes.—O.

Strange Things.

In the towns of Warren and Chelsea, in Jo. Davis Co., Ill., the people are strangely exercised by what is called the "jerks." It has been progressing for a month or more, till nearly all the families are said to be more or less under this singular influence. A committee has been appointed to investigate the matter, from which we extract the following:—O.

"We learn that in the fall of 1860 the Rev. Henry W. Will and wife came to this circuit and commenced their labors as ministers of the gospel—the woman having charge of the circuit. In the early part of the winter they commenced holding protracted meetings at Chelsea school house, which continued about three or four weeks without anything remarkable, (except the practice of banding in the names to be prayed for,) then it was moved about two miles west to Robinson's school house.

The people seemed to manifest one general interest in the meeting, which seemed to increase as the meeting progressed, and here this strange jerking commenced. Its first victim was a young woman about fifteen years of age, of good character and family. Very soon others were attacked; that of course increased the excitement, and many conjectures were made, and many ideas advanced. The young women by some means, supposed that they were thus affected on the account of some other person, who was named by them, in the belief that if that individual would come out and embrace religion, that the jerks would cease, and a few circumstances that took place were rather favorable to that idea, but it subsequently proved to be a false opinion. Another idea prevailed about this time, to some extent that they were a manifestation to God in answer to prayer. The protracted meeting continued for a long time—some eight or nine weeks—during which a number of young women became victims to this strange phenomenon. Subsequently a few married women and young men were attacked, but no elderly person so full as to jerk.

We are not able to give anything remarkable touching the constitution, temperament, or habits that would apply exclusively to those who are supposed to have taken a lively interest in the meetings. A number have been taken long since the protracted meeting ceased; in fact it may be said that the number has continued to increase slowly up to near this time.

They are by no means uniform in their action; different individuals are affected differently, and quite a variation exists at different times and under different circumstances in the same individual. We know of but two children, under the age of puberty, being affected, and it was thought that one of them was entirely relieved by her father mesmerizing her and keeping her entirely away from the meetings. The other was taken from this neighborhood and ceased to jerk. One young woman, who jerked severely, being attacked with fever soon ceased to jerk, and has since died of consumption. Several persons have apparently been relieved for a time, and then have jerked as severely, or more so than before. Medicine has in few cases been used, but so far as we can learn without any permanent relief. Nearly all those who are affected severely complain of bodily injury, some in one way, and some in another; but most of them complain of pain or some bad feeling in the breast, especially before a spell of severe jerking. Surprise of any kind, or excitement of the passions, joy, grief, or anger, will most commonly produce a paroxysm. We have heard of no persons being affected, except those who attended some of the meetings. There are but few families in this neighborhood, containing young people, who have attended and in any way taken a part in those proceedings, but what have had more or less of this affection.

The jerking by some individuals began by a slight trembling of the arms and hands; others say it commenced in one arm only, while some say the first hiccup, or a slight catching of the breath; this is very common with most who are affected.

In many cases the paroxysm has quite a resemblance to an epileptic fit, but in most cases they are a complete nondescript, having no likeness aside from themselves. There is no marked uniformity in the paroxysm as to time, quality, day or night, asleep or awake, full or fasting. We have grounds to believe that when any of those who are affected with the jerks are attacked with any disease, the jerkings cease until the other disease leaves them, when they are likely to return in their usual form.

It was generally supposed that as the busy season came on, the religious zeal would somewhat abate, the meetings to be less frequent and the jerkings would cease. But this has not proved to be the fact. Spring, summer, and fall have come and gone, and winter has again set in, and the affection continues."

THE PRESUPPOSITIONS OF THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF IMMORTALITY.—(Die Vorstellungen der christliche Lehre von der Unsterblichkeit.) By Hermann Schultz, Doctor of Philosophy, Licentiate of Theology, and Privatdocent in Gottingen. Gottingen, 1861. 348 pp., 8 vo.

This title of a book may appear formidable to some readers, and the array of titles added to the author's name may seem to give little promise that he has found his only hope of immortality in the words and power of Christ. Among those "presuppositions" one may say Doctor Schultz certainly reckons the assumption of the soul's immortality. People who are not even Doctors of Divinity have bravely affirmed that Christ's teachings are very absurd if we do not presuppose that man is immortal. Most assuredly, then, a Doctor of Philosophy, who carries other parchments to boot, must tell us that Christ takes for granted what even the heathen confessed, that the soul is immortal.

Not so fast, dear reader. This parade of titles is very innocent in Germany, where there is learning enough for one to know that he does'nt know much—and that is a great deal. D. D.'s have got beyond being proud in that land of Universities and half-million volume libraries. And this Herr Schultz will be found to be not only a very modest christian man, but he has taken very literally those words of Peter, "To whom shall we go, Lord, but unto thee? Thou hast the words of eternal life." The writer is a devout Scripturist, and no rationalist; and his work is the most thorough and profound examination and refutation of all the arguments for immortality out of Christ, from the days of Plato to the days of Hegel. It is also, so far as I have had time to read it, a close Scripture argument for the same view, and thus complete not for metaphysics solely but for a general interpretation of the divine word on the subject.

He refers to one or two other German thinkers who have come to the same result, particularly to Rothe, with whose name some of your readers are familiar. I am particularly pleased to find an old conjecture of mine supported by him. Eight years ago, and when I was too young a dissenter to be the boldest, I thought it would be easier to show that the so-called "Father of Orthodoxy," Athanasius, held our view, than that he held eternal suffering. Dr. Schultz cites him as holding immortality only through Christ. He says: "Athanasius names as the consequence of the penalty of sin, if it should work itself through without redemption, a returning, through corruption, back to non-existence." (P. 155.)

The work will justify a translation when a thousand Yankees are ready to think the question to its very core, and not till then. Meanwhile Germans and German scholars can get the work of B. Westermann & Co., 440 Broadway, New York, for $1 and nine cents postage. C. F. H.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH and first day of the week, showing the Bible record of the Sabbath, also the manner in which it has been supplanted by the heathen festival of the Sun. By J. N. Andrews. 16mo. pp. 340. Battle Creek, Mich. Seventh-day Adventist Printing Association. 1862.

The title of the above describes it sufficiently. Its author is a christian gentleman and patient student. His book is the fruit of years of study and labor, and gathers every fact bearing upon the question within his reach. Judging from a hasty inspection, the book is valuable even to those who dissent from the conclusions of the author, as it contains a synopsis of varying views upon an important subject. Of course the writer, an earnest and conscientious observer of the Seventh-day Sabbath, could not be expected to plead the opposite course, though he has not seemed inclined to suppress the evidence that early christians, many of them at least, believed that no Sabbath was legally binding upon christians. Yet he regards that position as a step in apostasy, while they, then, regarded Sabbath keeping as a relic of Judaism, and allowed no one to judge them concerning Sabbaths or holy days.

Doubtless other writers, looking from the stand-point of those early christians, would bring out more fully the testimony of such men as Justin Martyr and others, who regarded the Sabbath as done away in Christ. Will Bro. D. T. Taylor ever find time to write his history of the Sabbath? We presume that he is not more glad to see Bro. Andrews' kind and earnest argument, than Bro. Andrews would be to peruse his different views of the same subject. Taking the two together, we might have a pretty thorough discussion of the matter, in such a temper that persons could read without anger and decide without strife. The advocates of the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day, will find little here to strengthen them in their very modern position. H. L. HASTINGS.

A NEW GERMAN TRACT.—"Die Auferstehung von den Toden."

Our earnest German brother, Louis Reimer, has just issued a twelve page tract with the above title. I am not Dutchman enough (to undertake to translate) more than the title, which is "The Resurrection of the Dead;"—a glorious theme, and I have no doubt one which is well treated by Bro. Reimer. Who will send for these tracts and scatter them among the Germans? Who will send Bro. Reimer a dollar to help him on in his way? This tract on the Resurrection and one on the State of the Dead can be had at 3 cents single, 25 cts. per dozen, or $2 per one hundred. Stamps should be sent in addition to pay postage. Direct orders to L. Reimer, 722 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Postage on over eight ounces is only one half a cent per ounce.

Will Bro. Reimer please send four dollar's worth of these tracts, (two dollar's worth of each, pre-paying postage at 8 cts. per pound,) to Mrs. N. M. Henry, Bunker Hill, Macoupin Co., Ill., for the German soldiers, and send me his bill, or order its amount in books from me and oblige?

H. L. HASTINGS.

Providence, R. I., Feb. 8d, '62.

RETRIBUTION.—"I have read 'Retribution,' and with one or two exceptions, think it unanswerable. But rabid minds may see a host of mistakes, say it is 'awful weak,' but God's judgment will show most clearly that every evil thought will be brought into notice, with all evil, yea, every pernicious word." H. V. REED.

ELD. F. BURR, of Honeoye, N. Y., writes: "I think your book, "Retribution," was needed, and appeared just at the right time. I regard it as an unanswerable argument, and convincing of its truth to a candid mind."

REV. W. W. ANDREWS.—We are glad to see the notice of this gentleman's lectures in Boston,—which see in another column. Having been favored with a personal acquaintance with Mr. Andrews for more than eighteen years, we can commend him as an eminent scholar, a devoted christian, and an able and eloquent preacher. We bespeak for him a candid hearing.—M.

Sabbath Schools.

BRO. GRANT:—In all the correspondence of the Crisis, there appears but very little in relation to Sabbath Schools. I think a comprehensive report from all the Sabbath Schools among the believers in the speedy Advent of Christ, would add much to the interest of the paper, and of the cause of truth also.

The mode of conducting schools, the number of attendants, number of conversions, etc., would be items of interest to the church; and in the quarterly and other conferences, the subject ought to have more prominence than it has received in some places. D. N. SMITH.

Correspondence.

From Eld. Samuel Curry.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—The Lord is with us in the 24th Street Mission. Some five or six persons have found the Lord lately, and have connected themselves with us, and a number of others have been blest among us.

How interesting the position of those who are truly looking for the Lord from heaven! Evidences of the sure approach of Jesus are continually increasing, and motives the mightiest that ever influenced mortals are multiplying. Truly it is glorious to live, and work, and suffer for Jesus now. I am deeply impressed with the importance of living momentarily in readiness for his appearing. I know Mr. Baxter and others are looking to '64 and '68 for the first and second translations, (and by the way the two translations seemed to be supported by several scriptures,) yet the precious words of Jesus himself, in Luke 21: 34-36, are applied by the Holy Spirit to my heart with great power. Bless the Lord. Let me say to all the dear brethren of like precious faith, here, by the grace of God, is where I stand. O! glory to God for such a hope, big with immortality and eternal life.

New York, Jan. 27, 1862.

From Sr. Susan F. Mudgett.

DEAR BRO. IN CHRIST:—Inclosed I send —— for the Crisis. And do I grudge it? No. I take heart-felt pleasure in paying for the kind messenger that comes weekly to cheer me in my loneliness. I, with my mother, am all alone, with no one to sympathize with us in our journey Zionward. If we speak of our blessed hope, none of these high professors appreciate or understand it, and our words come bounding back, causing a greater sensation of loneliness than before. O! how extremely lonely should we be were it not for the weekly visits of this paper. God always sends something to help his trusting, weary ones along, and "all things work together for good to them that love God." On this I feel I can rest and be patient till Christ our Lord shall set me free.

Kenduskeag, Me.

From Bro. J. Gregory.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Suffer me to say a few words to the brethren and sisters through the Crisis. I am now sick, and nearly on the borders of the grave. I think all that will raise me to health will be faith and prayer. If any there be that can pray in faith, I sincerely ask you all to pray for me, that I may be restored once more to health; but nevertheless, not my will, but the will of God be done. The cause of God lies near my heart still. And now as I have another dollar, I want Bro. Grant should have it for the Crisis. And may God bless you in all your lawful undertakings. Yours in the faith.

New Preston, Ct., Feb. 16, '62.

From Bro. R. C. Keith.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just had the happy privilege of conversing with a dear brother of the faith once delivered to the saints, who kindly gave me one of your cheering papers. My desire and prayer is, to be ready to meet my King, the Life-Giver, when he comes. The Advent doctrine is to me the only doctrine that has the life and power of the gospel in it. Pray for me and mine, that we may stand with all the faithful around the throne of the blessed Jesus, and shout, "Glory to God in the highest."

Sheffield, Bureau Co., Ill.

From A. M. Barton.

DEAR BRO.:—We are situated far from any means of hearing the truth. Eld. Ongley has preached to us a few times,—that, with the Crisis (the Bible excepted), is all the gospel truth we have. Much good might be done here if some one could come and preach. Cannot some one come and labor here for awhile? The people seem eager to hear.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in River Point, R. I., Jan. 25th, 1862, SUSAN A. CHURCH, daughter of B. J. and Eliza Church, aged nine months.

Farewell, thou sweet and cherished one,
In heaven again we'll meet,
To sing the praises of the Lamb,
And worship at his feet.
Oh! hour of fate when from the skies,
With notes of deepest dread,
The far resounding trump of God
Shall summon forth the dead.

B. J. CHURCH.

Died, at Mechanicsburg, Ind., Feb. 2d, 1862, of congestion of the brain, ETTA JANE, daughter of I. W. and O. T. Elliott, aged three years, five months, and twelve days.

BRO. GRANT:—An enemy hath done this. It seems as though we long to see our Lord and Savior more than ever. O when will he come to bring back to life our little Etta Jane. We long to see him coming in the clouds of heaven with the holy angels. Then, and not till then, do we look for our little daughter to be made alive.

We hold death to be an enemy; if not, why did Paul say, "O death, where is thy sting?" Then it would seem foolish for the angel, when he was consoling the mothers about their children, whom Herod had caused to be put to death, to say that they would "come again from the land of the enemy." The fact is, death is an enemy, and the angel well knew it.

Bro. George Shortrage preached the funeral discourse from 1 Cor. 15: 57. The sermon was a good one, and well suited to the occasion. We earnestly ask the prayers of the brethren and sisters in our behalf, that we may have grace to sustain us in this hour of affliction.

O that God would revive his work in this place, and put it in the hearts of some of our preaching brethren to come this way, and hold meetings with us. I believe that there could be good done here. Come, brethren, venture out this way and help us. Yours in hope of the coming kingdom.

I. W. & O. S. ELLIOTT.

Fell asleep in Jesus, in Hartland, Vt., Feb. 10th, Sr. IRENE PERKINS, in the sixty-sixth year of her age.

Her death was caused by a shock of palsy, which occurred three or four days previous to her decease. She was a woman of strong faith, and was emphatically a cross bearer. In no ordinary sense, poverty was her lot and God her provider. How forcible in reference to her are the words of the Apostle James: "Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" Her influence, though silent and unobtrusive, and especially the power of her prayers, will doubtless be seen to have been a mighty influence, when the secrets of all hearts shall be made known. The church in Hartland have indeed met with a loss. But her work is done. H. P. SIKES.

Vernon, Feb. 18th.

Fell asleep at Bangor, Me. Feb. 13th, 1861, Sister SALOMA J., wife of Bro. Jefferson Gray, and daughter of James M. and Tracy Godfrey, formerly of Dixmont, Me., aged twenty years and five days.

Our Sister did not make a public profession of religion till she was brought on her sick bed; then she gave her heart and her all to God. She was a great sufferer, but amid it all she had the patience of a Job, and is now at rest and waiting to have that prophecy fulfilled, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction."

She was carried to her place of burial on Saturday, the 16th, and prayer was offered at the house by the writer, and on Sunday, Bro. O. R. Fassett preached the funeral sermon, and comforted the mourning friends and the church from the words: "Where have ye laid him?" L. WETHERBEE.

Died, of diphtheria, in Sumpter, Wis., Feb. 16th, 1862, MILES GRANT KNAPP, infant son of Bro. O. S and Sr. E. A. Knapp, aged three months and eight days.

Deacon Knapp and his wife are strong in the faith that the time is not far distant when the lovely form of their young Miles Grant will be called from the "land of the enemy" to die no more. A large circle of intelligent friends and neighbors were addressed upon the occasion by the writer, from the following words: "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." W. SHELDON.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Bohemian, we have news from Liverpool to the 6th inst and Londonderry the 7th.

At the annual meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce, the blocking up of Charleston harbor was strongly denounced, and the efficiency of the blockade questioned, but continued non-intervention was generally approved. A letter was read from Mr. Cobden, showing the paramount importance of settling belligerent rights, and the necessity for England agreeing to the American doctrine relative to private property at sea.

Mr. Bright, in a speech at Birmingham, denied that the American blockade was ineffective, and ridiculed the idea that America was in a position to be trampled on. He pointed out the danger of interference, and strongly urged strict neutrality.

It is asserted that the allies have determined their armies shall march on the capital of Mexico next month, and the report is revived and gaining strength that Archduke Maximilian will be tendered the throne of Mexico. More French troops are under orders for Mexico.

It is asserted that the French government has determined to revise and modify the navigation laws.

Popular demonstrations had taken place at Florence and Verona against the Pope's temporal power, and in favor of Victor Emanuel. The official Austrian Gazette treats as absurd the idea that Venetia can be ceded by Austria.

The Observer says the American government is most anxious for the renewal of the efforts to lay a transatlantic cable, and offers to furnish half the means and ships if England will do the same. It says it is reported that Cyrus W. Field will undertake another mission to England on the subject.

Slidell arrived in Paris on the 1st inst.

Both Houses of Parliament had voted the address in response of the Queen's speech unanimously. The opposition approved the course of the government in the Trent affair. ... in very good grace.

Lord Palmerston said the distress to manufacturers from the blockade would not justify interference, and that the Government would continue a neutral course.

The Bank of France had raised the rate of discount to four per cent.

VIENNA, 4th. There is a monetary crisis. The Government has decreed a forced circulation of the new money. Disturbances have taken place in Verona and Mantua.

Austria will accept the throne of Mexico for Maximilian, but will not cede Venetia in exchange.

As regards Italy, the King desires a war in the Spring, and the nation, uneasy about her future, is quite ready to play all the advantages already acquired against the conquest of Venetia, which insures likewise the evacuation of Rome. The Cabinet is wavering. Ricasoli has not yet found any one to accept the trust of the Home Affairs. After having received twelve refusals, he came to the conclusion to keep the Home Ministry in his own hands, as before, and to ask a clear vote of confidence from Parliament. Still, he cannot remain longer in office than to the time when his financial and administrative bills, introduced already into the Chamber, are approved; that is to say about the middle of February. His successor will be Rattazzi, with a war programme; the Spring may soon witness a conflict between Italy and Austria.—Montreal Witness.

TWO DAYS LATER.

By the arrival of the steamship Niagara we have news from Liverpool to the 8th inst, and Queenstown the 9th.

The news is unimportant.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Lord Russell reports the substance of a conversation he had with Yancey, Rost and Mann, the delegates who waited upon him to urge recognition of Confederates. The answer to these gentlemen was that England would observe strict neutrality. Lord Russell said Her Majesty cannot acknowledge the independence of nine States until the fortune of arms or a more peaceful mode of negotiation shall have more clearly determined the respective position of the belligerents.

The Times, in an editorial upon the position of American affairs, says that in the last six months America has contrived to spend more money in a shorter time and to less purpose than any people who ever lived on the face of the earth, and that is all that has literally been done during the period. It then proceeds to argue that the subjugation of the South and a future Union has become impossible.

TURKEY.

A Turkish squadron, under Omar Pasha, had left Constantinople for the Adriatic, laden with munitions of war.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fort Donelson, Feb. 17. Gen. Grant has promulgated a most stringent order against plundering from the inhabitants; also against stealing property taken in battle.

Before surrendering, the rebels threw most of their late mails into the river. Col. Markland, however, succeeded in seizing a number of mail bags and some outside letters, supposed to contain important information.

Floyd's brigade, fearing that they might be taken, threw all their arms into the river. The crews of the gunboats are now engaged in fishing them out.

Capt. Dixon, the rebel chief of artillery, and the engineer who constructed the fortifications, was killed in the bombardment of Friday in one of his own batteries.

New York, Feb. 18. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says it is reported to-night, upon the authority of a telegram from Gen. Banks, that Mr. Faulkner has within a few days made a speech at Martinsburg, in which he expressed the opinion that the rebellion was a failure, and advised his hearers to make the best terms possible for themselves with the United States.

St. Louis, Feb. 18. The following dispatch is from headquarters:

"Major General McClellan: The flag of the Union is floating in Arkansas. Gen. Curtis has driven Price from Missouri, and is several miles across the Arkansas line, cutting up Price's rear, and hourly capturing prisoners and stores. The army of the southwest is doing its duty nobly.

(Signed) W. H. HALLECK, Maj. Gen'l."

St. Louis, Feb. 19. General Halleck received dispatches from Fort Donelson stating that 1000 more rebels had been taken. They came down to Fort Donelson to reinforce the fort; they not knowing it had been captured, were bagged.

Professor Swallow, State Geologist, was arrested last night and committed to the military prison. The names of the rebel officers captured at Warsaw on Saturday were incorrectly reported from Sedalia. They were Brig. Gen. Price, Col. Dorsey, Col. Cross and Capt. Frye, all of Major Gen. Price's staff.

New York, Feb. 20. When the Connecticut left Port Royal there were rumors that Savannah would certainly be captured in two or three days. The Federal forces had taken possession of the Island Deflorian, in the Savannah river, upon which a battery was being erected. Our gunboats had cut off communication between Savannah and Fort Pulaski and captured a rebel steamer belonging to Tatnall's fleet.

A special dispatch to the Herald says: "There remains only sixteen members of Company G, 11th Illinois regiment who are not killed or wounded, or taken prisoners, and of the whole regiment not over one hundred and forty effective men are left.

Special dispatches from Washington state that thirty-five hundred stand of arms and seventy tons of amunition were captured by Gen. Burnside at Roanoke Island. Nearly all his force has been re-embarked.

Augusta, Ga., Feb. 18. The Savannah News has a special dispatch from Charleston, stating that the captain of the schooner Theodore was captured on Friday by the Yankees in Bull Bay, but made his escape. The latest news from Savannah is that the Federal vessels were gaining ground in their efforts to reach the main channel of the river, and that an attack would not be much longer delayed. A private dispatch states that all was quiet yesterday morning at ten o'clock.

St. Louis, Feb. 20. Gen. Halleck has sent the following dispatch to Gen. McClellan:

"Clarksville is taken with supplies enough for our army for twenty days. The place is now occupied by Gen. Smith's division.

Price, being reinforced by McCulloch, made a stand at Sugar Creek Crossing, Arkansas, on the 19th, but was defeated after a short engagement and again fled. Many prisoners were taken and a quantity of arms, which his men threw away in their flight."

Fort Monroe, Feb. 20. Richmond papers of yesterday have the following:

Augusta, Feb. 18. Professor Paul arrived to-night from Nashville, and reports that Fort Donelson fell on Sunday morning.

Gen. Johnston had telegraphed to the enemy and offered to surrender Nashville on the condition that private property be respected.

No answer has been received, but the majority of the citizens seemed willing to give up on these conditions.

St. Louis, Feb. 21. A special dispatch from Cairo says that on Tuesday two rebel regiments from Clarksville came to Fort Donelson and gave themselves up, saying that they had been deceived, and were tired of fighting against the old flag.

The Provost Marshal at Clarksville has sent word to Gen. Grant to come up and occupy the town at once. The officers of the gunboats now lying there represent the Union feeling as very strong. The people state that they had been made to believe that the Union army was entirely composed of Germans and negroes for abolition purposes, but now that they see it is not, they are anxious to return to their allegiance. Prominent citizens say that a similar feeling will prevail in the whole State within a week.

Gov. Harris has called the Tennessee Legislature to meet on Monday for the purpose, it is affirmed, of having all the unconstitutional acts passed by them immediately annulled, and Tennessee officers and citizens declare that the State will soon be back in the Union.

Gen. Halleck to-day telegraphed to Gen. McClellan, that Gen. Curtis has taken Bentonville, Arkansas, with a considerable quantity of baggage, &c.

New York, Feb. 23. Rebel dispatches state that Gen. Sydney Johnston is at Gallatin, Tenn., and had no idea of surrendering Nashville. Pillow and Floyd are at Nashville.

Gen. Beauregard is sick at Nashville of typhoid fever or sore throat, and prayers have been offered for him in the churches at Charleston.

Louisville, Feb. 22. The Cumberland Gap and Russelville, Ky., are in possession of the Federal troops.

New York, Feb. 24. The World's Washington dispatch says there is no doubt of an important movement on the Potomac soon, and the cry of mud will not be offered as being a cause of detention.

The Times' Washington dispatch says it is stated that the President will to-morrow send a communication to the Senate, proposing General Scott as a Commissioner to Mexico, to represent the interests of the United States in the present complication of that country with foreign powers.

Washington, Feb. 24. There has been an extraordinary high wind to-day. Roofs of houses were blown off, trees blown down, and signs and awnings destroyed. The roof of the library of Congress was blown off. It was of thick glass.

St. Louis, Feb. 24. The Republican's Cairo dispatch says that the reports about the evacuation of Columbus are entirely false. The rebels are still there in strong force. None of the garrison has been withdrawn, and they evidently intend to make a desperate stand there.

Louisville, Feb. 24. Reliable private information received to-night assures us that Nashville is virtually in possession of the Federal forces.

Baltimore, Feb. 24. The Richmond Dispatch has the following:

Suffolk, Va., Feb. 21. Capt. Nicholas, of the Petersburg Artillery, arrived here this afternoon from Winton, where he had been stationed with his battery. Yesterday he was shelled out by the Yankees. They had seven steamers, all of which passed up the river. Capt. Nicholas had his horse shot. Two of his men were wounded. Winton is in ashes.

A dispatch from Fort Smith says that Generals Price and Herbert are fighting the enemy to-day at Sugar Creek, Arkansas. The result is not known. Our troops are confident of success.

LATER. "The enemy's loss is 700. Our loss is 100. Another great victory."

The Richmond Whig has a bitter article on the Davis administration. It says: "Judging by results, so far, it is a most lamentable failure in history, and the most signal service it can now render is the surrender of the helm to abler and better hands. In view of the past, present and probable future, the pageant of to-morrow is a bitter mockery, and a miserable compensation for the ruin of a free people."

The prisoners say that the Union men had a meeting privately on Friday night. It was well attended.

There is nothing in the papers from Savannah. Its surrender was rumored at Richmond.

Jeff Davis has appointed Feb. 28th as a day of fasting, humiliation and prayer.

HORRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—One of the most deplorable casualties ever known in this region, occurred on Monday. A switch engine on the New York and Erie Railroad, while crossing a road near the Dunkirk station, ran against a sleigh occupied by Mr. James of Sheridan, and his wife. The latter jumped to the track immediately in front of the engine, and was instantly crushed beneath it. Mr. James escaped harm, but on seeing his wife thus mangled, leaped from his sleigh, exclaiming: "You have killed my wife!" and fell to the earth, dead.—Buffalo Com.

THE FLOODS IN CALIFORNIA. Private letters from California give very sad accounts of the flood which prevailed last month. A San Francisco letter says that no goods are selling, and everybody appears to be engaged in contributing relief to the unfortunate. Between Benecia and Sacramento on the 17th ult., the country was one vast sheet of water, varying from six inches to ten feet deep. The banks of the river were lined with cattle and horses standing up to their bellies in water, their backs humped up, and bellowing piteously as they look starvation in the face. No help can reach them. The sheep are all dead. Relief boats were sent out in every direction, and large numbers of people had been brought to San Francisco, the women and children half dressed, all suffering severely. People were found in trees, who had had nothing to eat for two days. All over the plains are to be found mounds built by the Indians, and on these elevations were gathered families and cattle waiting for relief. Most pitiful stories are told of the suffering endured by all classes of people. And yet, the rains were not over, and the spring floods, occasioned by the melting of the snows in the mountains, are yet to come. This is a hard winter for California.—Boston Journal.

☞ The war in Venezuela continues. All the editors there must affix their names to articles hereafter. Several prominent persons have been arrested.

A frightful revolution had occurred at Honduras. The President, Gardiola, was assassinated at his door. The troops joined the insurgents, and excesses are being committed in Truxillo.

☞ The Tribune says that in well informed circles at Washington, it is asserted that Gen. Fremont has been vindicated of all the charges brought against his conduct during his Missouri campaign, by the vote of the Congressional Investigating Committee, and that a highly important command is to be assigned him in the far West.

☞ There were 1,825 buildings erected in Philadelphia last year—being 792 less than the previous year. About two-thirds of these houses were three-story dwellings, and quite a number of them were first-class buildings.

DEATH OF THE PRESIDENT'S SON.—Washington, Feb. 20. The President's son William, aged ten or eleven years, died this evening of Pneumonia. The other child is recovering.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at ONCE the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than ANY TRACT SOCIETY in the COUNTRY, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in TRACTS, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Notice.

Rev. W. W. Andrews is expected to deliver a series of lectures in the Mercantile Building, Summer Street, Boston, commencing Friday evening, Feb. 28th, and continuing several successive evenings, upon the hope of the second advent, and the restoration of the apostolic constitution of the church as necessary to a preparation for the event.

Notice.

The next session of the Western Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Stark, March 6, Thursday P. M., 6 o'clock, and continue over the following Sunday. The meeting will be held at Sawyer's Mills. Brn. will call on Brn. D. W. Griffin, Williamson, Waugh, and others. Come, Brn. and Srs., to this meeting. Per order. H. B. SEVEY.
I. C. WELLCOME, Sec.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The next session of the Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will be holden in Danielsonville, Ct., commencing Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and closing Friday evening, the 28th.

This conference has been signally blest at nearly all of its sessions in the past. Though never large in numbers, it has sometimes been mighty in power. Those who have come have brought life and love and strength with them. Dear brethren and sisters of R. I. and Ct., let the coming conference be no exception. Let each church send one delegate or more without fail; what if it does cost a trifle to come, the good imparted and received will repay "an hundred fold." The first one of these meetings I attended cost me five dollars. The blessing I got wealth could not buy. If really impossible to send a delegate, then send us a good hearty letter. No matter if several in each church write. You don't know how eager we listen to tidings coming from the scattered "household of faith." Cheer us with a word. If you are burdened, we beg a chance to share those burdens with you. Come, then, let us rally for God. Come from far and near. Come, brethren in the ministry, in the name of the Lord. Come, and the hospitality of the church in Danielsonville shall bid you welcome. H. F. C., Secretary pro tem.

Notice.

Edwin Burnham's permanent address is Newburyport, Mass. All who write to him for his labors will save him some trouble by addressing him directly at that place.

Notice.

Eld. Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., 90 Union St., has for sale Bro. Hastings' works, "World to Come," by Hill, "Voice of the Church," edited by D. T. Taylor, also a supply of Brn. Higgins' and Wellcome's medicine.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

MILES GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 2d 1000. Paper, 20 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 20 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment, or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. [illegible] Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 2d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp, giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 30 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord;" including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and sad with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and published by H. L. Hastings. 4th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proves that the common notion of the world's conversion was unknown in the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians known, giving an account of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has shielded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Selected for the Crisis by [illegible]

Suggested on reading Muller's "Life of Trust."

Man after God's own heart,
  Sent in these latter days,
To prove there is a "living God,"
  And yield him grateful praise.

The orphan's heart forlorn
  A home of love has found—
The "Father of the fatherless"
  Has compassed it around.

Full many an Orphan Home,
  Reared on a distant shore,
Will bless this faithful child of God
  Till time shall be no more.

FAITH is the power he wields,
  By long experience known;
The promise of his covenant God
  He pleads before the throne.

Not to an arm of flesh
  Trusts he for daily bread,
But to a near Almighty Friend,
  Who hitherto has fed.

'Tis but "to ask and have,"
  Though oft his faith is tried,
Patience must have its perfect work,
  Yet will "the Lord provide."

The love of Christ constrains,
  His work no limit knows;
"Far as the east is from the west,"
  The seed of truth he sows.

Sure all who love the Lord,
  Encouragement will find,
To bring to "Him who heareth prayer"
  Each care-worn, troubled mind:

Tell Jesus all thy wants,
  Once tempted like as we;
He'll surely grace sufficient give,
  Though great thy "needs" may be.

Oh! never may our hearts
  Lose the sweet unction given,
To wrestle by prevailing prayer
  Till Satan's chains are riven.

Lord, may our hearts be led
  To live as pilgrims here;
Thy word to follow as our rule,
  Make all our duty clear.

May we our "stewardship"
  Remember day by day,
"Laying up treasures in the skies
  That will not pass away."

Dear as a "household word"
  The name of MULLER's known,
Though first we meet him face to face
  Before the great white throne.

For the Crisis.

A Glance at our World—No. 4.

So long have the people of this world been familiarized with the devastations of death, that, as a general thing, they are willing his power should continue for ages, and some professing christianity believe this world will never be destroyed, or changed, except in its moral character; and that reform will be but partial. Still they anticipate long years of successful reign for the Devil, and tremendous desolations for death. Our sons and daughters, from age to age, are to be brought forth for trouble and slaughtered to feed the greedy maw of death. The sword is to waste and desolate, sickness is to afflict, cares to distract, guilt to upbraid, and justice condemn; and this state of darkness now in the world, the clergy are responsible for. Instead of pointing the people to the resurrection of the dead, and the restitution of all things, spoken by the Lord, by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began, and living themselves as strangers and pilgrims, and exhorting others to do the same; they teach people to be resigned to their lot, and to make the best of their situation by amassing property, building houses, obtaining influence in the world, and the like; and for the comfort of their flock, when they are dying, they tell them at death they will enter upon an immortal-life-pleasure, and in imagination they give them a substantial heaven; when in fact, they cannot have a real conscious existence; thus making death desirable, and the resurrection of no importance. O that they understood, O that they would consider, in the language of the poet, that—

"Death's not the gate of paradise,
  Nor opening key to heaven;
Nor a bright angel from the skies,
  Or boon in mercy given.

Death to the saint is not the hour
  When Christ the Lord hath come,
In all the glory of his power,
  To waft him to his home.

Nature will mourn departed friends,
  And shake at death's alarms;
'Tis not the voice that Jesus sends
  To call them to his arms.

No! 'tis a dark and cruel foe
  Which has invaded earth,
And to distress, and fear, and woe
  Intense, hath given birth."

But in the full blaze of gospel light this is now being poured upon the inhabitants of earth. They still cling to their old dogmas and creeds, and so with their opiate preaching they float down the stream of time to awaken when too late. They do not hinder the world from suffering on in all its diversified susceptibilities, and writhing in its untold agonies, and swelling its mighty voice of wailing until the heavens are rent, and the earth move under it, and the bones of the prophets and martyrs shake and come to their bone. They will still whine on in the old song,—"be resigned to your sufferings a little longer, the Lord will soon send his kind messenger death, who will release you, and introduce you to the fair climes of glory, where you will sing and have fullness of joy."

Dear Lord, how thy word is perverted, and thy character impugned. Only look at it, reader! Such doctrines make God a partner with the Devil; makes that evil spirit open heaven, and introduce the redeemed into positive glory, when the word teaches he had the power of death. These divines give him the issues of life and immortality. Strange work for the Devil! If he knew this he would never kill another victim. Death is not the door to heaven, but to the pit. The resurrection is the door, and here is the hope. Jesus our Savior came to destroy the Devil, and the works of the Devil. He is pledged to bruise his head, and he will do it. May the followers of the meek and lowly man of sorrow lift their voices in prayer for the hastening of that desirable event. Can the christian religion, or the gospel, furnish a remedy? Has it ever so succeeded? Was there ever an age when its triumphs prevented war and desolation, sickness, mourning, disappointment, and death? Even the Master preacher and author of the gospel could not prevent the floods of evil from flowing over the world in his day; and could not do many mighty works, because of the unbelief of the people; and when he traveled in the greatness of his strength as the Redeemer, then was the hour and power of darkness arrayed against him, and that power even slew the Prince of life; and the apostles, the most efficient agents God ever employed in his work, who demonstrated the truth by the miracles they wrought, were hindered, contradicted, imprisoned, beaten, and slain. What a delusion then, to suppose that the gospel can now triumph where the wicked are worse than ever, "deceiving and being deceived," and waxing "worse and worse," and the church departing "from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." And, then, what moral power have we now to wield against all this apostasy in the church, and overgrown wickedness in the world?

But here I am met by many, who are committed to convert the world; who tell me they are succeeding abroad. They say the world is growing better. To this I can safely reply, if it is, you are the only ones who see it; and situated as you are, you are rather unqualified witnesses in the case. But turn to a more reliable source,—the Police reports, the calendars of crime of every country, especially all civilized countries, in all the world, and you will find an increased ratio of crime; and what is more, a refined, adroit villainy, that evades detection, which is peculiar to this age. Besides, if this was not true, the word of God would be broken. The world is to be as it was in the days of Noah, and Lot, in the last times, and that is what furnishes the necessity for the advent of the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, to take vengeance upon his enemies and to destroy him that had the power of death, and to restore all things to their Eden state. I say our moral power is gone. The theology of the day is spurious. The piety of the age is stinted and weak, and infidelity is ripening into a rank harvest.

Spurious theology! Many may start at this statement, but is it not so? What do they preach? That they preach some truth is cheerfully admitted; but do they preach the gospel of the kingdom, as Jesus and the apostles did? They certainly do not. They preach the gospel is the kingdom, and imagine that Christ's kingdom is to be spiritual and invisible, never to be seen with our eyes, or handled with our hands; and nothing finally substantial about it. It is only to be apprehended by a sort of deluded fancy, and the only hope they give the people is not in the resurrection, but at death they immediately go to heaven, which is perfectly opposite to truth. See the 11th chapter of Heb., and the 15th of 1st Cor., which evidence is indisputable on this subject, and diametrically opposed to the popular theology of our day. J. L. H.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

Left home Jan. 2nd. Met with the brethren at Mason's Ville, Ct., and preached Friday night, and over the Sabbath to a full house, and good interest was manifested. Monday, the 5th, preached at the house of Bro. Allards, at Read's Ville, and the Lord was with us. Tuesday, the 6th, we met the brethren at Worcester, had a good turn out, and an interesting meeting. Wednesday morning, we left Worcester for North Dana, and put up with Bro. Streeter. We had a social chat with them. Thursday morning, we left them in the Lord's care, and took the cars for Vernon, Vt.

Thursday evening, we had a good congregation. We continued over the Sabbath, and Monday evening, with an increasing congregation and interest. There being some brethren and friends sick, who were anxious to hear, the meeting was discontinued, to wait their recovery, and we moved on to West Brattleboro, Vt. There we met a few, who are striving through opposition, to gain the rest that remains to God's people. We stopped with them three evenings; then we were called upon to attend the funeral of Bro. Allen's child, on Saturday, at Vernon. We continued over the Sabbath. Though the weather was stormy, and unpleasant, yet our congregation was large and interesting. On Tuesday, we left again for West Brattleboro. There we stopped for ten days. The saints were fed and comforted, and backsliders reclaimed, and good done in the name of the Lord Jesus, and a way prepared for the truth hereafter to be offered. We then returned to Vernon again, and commenced our series of meetings, and the Lord was with us indeed and in truth. Saints have been much comforted and quickened. Many backsliders reclaimed and sinners converted to God. The work is said to be such as never was before in Vernon. It is deep and thorough, from people that are ninety-one years of age, down to infants. The work is still going on, and we will say more in relation to it, in due time. A long standing appointment calls us to Keene, this 14th day of Feb., to remain over Sabbath.

Caution.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say a few words through the Crisis to the brethren that are scattered through this vale of tears, who are tried and tempted. I would say, you may escape some of the trials, if you will take heed to the sure word of prophecy; for there are some amongst us that do not abide in the word of God, but have got above the Master. They have taken the work out of the hands of the Lord, to judge and bind such as are to be lost.

Now brethren, you should mark all such as make division among you. There are some that claim to have the discerning of spirits, and thereby test others claiming that God has given them great power. I have seen, within a few weeks past, where this work has been done in the churches. They have got above that which is written, for it brings distraction and drives away the Spirit of God.

I have had experience in this matter. I went all through it in 1845. I know every crook and corner of it. Brethren, I exhort you to treat those brethren kindly, but stand up stifly for the truth; don't bid them God-speed any further than they speak the word; for the Spirit and the word must agree. When they judge you, be kind. When they cut you off, be good, for in this way you may bring them back.

Yours in love, DAVID MILLER.

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—I take the liberty of sending you an article which I cut from the Philadelphia "Evening Bulletin," Jan. 22nd, and the reasons for so doing, which you may publish if you think proper.

Some time since I was present at a lecture delivered by a Methodist preacher of high standing in the Philadelphia Annual M. E. Conference, on "MAN IMMORTAL." Said preacher stated that he would not attempt to prove the doctrine of man's immortality from Scripture, but by philosophy. He then stated that man was possessed of two natures, MATTER and MIND, the one dying, corruptible; the other undying, incorruptible, that matter could not think; that the properties of the mind were thought, feeling, memory, and will, therefore, the mind must be immortal. In reply to his statements, I showed from facts produced that the brute creation were possessed of the same properties of mind to a certain degree, and in some cases to a greater degree than man, for man had to pass through a course of training and scholastic education to fit him for the pursuits of life, and then often failed in accomplishing his designs, even with the aid of science, while the brute, without the aid afforded to man, accomplished its ends, exhibiting superior intelligence, and bringing its plans to a more successful issue than man with all his acquired knowledge and powers of reason, which the enclosed article verifies.

Query. Did the animal referred to in the article possess properties of the mind, and was its mind immortal? If man has an immortal mind, then of course the brute, having the same properties of mind, must also be immortal. The Bible says, "God only hath immortality.—1 Tim. 6: 16.

Yours for the truth, CHAS. H. SUTTON.

Maynayunk, Pa., Jan. 23, '62.

The following is the article referred to above:—

INTELLIGENT ACTION OF A DOG.—A gentleman connected with the Newfoundland fishery was once possessed of a dog of singular fidelity and sagacity. On one occasion a boat and crew in his employ were in circumstances of considerable peril, just outside a line of breakers, which, owing to some change in wind or weather, had, since the departure of the boat, rendered the return passage through them most hazardous. The spectators on shore were quite unable to render any assistance to their friends afloat. Much time had been spent, and the danger seemed to increase rather than diminish. Our friend, the dog, looked on for a length of time, evidently aware of there being great cause for anxiety in those around. Presently, however, took to the water, and made his way through it to the boat.

The crew supposed he wished to join them, and made various attempts to induce him to come on board; but no! he would not go within their reach, but continued swimming about, a short distance from them. After a while, and several comments on the peculiar conduct of the dog, one of the hands suddenly divined his apparent meaning. "Give him the end of a rope," he said; "that is what he wants." The rope was thrown—the dog seized the end in an instant, turned round and made straight for the shore, where a few minutes afterwards boat and crew—thanks to the intelligence of their four-footed friend—were placed safe and undamaged. Was there reasoning here? No acting with a view to an end or for a given motive? Or was it nothing but ordinary instinct?—Rev. C. J. Atkinson, the Zoologist.

For the Crisis.

"To-Day."

DEAR BRN. OF THE CRISIS:—As many of our brethren and others, who may read our family journal, have not the advantage of human helps for the understanding of the word, and as the meaning of a text generally hinges on the meaning of one word, which, if understood in the sense it was used at that time, would remove all difficulties; allow me to quote a few words from Calmet's dictionary, which is a standard authority among the orthodox. He says under head of "To-day":—

"To-day does not only signify the particular day on which we are speaking, but any definite time; as we say, the people of the present day, or of that day or time."

Now for the application. "And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, to-day, [viz., that day, or at that time you speak of, when I shall come into my kingdom] shalt thou be with me in paradise."

A Wish.

I have often wished that I was endowed with talents sufficient to express my views and sentiments through the Crisis. I would gladly embrace the opportunity. But as I have not, I will be a reader of its contents, hoping I may profit thereby; also hoping those that are qualified for the place will be more deeply interested in so great a cause, and have such power with God that their exhortations will not only find way to the hearts of the ungodly, but to those that profess to love God and yet have a disposition to scandal their brother or sister in Christ. I would to God there were more true-hearted followers of Christ, more that would practice the golden rule, do unto others as ye would that others should do to you; more that would not dishonor the cause by practising so much deceit, for it seems to me a great sin in the sight of God; and furthermore, I do not see the consistency of it if we are truly followers of Christ, neither do I think it can be consistent. May God help us to shun this evil with many others with which we are habituated, is my prayer. MARY T.

Practical Christianity.

The following extract from one of H. W. Beecher's sermons is worthy of a second reading. Do not forget the practical points, but keep them for every day use.—G.

"The man that steals a penny is just as great a transgressor against the purity of his own conscience as if he stole a million dollars. When a man makes up his mind that he will be a thorough-paced villain, and steal like a cashier, he does not do himself any more damage, in his moral sense, than when he says, 'I will filch a penny.' To steal large sums damages the firm, damages the bank, damages the commercial interests of the community. These things go by the ratio of quantity; but so far as moral deterioration is concerned, the moment a man says, 'I will do wrong,' the damage is done, the glass is broken, the mirror is defaced, the conscience is soiled. He cannot do more if he says, 'I will do a double wrong, or a triple wrong.' And there is the great mischief of it. There is an impression that the culpability of things bears some proportion to their magnitude. To steal an apple is not much. In stealing it you do not get much, but you get all the damage that you would if it was a golden apple. To betray a small trust has the same moral effect as to betray a large one.

Do you stand at a bank counter and present a check for a thousand dollars? and does the man behind the counter, in his haste, hand you eleven hundred dollars? and do you walk away, saying, "It is his business to take care of his affairs: I will take care of mine?" You are a thief! The law is that no man shall take a thing without rendering an equivalent, and that law you have violated. If that man blunders in finance, it is no reason why you should steal. And yet how many men are there, that if they were to take a thousand, a hundred, or ten, or five dollars too much, would think of returning it? You say that corporations have no souls. You will not have any that is worth anything long if you pursue such a course. It is a question that is to be settled, not on that side of the counter, but on this side.

How many men are there that, when looking over the money that they have received during the day see a bill that appears like a counterfeit bill, do not like to look at it again, and thrust it into the drawer? You have taken a circuitous way to make yourself a scoundrel. You saw it sufficiently to produce the conviction on your mind that it was a counterfeit; and the moral effect of passing it is the same as though you knew it to be counterfeit. Or do you take it up and say, 'Well, somebody has passed it on me, and I have a right to shove it along?' Why, you are a counterfeiter! I tell you, my friend, it only requires the opportunity to lead you to forge bills and put them on other men! Do you protest and say, 'Do you expect that I am going to lose that money?' It is a choice between losing the money and your conscience. I do not know what a person would not do who is willing to throw his manhood away for the sake of a little money. And if you are going to sell yourself, do not sell yourself for a dollar bill, or a five dollar bill—though I think you would get enough for yourself even at such a price.

I do not know of any buyer that pays such high prices as the devil pays when he buys men. Here is a man that sells himself for about one-eighth of a pound of chiccory in a pound of coffee. He sells himself to every customer that comes in. He adulterates. He prepares his commodity with a lie, and retails it with another lie. Every time a man commits a known dishonesty, he sells his soul; and thousands of men are selling themselves by little driblets. And I think that a man who sells himself thus—cheats himself. No, he cheats the devil. The devil pays too much for him!

How many men are there, who, if, through carelessness, the conductor neglected to punch their railroad ticket, and they found it in their pocket the next day, would not take it out, and look at it, and say, 'I think I will use that again.' You paid for that ticket a dollar? Yes. You have had service to the amount of a dollar? Yes. If then, you ride with that ticket again, you steal one dollar from the railroad company as much as if you went to the till and took a dollar. And yet, how many men would not ride twice with a ticket under such circumstances—yes, forty times?

I am informed that before the commutation system was abandoned by the ferry company, men of property and good standing in society would boldly declare that they had a commutation ticket in their pocket when they had none, for the sake of going through without paying! They did this when the ferriage was but one penny. They lied for one cent!

I pity the devil! I do not know what he does with such men! It is awful to be chief magistrate of a parcel of men like them! I cannot understand how these exiguous, thrice-squeezed men can be managed!

I have given you but one or two instances of this kind; but if you comb society you will find it to be full of just such little meannesses—things that men do with the cock of the eye or with dexterity of finger, misunderstandings, overreachings, underplottings, all sorts of trickery—which pivot on essential dishonesty.

And these rebound. They destroy the moral sense. They undo a man. If you go to-night to a bank, and break through the door, and rob the safe, or work above it, and split the granite over it, and get at it in that way, you are not more dishonest than you would be if you only ran away with a sixpence that did not belong to you.

The danger of these little things is vailed under a false impression. You shall hear a man say of his boy, 'though he may tell a little lie, he would not tell a big one; though he may practice a little deceit, he would not practice a big one, though he may commit a little dishonesty, he would not commit a big one.' But let me tell you that these little things are the ones that destroy the honor, that destroy the moral sense, and throw down the fence and let a whole herd of buffaloes of temptation drive right through you. Criminals that die on the gallows, miserable creatures that end their days in poor-houses, wretched beings that hide themselves in loathsome places in cities, men that are driven as exiles across the sea and over the world—these are the ends of little things, the beginnings of which were thought to be safe. I tell you it is these little things that are your peculiar temptation, and your worst danger."

Selected from the "Life of Mrs. Graham."

An Extract.

The "fruitful old age" of the christian believer is happily exemplified in the following extract from one of Mrs. G.'s letters:—

"I am daily on the lookout; one year and three months will complete my "threescore and ten." I do not know one individual alive whom I knew in my school-days. I do not long for my dismission, neither am I tired of life, of which I have enjoyed so much; enjoyed its dearest, sweetest comforts, love and friendship, with a heart tremblingly alive to both. Lover and friends of youth are long since gone; other friendships I formed, and have been happy even in those, now I am shut up with ails and aches. The world is a dead blank to me; yet I do think I never enjoyed life more. I would not exchange my present happiness for the most transporting moments of my life, of which I have had a large share, though thousands of years were added to enjoy them. I do not mean barely that happiness which consists in the anticipation of pleasure beyond the grave; that is indeed delightful, but I enjoy life now. Books of taste are mine no more; still less those of science and history, but my dear Bible, precious subjects! my dear Savior—the heighth, the depth, the breadth, the length of the glorious plan of redemption, open to my delightful perception more and more; and the Spirit witnesseth with my spirit that I have my part in it by the gifts of faith. I believe the record that God giveth to us eternal life, and I put in my claim as a sinner. I account it a 'faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am the chief.' I still enjoy the ordinances of the gospel. My memory is much impaired; I recollect very little of the sermons I hear, but I think I never heard with so much attention. I am delighted, instructed, and fed at the time, and the subjects open to me without my being able to recollect the order or the words of the speaker. O! let me recommend this dear Lord to your heart and confidence. Commit all your concerns to him; mistrust no part of his providential dealings with you; his wisdom shall manage for you, and you shall one day say, 'He hath done all things well.'"

Anecdotes of Prince Albert.

It is said of Prince Albert that he had a very great aversion to expensive funerals, and that his own was conducted in that quiet and unostentatious manner which was so thoroughly in accordance with his ideas when living. In the domestic circle he was the most impartial of fathers. Finding the Prince of Wales at fault once among a party of lads with whom he was at play, he took him among them and made him apologize for his rudeness, notwithstanding they were only the sons of sturdy yeomen. He delighted to assist the poor, and would design buildings for them upon the most economical plan, and lend his aid in their construction. He was in the habit of relating, with a great deal of merriment, an adventure he had once with a boy who had charge of cows which the Prince desired to take a look at. The boy not knowing His Royal Highness, threatened to set the dog on him. The Prince explained that he was Prince Albert. "Oh!" said the bumpkin, placing his thumb to his nose and extending his digits, "W-a-l-k-e-r,"—an intimation that he did not believe the story, and that his visitor must leave. In his household he invariably threw off all official dignity. A disturbance arose between him and the Queen, at the end of which the Prince retired to his room. Victoria, believing herself to be at fault, came to his door about an hour afterwards and knocked. "Who is there?" said the Prince. "The Queen," was the reply. "I do not open my door for the Queen," he answered. Victoria immediately said in a subdued tone, "It is your wife," and the door was opened at once.

For the Crisis.

To the "Try Company."

DEAR CHILDREN:—A few more words to you. Yesterday (Sunday) was an interesting day to me. In the morning, as usual, I attended the Mission Sunday School at Tremont Temple; and at noon, the Sabbath School connected with the church. At the close of the school, five little boys retired to one corner of the room, and after one of them had read a chapter in the Bible, they all knelt down and began to pray. Soon after, one of them went to a teacher and told him that one of the boys was anxious to find the Savior, and wanted him to come and pray with him. A number of the teachers, and others, gathered around, and while singing a hymn, no less than fifteen little boys and girls were found on their knees, all praying at once, and thirteen of them gave good evidence that they had submitted to God. It was such a sight as the oldest christian present had never before seen.

In the evening, I heard a number of them get up in the large prayer meeting and testify their love to the Savior. They have begun to try to be good; and if they have indeed given all to Christ, this trying will be the most important effort in their lives. There have been meetings in this place almost every evening for about six weeks, and a large number of conversions, both young and old.

And now, let me invite all the little boys and girls, who read the Crisis, to make the TRIAL, in earnest, to be good, and love God with all your hearts, and ask him to prepare you to meet him in his kingdom.

Will some of the "Try Company" answer the following questions:—

1. Where in the Bible do we find any thing said about using the rod of correction?

2. How can a child best please his parents? D. N. SMITH.

For the Crisis.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—I have a desire to join the "Try Company." I like the Crisis very much. I like to peruse its columns. I look to see if there is anything for the children first, and feel very much disappointed if there is none.

S. U. BARKER.

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT.—I am a little boy ten years old. I want to join the "Try Company." I use neither strong drink nor tobacco. I like the Crisis; and I am glad that you are devoting some of its columns for the benefit of children, for I like to read them. I will answer the second and fourth questions,—David and Enoch.

EMERSON E. BARKER.

For the Crisis.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—I am fourteen years old. I neither use intoxicating liquor, nor use tobacco in any of its forms, and never intend to. I wish to become a member of the "Try Company." I will answer the other two questions, the 2d and the 4th, and also propose one for the "Try Company." 2d, Jubal's; 4th, Methuselah.

My question is, who was the first monarch spoken of in the Bible? Will some little boy or girl who belongs to the 'Try Company" answer this?

SHERMAN ONGLEY.

Blooming Valley, Feb. 9th, '62.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a little girl twelve years old. I use no strong drink nor tobacco in any form. I would like to join your "Try Company." I can answer your questions. 1st, Recchabites; 2d, Jubal's; 3d, at the judgment; 4th, Methuselah; 5th, the Bible. MARY E. HASTINGS.

Hebron, Feb. 5th, 1862.

[The questions are in the Crisis of Jan. 15th, '62.—ED.]

For the Crisis.

BRO. GRANT:—I like the plan of the "Try Company," and would like to become a member. In this town there is a "Band of Hope." The pledge is "to abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, from tobacco, and from all profanity." I am a member. All under eighteen years of age can join. It is over one year since I joined, and I have not broken my pledge yet, nor do I intend to.

I answer the following questions:—Abram was the father of Moses. Sinners are to be chased out of the world. Goliah was nine feet nine inches high. Og, king of Bashan, slept on an iron bedstead. Obadiah hid one hundred prophets in a cave, and fed them on bread and water. Sinners will appear at the left hand of God. I think that Moses first prophesied of Christ. You will find it is Deut. 18: 15. Enoch is the oldest man living.

I would like to ask the following questions:—How old was Abraham's wife when she died? Who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper roots for their meat? Who is the author of the following riddle, and what does it mean?—"Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." Who requested that he might die?

DANIEL L. GRIGGS, 13 years old.

Brimfield, Mass., Feb. 16, '62.

For the Crisis.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—As you require recruits for your "Try Company," I have resolved to become a member, if you will accept me on trial. I have never belonged to any such company. I am thirteen years old. I can answer the questions in the Crisis of Jan. 15th, which are as follows:—

First, the Rechabites. Second, Asaph's family. Third, the resurrection. Fourth, the oldest man was Methuselah. Fifth, the Bible. If you will accept me as a recruit, I will try and be a faithful soldier in service of the officers in command. I have the Crisis every week to read, which I like very much. It is all the preaching we that love the doctrine of the personal coming of Christ, have.

Yours truly, MARIAH WESTON.

"A little Child shall lead them."

An esteemed clergyman writes us:—"Very recently a little boy in my parish, only six years of age, was sent by his mother to fetch his father from a public-house. He found his parent drinking with some other men, one of whom invited the little fellow to take some beer. Firmly, and at once, the boy replied,

'No, I can't take that, I am in the Band of Hope.'

The men looked at one another, but no one was found to repeat the temptation. The man then said,

'Well, if you won't take the beer, here's a penny for you to buy some "bull's eyes."' (A kind of sugar confectionary.)

The boy took the penny, and said, 'I thank you; but I'd rather not buy "bull's eyes," I shall put it in the Penny Bank.'

The men again looked at one another, and for some moments were entirely silent. At length one of them rose, and gave utterance to his feelings in these words:—

'Well, I think the sooner we sign the pledge, and put our savings in the Penny Bank the better.'

The man immediately left the house. Such was the effect of the two wise speeches of a boy only six years old. How many older people have made much longer but less effective speeches! 'A little child shall lead them!'"—Band of Hope Review.

"I'm Growing Old."

BY S. S. BREWER.

I'm growing old, my strength of manhood's past,
I dread cold winter's reign,
Its stormy winds and blast;
I'm growing old, my health is getting poor,
I suffer more with aches
Than all my life before.

I'm growing old and losing fast my sight,
I need the aid of specs
To see to read and write;
I'm growing old, I cannot step so light,
My hair is falling off,
And what remains is white.

I'm growing old; alas! I cannot sing,
As in my younger days,
Sweet praises to my King.
I'm growing old, yet still I love to ride
O'er mountain, hill and vale,
To seek my Lord's bride.

I'm growing old; the earth looks sad and drear;
I mourn departed friends,
The few still left are dear.
Time too is growing old, to me it oft appears
To hurry up its plans,
Crowd centuries into years.

The earth is growing old! O! how it groans and shakes,
'Tis burdened full of woe,
It trembles, throbs and quakes.
And heavens are growing old, ofttimes upon its brow
Alarming sights are seen,
And fiery meteors glow.

Earth shall be young again, as fair as Adam trod
In vernal beauty clad,
With garniture of God.
The heavens shall be new, and 'neath their placid dome
The morning stars shall sing,
The ransomed find a home.
O! then I shall be young, from mortal ills be free,
With Christ my living Head
Share IMMORTALITY.

The Opening of the Fourth Seal.

NUMBER FOUR.

"And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth."—REV. 6: 7, 8.

Evidently, two cotemporaneous instruments of destruction are brought to view in the text; Death on the pale horse, and Hell on the black horse, holding a pair of balances in his hand, verse 5; and power was given unto them, plural, showing that more than one is intended by the figure. The history of the world since the Christian era presents no two cotemporaneous powers, which, for extent of dominion, and duration in time, so exactly correspond to the figure, as those of Popery and Mohammedanism. I suppose the sealed book contained all that John was commissioned to reveal; and that a sketch is given by significant emblems, as the seals are opened, of the principal events affecting the Christian church during that period in the history of the world embraced under each seal. The opening of the third seal presents Mohammedanism, or the little horn of Dan. 8; the opening of the fourth seal presents Popery, or the little horn of Dan. 7. The balances in the hand of the rider upon the black horse have generally been regarded as an emblem of famine. Says Scott, "The balances denoted, that in the times referred to, there would be a great scarcity of provisions, so that men would have their food weighed out to them with great exactness, as it is done when any company is reduced to short allowance." Why then did not the Revelator express the quantity of grain to be given for a penny by weight, and not by measure? See margin. "To kill with hunger," is certainly as strong an indication of famine, as a pair of balances. The Greek word zugos, which our translators have here rendered "a pair of balances," is, in 1 Tim. 6: 1, translated yoke. "Let as many servants as are under the yoke," etc. Also Acts 15: 10,—"Now therefore why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples," etc. Again, Gal. 5: 1,—"Be not entangled again in the yoke of bondage." With equal propriety might zugos have been rendered yoke in Rev. 6: 5,—"And he that sat on him had a yoke in his hand"; for the same word zugos in the Greek signifies both a yoke in the singular, and in the plural a balance or a pair of scales. It will give light upon this double signification of the Greek word, to know that the ancient yoke and balance beam were similar in form, being merely a straight stick with a chain attached to the middle. When used for a yoke, each end was bound to the neck of an animal; when used for weighing, a scale was attached to each end at equal distances from the middle, suspended by the chain.

The yoke is an emblem of subjugation and bondage, and is so used by the Lord himself, Deut. 28: 48, when foretelling the calamities that should come upon the Jews for their sins.—"Therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things; and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee." Yokes of a different form were fitted to the human neck, in which slaves were made to labor. Such yokes Jeremiah was directed to make, and put upon his own neck, and also send to the surrounding nations as a sign of their subjugation to the king of Babylon. Jer. 27. The breaking of the yoke from off the neck was a sign of deliverance from bondage. Thus Jeremiah, when foretelling the deliverance of Israel from the Babylonian captivity, says, 30: 8,—"For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him" (Israel).

But this prophecy must look beyond the deliverance of the Israelites from the Babylonian captivity; for after that deliverance they were again subjugated, first by the Grecians, and suffered severely under the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes; and lastly by the Romans, from which subjugation they have never yet been delivered. But they were under the Roman yoke when the Revelator wrote; therefore the yoke in the hand of the rider upon the black horse symbolized not merely temporal subjugation, but also spiritual tyranny; and the famine, which seems implied both by the quantity of grain to be given for a penny, and killing with hunger, is the famine foretold by the prophet Amos 8: 11-13,—"Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it. In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst." In this sense a famine has prevailed all over the land of Canaan, where the Jews dwelt at the time this prophecy was uttered, ever since the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. It has also prevailed in all lands under the papal dominion, where the reading of the Scriptures was forbidden to the common people, and they were not permitted to own a Bible. It has also prevailed in all lands where the Koran of Mohammed has been substituted for the word of God. The virgins cloistered in Romish nunneries, and the young men secluded in monasteries, seem also to have been foretold by the prophet, as they were by Paul, 1 Tim. 4: 3,—"Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats."

We learn from the history of the church, that as early as the days of the apostles attempts were made to connect the Jewish laws and customs with the Christian dispensation, by a certain sect of the believing Pharisees. Acts 15: 5. This Peter calls, verse 10, "tempting God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear." As the stream of christianity flowed further from its pure fountain, it became more and more corrupt; as centuries advanced, ignorance and superstition increased; and unauthorized mortifications and penances, rigorous fastings, vows of celibacy, monkish retirement and austerities, stylitism, the jargon and repetition of prayers not understood, tales of purgatory, pious frauds, and the worship of saints, relics, and images, took the place of pure and simple christianity: till at length, the book of God being laid aside for legendary tales, and the "traditions of men," all these corruptions were collected into a regular system of superstitious oppression, well known by the name of the "Papal yoke." The Eastern church kept pace with the Western for some time, in the introduction of burdensome and unauthorized observances; and the Mohammedan religion was introduced into the Eastern church by the power of the sword, as an improvement upon the corrupted Jewish and Christian, and has imposed its yoke upon its numerous followers in those extensive regions where it prevails; and even to this day the land of the Jews is under the Mohammedan yoke: "and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished."—Dan 12: 7.

"For lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of Israel and Judah, saith the Lord; and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it. . . . Alas! for that day is great, so that none is like it; it is even the time of Jacob's trouble, but he shall be saved out of it. For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him (Jacob): but they (my people) shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them."—Jer. 30: 3, 7-9.

Thus, if I have rightfully interpreted the prophets, the Mohammedan yoke is the last that will be placed upon the neck of the Lord's ancient people, until they shall take upon themselves the yoke of Him whose yoke is easy, and his burden light. Matt. 11: 29, 30. But a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation must precede, Dan. 12: 1, out of which Jacob shall be saved, Jer. 30: 7.

For the Crisis.

Human and Divine Government.

NUMBER NINE.

After all that we have said of human governments, and intimated of a divine one, it will be very proper to close this series of articles with a reference to the restoration of God's government on earth. Adam lost his dominion, in Eden, over the earth; lost his inheritance and his life. "The Son of man came to save that which was lost." Matt. 18. Christ will rescue the lost kingdom, its territory, and the life of man. See Matt. 13: 40-46. Consequently we have the promises of God, as in Ps. 2: 8, 9,—"I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." In Ps. 72: 8, "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." In Ps. 89, the oath to David, and in Isa. 9. 6, 7,—Of the increase of his government, to order and establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth even forever, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom." Isa. 11, gives a faithful description of his reign of righteousness. Isa. 32: 1,—Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." In Luke 1: 32, 33, the angel announces the birth of this king, and gives the place and character of his reign.

In the teachings of Christ he shows that he is yet to have a kingdom. "To this end was I born, and for this purpose came I into the world." But "my kingdom is not of this (kosmos) world." He was promulgating the good news of it, and the law which must govern all who should reign in it, and inviting all to adopt it as their rule of life, that they might be worthy to enter into it when established. He gave many statements to show his followers that his kingdom was not set up, but was preparing. He also showed what would take place first,—"For the Son of man is as a man which went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return." So, when the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, and in his own glory, "then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory, and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another . . . . Then shall the king say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31-34. This is the kingdom Adam lost. In Rev. 11: 15, we are told when Christ takes possession of the power to reign, it is at the sounding of the seventh trumpet,—"The kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord." Then in Matt. 13: 40, 44, we are shown that Christ sends his angels to cleanse this dominion of the wicked, that it may be a pure kingdom. In Dan. 2: 44, this kingdom is mentioned, also in Dan. 7: 27, and shown to be on the earth, to be universal, and eternal. Christ says, "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

Such a kingdom is worth enjoying. O! let us consider what a blessed promise is given us of coming from east, west, north, and south, and sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob "in the kingdom of God." Let us remember that it is through much tribulation we must enter the kingdom of God. Let us remember that those who do enter will be those who can say, Thou hast redeemed us by thy blood, out of every nation, kindred, tongue and people . . . and we shall reign on the earth. Then the tabernacle of God shall be with men. Rev. 21: 1, 4. Such, brethren, will be a divine government. I. C. WELLCOME.

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3-14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3-14.

A very important portion of Scripture is that appointed for this day's Epistle, which I have read, and upon which I propose to make a few observations.

The object of these writings of St. Peter, as stated by himself, was to furnish a synopsis of the teachings of both prophets and apostles with respect to the great salvation, and to keep his readers specially admonished as to what they were to expect. And as the substance of evangelical doctrine is contained in his Epistles in general, so the substance of evangelical prediction is contained in this chapter in particular. I cannot enter into all the details, but will select a few topics which may profitably engage our meditations.

I. The first I name, and that which forms the centre in a group of wonders and at once determines the period to which the whole subject relates, is the announcement that Christ is to return again to the earth. It is this doctrine that the whole passage is meant to assert, defend, elucidate, and enforce in its practical bearings. It is a doctrine, also, remarkably prominent in the sacred writings. As a subject of hopeful expectation to the pious, and of terror to the ungodly, it is the most formally, repeatedly, and constantly affirmed. To say nothing about the Old Testament, (which is just as full of it as the New,* but which does not always distinguish very clearly between the first Advent and the second,) there is hardly a chapter in all the evangelical writings which does not in some way refer to it.† The Savior himself, during his lifetime, spoke largely of a period when the mourning tribes of the earth "shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory," and when "he shall send his angels, with a great sound of a trumpet, to gather his elect from the four winds." (See Matt. 24; 25; Luke 21.) The mysterious heavenly personages who appeared when he made his triumphant ascension from the Mount of Olives said to those who witnessed it, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1. 9-11.) Paul declares that "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God." (1 Thess. 4: 16) In the Epistle to the Hebrews we read that "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9: 28.) Peter says of himself and his follow-apostles, "We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 1: 16.) John says, "Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him. Even so, Amen." (Rev. 1: 7.) And in the very last words which close the canon of Scripture it is written, "I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. . . . Surely I come quickly; Amen." (Rev. 22: 16-20.) I know not of another doctrine of the gospel that is announced with more perspicuity or solemnity. Christ's birth of the Virgin Mary is not more explicitly and unequivocally asserted, or more certainly attested, than his return again to the earth as literally and truly as he went up out of it. Nor is there a Creed in Christendom, so far as I know, which does not embrace it as an essential part of the Church's faith. "He shall come to judge the quick and the dead," says the Creed which bears the name of The Apostles'. "He shall come again with glory," says the Synod of Nice. "We believe that thou shalt come to be our judge," has been for ages sung in the Te Deum. The great Confession of Augsburg affirms that "Christ shall openly come again to judge them that are found alive, and restore to life those that be dead, according to the Creed of the Apostles." "He ascended into heaven, and there sitteth, until he return to judge all men at the last day," says the Church of England. "We do believe, out of the word of God, that our Lord Jesus Christ shall come again from heaven, and that after a corporal and visible manner, as heretofore he hath ascended, being adorned with great glory and majesty, that he may appear as Judge of quick and dead," says the Confession of Belgia. And with the same unequivocal fulness is this article incorporated in all our hymn-books and liturgies, celebrated in our sacred songs, woven into our very prayers, and uttered over the graves of our friends as we consign their bodies to the ground. Indeed, it is one of the great mountain-peaks of Christianity,—one of the three grand particulars in which its sublimest substance lies. The Incarnation, The Cross, and The Second Coming are the stems upon which every thing distinctive in Christianity is suspended, to which its whole doctrinal system is adjusted, and upon which the hopes of the world depend. To strike out either one of these would be to mangle the Scriptures from end to end, to stifle the voice of prophets and apostles, to spoil the noblest of Christian utterances in the days of the Church's greatest purity, and to emasculate religion itself.

If Christianity, then, can teach us anything, or if the declarations of the Scriptures are at all binding upon us, as we profess to believe that they are, we must accept it as a truth, and rely upon it as an infallible verity, that the same Jesus who was born at Bethlehem, crucified on Calvary, and received up into heaven from Mount Olivet is literally and personally to return again to this world, to be seen with our eyes and heard with our ears, as he was seen and heard in the day that he was taken up. If this be not true, there is no truth in language, no inspiration in the Bible, no substance in our faith, no reality in the Christian's hopes. The methods of interpretation which can explain away this doctrine, or detach it from the teachings and joyous expectations of the prophets and apostles, must, at the same rate, silence all that we have hitherto heeded as the oracles of God, and leave us in a world of darkness with our only lights suddenly and forever extinguished. I accordingly accept and declare it, as a doctrine that must stand or fall with Christianity itself, that Jesus is literally and personally, and with great power and glory, to return again to this world, once more to tread the localities already hallowed to his Church by his miracles and prayers and tears and blood.

* "There is scarcely a prophecy in the Old Testament concerning Christ, that doth not, in something or other, relate to his second coming."—Sir Isaac Newton on Dan., p. 132.

"The same oracles which attest the first coming of Christ, as if impatient to be confined to so narrow bounds, overflow, as it were, into the future age, and expatiate on the principal facts and circumstances of his second coming."—Hurd on the Prophecies, pp 129, 130.

"It would be very difficult to select any one entire prophecy from the Old Testament, supposed to relate to this event, [Messiah's coming,] which was in all its principal particulars accomplished at our Lord's first coming. So far, indeed, as any importance may be attached to the general expectation of the Israelitish Church before that period, scarcely any of the things which they looked for and mused upon were fulfilled at the first Advent."—Brooks' Elements of Prophetical Interpretation, p. 119.

"The coming of Christ is the leading subject of the prophecies, both of the Old and New Testament, either as relates to his first or second coming; and these are often intimately connected together, especially in the Old Testament."—Bickersteth's Guide to the Prophecies, p. 69.

† "We affirm, that THE REDEEMER'S SECOND APPEARING IS THE VERY POLE-STAR OF THE CHURCH. That it is so held forth in the New Testament, is beyond dispute."—Christ's Second Coming, by Rev. D. Brown, D.D., p. 14.

"I am sure that any individual, who has not made the subject a matter of previous investigation, would be surprised at the result of an attentive research, by discovering how frequently the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is, in Scripture, brought before the believer's view as an event which he ought to keep in constant recollection, to stimulate him to incessant watchfulness and untiring patience in running the race set before him."—White on the Second Advent, p. 13.

"This was the great theme on which St. Paul dwelt, to animate the first christians in their trials and to console them in their afflictions. . . . It is the principal topic of the Apocalypse of St. John; and to this he especially directs the attention of the first christians."—Very Rev. J. Baptist Pagani's End of the World, p. 1.

"As an incentive to repentance and holiness to sinners,—as a motive for watchfulness, prayer, zeal, and diligence on the part of christian ministers and people,—more prominence is given to it [the Savior's second coming] in the pages of the New Testament than to any other. The apostles never failed to give point and pungency to their warnings and exhortations by solemn reference to the certainty and suddenness of the Lord's coming."—Bishop Henshaw on the Second Advent, p. 220.

For the Crisis.

Don't put out that little spark!

Methinks I see a vessel and crew enclosed in the icy mountains of the polar ocean; the very breeze that fans their brows is like the breath of the king of terrors. With hands benumbed, and icy shudders circling around their hearts, all with one intense interest fan the little spark of the warming element, that, like a star of hope, is left them. It is their savior. If it perishes, death is inevitable. Who among them is so reckless as to extinguish it? it would be madness.

Still more precious is the little spark of love, that through grace flickers in the heart of the erring. Perhaps, like David, they have been overcome by temptation; like Peter, fear may have made them desperate; like Moses, spoken unadvisedly with their lips. Now, brother, sister, do not accuse harshly; there may be a little spark left—a ray; do not extinguish it. Bear a little with them in their folly. But they have injured you—have rendered evil for good? Well, try again; do not give up; if you can gain him you will save a soul from death; they may make a trophy for thy crown. But others have given them up. Never mind. If you make the effort and do not succeed, the Blessed One will add a tear, an effort, to your treasure, a larger room in his loving heart, additional love will sparkle in his eye as he says, "You have done what you could."

Once more I would say, do not put out the spark from thine own heart. Others can never do it without thy consent. If the enemy has cast you down, get up again and say, "Rejoice not over me, thou, mine enemy; though I fall, I shall rise again." Strengthen the things that remain. Be in earnest. A crown is waiting for you. Despise not the day of small things. This little germ may become a tree, with blossoms and fruit. This drop will swell into an exhaustless ocean; depths of wisdom and beauty are in it. Cherish it as the last price that may be put in thy hand to gain wisdom—the last vital spark that may tremble in the frail casket of clay—the last star that may light the moral darkness of thy sky. In consideration of all Jesus has done and will do, of his sacrifice and intercession, of the worth of eternal life, I once more repeat, don't put out that little spark! Then God will say, "Thou art mine." Isa. 53: 1.

Blessed assurance, tender, most endearing,
While tossing on the stormy wave of time;
Calmly I view the white-capped breakers nearing,
A stronger arm than mine my bark is steering,
And softly whispering to me, "thou art mine."

Human Ghostology.—No. 8.

XI. PHILOSOPHIC ARGUMENTS FOR GHOSTOLOGY EXAMINED. 1st. We are told that the soul is indivisible, therefore not material, and consequently immortal, and capable of living separate from the body, as a distinct entity, or ghost-man. If the soul is indivisible, it cannot be transmitted; hence, a propagation of the species has no connection with the origin of the human soul; therefore God directly creates souls to infuse into each child that is born into the world, including illegitimates. Who dare take the blasphemous position that God is thus daily sanctioning adultery? The Bible clearly proves that the soul is divisible. "Deliver me; lest he tear my soul like a lion, rending it in pieces."—Ps. 7: 2. How could you rend an immaterial ghost in pieces? "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob, were seventy souls."—Ex. 1: 5. Souls are transmitted, therefore divisible.

2nd. We are informed that the existence of a mind in man proves the indwelling of a conscious entity,—that mind is not a property of matter, else all matter would think. With the same propriety I might affirm that instinct is not a property of matter, else all matter would possess instinct. It is true that unorganized matter possesses neither mind or instinct; but to deny that matter can be so organized as to produce mind, would be to smother the evidence that daily crowds itself upon us. Every observing person can plainly see that the beasts have a limited measure of mind; and no one will be foolish enough to claim that this is evidence of the indwelling of a beast entity, or ghost-beast. The Bible adds its testimony in support of the fact that the beast possesses mind. "The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib."—Isa. 1: 3. Beasts know something, and therefore have minds; and if the existence of mind in man proves a man inside of a man, then the existence of mind in the beast proves a beast inside of a beast. Take the consequences, or abandon the premises.

Again: we have but to observe the changes and misfortunes of the mind, to be convinced that it is dependent upon the body for existence, instead of being an inside ghost-man.

Firstly: mind is feeble in infancy. Secondly: it gradually developes itself. Thirdly: it becomes childish again in old age. Fourthly: it is affected by sickness. Fifthly: it gets deranged. Is it an inside ghost that gets deranged? if so, may it not continue insane after leaving the body, or even get insane out of the body, and thus heaven and hell be interspersed with crazy ghosts?

Again: death kills the thinking part of man. "In that very day [of man's death], his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4.

3rd. It is said that the mind continues to act while the body is dormant in sleep, thus showing that it is an entity distinct from the body;—that man dreams. So do beasts dream. Again, while it is true that the mind continues its action imperfectly while the body is reposing in sleep, it is also true that the blood continues to circulate, and that the process of breathing continues. Shall we therefore conclude that the blood and the breath are independent entities, because they continue their action while the body is asleep?

4th. Mind is often brilliant just before death. This is owing to the nature of the disease, and proves nothing concerning the independent existence of the mind, for if the mind has power enough to recover itself from the greatest power of disease, it should have had power enough to have withstood the inferior attack of disease, instead of yielding thereto. Mind is inseparably connected with the body, and dies with it.

XII. SCRIPTURAL PROOF EXAMINED.—We are referred to the following texts to prove the disembodied existence of souls.

1. Gen. 15: 15;—"And thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace." "Thou," not thy soul. If reference is here made to Abraham's soul instead of Abraham itself, it must have been a sad declaration; for Abraham's fathers were wicked idolaters, and consequently were in hell according to modern theology. How much would it have cheered Abraham to have been told that his soul should go to hell? But if the meaning was that Abraham's soul should go to heaven, then heaven must be the home of those idolaters!!! But the rest of the text makes it all plain; "Thou shalt be buried in a good old age." He was to be with them in the realms of earth,—not in heaven or hell.

2. 1 Chron. 17: 11;—"And it shall come to pass, when thy days be expired that thou must go to be with thy fathers." Not thy soul shall go to be with thy fathers' souls. If a soul has a soul-father, then indeed souls are transmitted; and if transmitted, they are divisible; and if divisible, they are destructible; hence, not immortal. "Thou [David] shalt go to be with thy fathers." How and where? Let the apostle answer: "For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep, and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."—Acts 13: 36. David himself went to be with his fathers in the realms of death and "corruption."

3. Gen. 35: 18; "As her soul was in departing. The original term nephesh, here rendered soul, is translated "life" and lives one hundred and twenty times, and is as really applied to beasts as to human beings. "A righteous man regardeth the life [nephesh] of his beast."—Prov. 12: 10. "In whose hand is the soul [nephesh] of every living thing."—Job 12: 10. "As her life was in departing" is the true idea.

4. 1 Kings 17: 21; "Let this child's soul come unto him again." The term "nephesh" is also used here. The prophet was not praying to call a soul back from heaven, but simply for the child's nephesh, or life. The term soul, when used in a secondary sense, signifies life; but life is not an entity. "Let this child's life come into him."

5. 1 Sam. 27: 19; "And to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me." Thus spoke Samuel to Saul. If allusion is made to the soul, it will prove too much. Samuel was a good man; hence, according to modern theology, he must go to heaven at death; therefore, for the soul of wicked Saul to be with the soul of Samuel, it must have gone to heaven also. Or, if Saul died first, and went to hell, in order for their souls to have been together, Samuel's soul must also have gone to hell!!! They were simply to be together in the great bed of death.

6. 2 Sam. 12: 23; "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me." Thus spoke David concerning his deceased child. He did not say, my ghost shall go to his ghost, but "I shall go to him" in the dark prison of death.

7. Eccl. 3: 21; "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" While this text speaks of "the spirit of man," it just as plainly speaks of "the spirit of the beast;" hence, if we claim that the spirit of man signifies an invisible man, we shall be compelled to the conclusion that the "spirit of the beast" signifies an invisible beast; for the term spirit in both instances is from the same original ruach, and in the preceding verse the declaration is made that "they have all one ruach." Who believes in the existence of spirit beasts? Who believes in the existence of a land where ghost-lions roar, where ghost-wolves howl, where ghost-dogs bark, where ghost-hogs squeal, and ghost-cattle low? Yet if the text teaches the existence of a ghost entity in man, it just as strongly teaches the existence of a ghost-entity in the beast. Man has a spirit, and so has the beast; but neither have an internal spirit entity. W. SHELDON.

☞ When the thrones of earth have crumbled to a heap of ruins, when all governments have been dissolved, and their records and monuments are forgotten, the dignity and worth of the christian will shine in the glory of those who have been guided by its light to honor and immortality.

For the Crisis.

What is the Matter?

There is hardly a place we go to now-a-days but we find some kind of trouble. These are perilous times for us as a people. Paul's prophecy of the last day perils applies directly to us. You will see they are for a people that have come out—separated themselves—or that have withdrawn from the formalists of the last days, that deny the power, and tolerate all kinds of wickedness and pleasure in the church. This of course would bring opposition from the different dead or lukewarm bodies we have left, they all having suffered loss more or less from our turning away; hence we see a combination of different sects following us up as the Egyptians did Moses and his host, because all the workmen had left. See 2 Tim. 3: 1–9, which Paul meant directly for this class of come-outers in the last days. We have filled that prophetic mould thus far, and now are being withstood by the same spirit of opposition with which Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses; i. e., the spirit of Egyptian enchantments, of seven different grades, as you will see classed in Deut. 18: 10, 11,—the living going to the dead for light and knowledge. Who opposes us in contending for the Bible truth? The Spiritualists. In what way? By pretending to work miracles by the help of angels. Who furnishes ammunition for them? The old dead, dark theology of the present generation, that has neglected this dispensational prophetic light and truth, and is in total darkness concerning these and other signs that God has given us by the prophets. Christ and the apostles have drawn the daguerreotype of these anti-christians, and says their motive power is the spirit of devils working miracles, to deceive if possible the very elect. We are the elect as a people to do this work of showing the world what these demons are doing, and that accounts for our hard warfare against spiritual wickedness in high places, or circles. Our past foes are the Spiritualists. This they admit themselves. The churches furnish them material to fight us with. See a piece of poetry from a religious paper, and it is the doctrine held by every pretended evangelical church in our modern Egypt.

"THE LITTLE ANGELS."

"There's many an empty cradle,
There's many a vacant bed,
There's many a lonesome bosom,
Whose joys and life have fled;
For thick in every graveyard
The little hillocks lie,
And every hillock represents
An angel in the sky."

Now if this is not the foundation of antichrist Spiritualism, what is? One class casts the bombs, and another comes out boldly into the field and fires them at us. Why? Because we stand up for the truth of the plain teaching of the Bible. This war will still wax hotter, but the few will get the victory and kingdom, thank God.

The above are not all the difficulties we have to contend with. We find traitors among us, and many civilians that pretend to be loyal to our truth, who find it easier to legislate on these great truths than to go out and defend them in open combat. They like to be dictators, or get an office of some kind—General, or Colonel, Captain, or even Corporal. Such carry their colors under their jacket. But these trials now are stripping off their outside garments, and showing who is equipped for this war. Some will be determined to have their kind of projectile fired every shot, whether the enemy feel it or not, even if it was first forged in Egypt, and condemned years ago by God's warriors; and still contend these are effectual, and will draw off if we do not use them. Others think so much of a popular manual exercise, that a show of military display is all they desire or have got. No one is wounded by such warriors, of course. If such nice soldiers as these see some wounded, they will draw back and lessen the ranks. Others, inventing some new way to fight at a great distance, even pretend that their shot will reach to the next age, which we have not come to yet; when we do we will attend to our duty there. But we cannot use their long ranges when the enemy are so near. This offends another class and they are off.

Others are so near nothing, I will say but little about them. They float around just as the tide goes. A blow of wind will capsize them, or one broadside from the enemy will set them skulking in every old hovel that will afford them the least seeming protection from the fire. They will come out occasionally, when all is quiet, to hear preaching, and then run and report what is said and done to the enemy. These are just the busybodies the apostle told us would come in the last days, and if we reprove them, they cry out, These are hard sayings, who can bear them? They wont; and off goes another squad, leasoning the company. Yet God has promised the victory to the few that keep the armor on and face the enemy.

Last and most of all are a set of religious thieves hanging around—will not go off, but stick by, for they get into a position where they can come out and steal their preaching, and dodge out just before the collection is taken up, to go to some important business, perhaps to get home to do their chores on their farm they have bought four or five miles off, on purpose to dodge the responsibility of supporting the truth they pretend to love; while a [illegible] have the burden to bear, or let the meeting run down. Can such misers get into the kingdom? I think not. But never fear, little flock, God will give the poor of this world the kingdom, with all its blessings.

"Taken for Granted."

A PROPOSAL.

We have all heard it said that the immortality of the soul is assumed or taken for granted in the Bible. That is the reason, we are told, why it is nowhere expressly said in the Scriptures that man is immortal. It is claimed that this doctrine is so plain that there was no need of its being directly asserted in the volume of Revelation. And if any one doubts the doctrine, it is because he lacks that common religious sense which recognizes the primary truths of religion.

Now it is sometimes rather hard to refute, by a good and sound argument, the assertion that such or such a doctrine is to be taken for granted. If my neighbor tells me that such a fixed star is made of copper, and that is so plain that no sane man doubts it, I might shake my head in doubt, or I might plumply deny it; but to refute his assertion would be another matter.

I do not undervalue the argument which abounds in the Scriptures, directly denying the alleged immortality of man. But I have observed that it often fails to convince. Those who fancy that man's immortality is assumed in the Bible will stick there, and must be refuted on their own grounds. You may bombard them all day and all the week with the plain language of the Scripture; but their position is such that all this plain language takes on a metaphorical sense, and not the first shot hits them. Hence we must do what was done at Fort Donelson. We must plant a force on the enemy's ground. We must enter the strong hold, and show what weak stuff it is made of. We must compare this alleged doctrine of assumed immortality, with some doctrine that is assumed in the Bible, if any great doctrine is thus assumed.

Now it is allowed that the existence of God is a primary truth of religion, and is so plain to every man of any religious sense or capacity, that it is accordingly taken for granted in the Bible. And sometimes they who assert man's absolute immortality have joined these two doctrines together, and have said that they are both alike assumed in the Bible. Thus a late reviewer has said, "Christ's teachings presuppose monotheism and immortality." This gives just the opportunity of comparison that we wish. It gives the pou sto of Archimedes, the standing place from which the world can be moved. And we refute the alleged assumption by showing, in the comparison, that the truly assumed doctrine is named and mentioned, in plain language, hundreds and thousands of times in the Bible, and the falsely assumed doctrine is named not once.

This argument, legitimate as a methodical refutation, overwhelming in its numerical feature, and interesting and instructive in some of its ramifications, has been something of a favorite with me. I have given, or tried to give it to the public in each of my books. And with such success that I have got just three manifestly hobbling replies to it from among fifteen reviewers; and other men, good judges of reasoning, regard it as my main scriptural argument, which must certainly be answered if the common doctrine is to be maintained.

But I would like, ere I resign the carpet bag, to give the argument to a larger public. A tract can be sent where a book can be neither sold nor given. I would incur the risks and expenses of the tract, but I should get out of debt so much later, and I can hardly bear the thought of that. But I will risk two-fifths of the expense, if the readers of the Crisis and the Harbinger will venture the rest, and take pay in the tracts at cost. The argument will make twenty-four pages. To stereotype and print twenty-five hundred copies will cost fifty dollars. That is two dollars the hundred. If the friends think the argument is no mere whim or petty conceit of mine, but something which a few more readers will find it hard to answer, they shall be welcome to it at twenty copies for fifty cents, and at cost for a larger number, when these two papers have raised $15 each.

My tracts of twenty-four pages are sold singly at five cents, which is about the price current. This enables me and others to give away a few scores or hundreds monthly. I have never made nor wished to make a dime by pamphleteering—only not to get in debt by it.

"Meat in Due Season."

Let it not be forgotten that God's last great dispensational truth is in opposition to the cry, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and is therefore the announcement of the Savior's advent near. Keep it before the church: it is "meat" to them. Keep it before the world: it is their warning. Let the cry come from hearts all on fire with the sacred theme, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Let it be the outbursting of hearts burning with divine zeal, and filled with solemnity. Let the cry wax louder, and still louder. Let other themes be tributary to this proclamation. W. The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, March 5, 1862.

Close of the Volume.

Our readers will observe that the present is number twenty-five, and that, accordingly, the next will be the last of this volume. We hope all who wish their papers continued will send at once the advance pay for the next volume. We should not like to part with any of our readers, for we have now come to the most interesting period we have ever occupied in our history. The present year will be, no doubt, a very eventful one, and we shall need all the helps we can get in order to keep ready for the great day of the Lord. We shall endeavor to make the "World's Crisis" just such a paper as you will need in these "perilous times." It is our purpose to present a very carefully arranged summary of the news of the day, foreign and domestic, as gathered from the most reliable sources of information; which with the stirring epistles and contributions from the numerous and intelligent writers who enrich our columns, will make a paper which we trust will be a welcome visitor in every christian family.—G.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.—We would say to those who have favored us with their excellent articles, and heart-cheering letters, be patient, and in due time we hope to be able to give them to our readers. If we are not able to publish them all, or as soon as the writer may desire, we will do the best we can. It often happens that we cannot publish all we receive, while at the same time the unpublished matter is just as good as that which is inserted, hence, if an article or letter does not appear, the writer should not conclude that it is rejected for want of merit, for it may be for want of room.

We would recommend to all to express their ideas in as few words as possible, if they would produce the best results. Use plain language, be short, and to the point. Have something to say, say it, and stop.—G.

"This Day."

In an able work by Bowyer, when speaking of Luke 23: 43, relative to the thief on the cross, we find the following:—"I say this day to you," "as some of the ancients in Theophylact, and Hesych, in consonantia Evang. ap. Coleter. vet. mon. tom. iii."

It is evident that the foregoing conveys the true idea in the text. The word rendered semeron, rendered "to-day" in this passage, occurs two hundred and fifty-nine times in the Greek Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. The word is used twenty-four times adjectively, fourteen times without a verb expressed, leaving two hundred and twenty-one times where it is used as an adverb in connection with the verb it qualifies. Of those two hundred and twenty-one occurrences of the word, fifty-one of them precede the verb they qualify, thus favoring the present punctuation of the passage, making it read, "Verily, I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise"; while one hundred and seventy follow the verb they qualify, thus harmonizing with the above quotation from Bowyer. Hence it follows that in the use of the word, there are one hundred and seventy witnesses against fifty-one in favor of putting the comma, in Luke 23: 43, the other side of "to-day"; making it read, "Verily I say unto thee to-day," etc. The latter punctuation is in harmony with all other scripture, and the facts connected with the crucifixion, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension of Christ; while the former contradicts them all.

It should be borne in mind that there are no commas in the original; and that the punctuation of the Scriptures is the work of uninspired men. Any one has a right to alter the pauses in the Bible, provided that, by so doing, he gives a clearer view of the sense of the text.

If any one should find a difficulty, in the arrangement of the words "shalt thou be," in the proposed change of the comma; we would remark that it is entirely optional with the translator, whether it reads "shalt thou be," or, thou shalt be.

The present punctuation in our Bible makes the passage affirm, contrary to the facts in the case, that Christ and the thief went together to paradise the day they hung on the cross; whereas, paradise is the future new earth. It is certain that paradise is not in the grave (hades), for the Savior tells us in Rev. 2: 7, that "the tree of life . . . is in the midst of the paradise of God"; but "the tree of life" is not IN hades, but is to be restored upon the new earth, as we learn from Rev. 22: 2; where John is describing the "new earth" with its "holy city," and says, "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month." These Scriptures prove positively that paradise is to be restored with its "tree of life" as it was when Adam lived in innocence with his happy companion. When this takes place, the Savior will have come into his kingdom, where the thief wished to be remembered.—G.

The Prospect.

Success is attending the Federal troops in all directions, and the hope is strong in many minds that the war will soon close, and that good times are at hand; but we see no bright beams of prosperity for this world till Jesus comes and sets up his kingdom. He alone can set things right. All the efforts of men have been and will prove abortive. Every year brings further proof of the increasing selfishness of mankind, and their utter inability to remodel and improve the corrupt governments of the age. While they flatter themselves at the introduction of each new system that success will attend their efforts, they find sooner or later that they have only made a more signal failure. Such, no doubt, will be the result in the present war beyond all comparison with the past. It is evident that our days of prosperity, as a nation, are in the past. Our constitution does not acknowledge God, and the people seem to have forgotten his past mercies and blessings, and are now trusting an arm of flesh instead of "the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity."

The wickedness of all nations is now great and the harvest is at hand. Soon the angels will begin their wonderful work. How little do the masses of our race realize what is coming. They are dreaming of bright days for our world, without a Savior. They are as careless as the Antediluvians the day before the flood began, or the Sodomites the night they endeavored to break into the house of Lot, while the angels were warning the good man of the approaching doom of the city. If it were not so, then the Scripture would be broken, for Jesus has instructed us that when he returns, the people will be as they were in the days of Noah and Lot. "They knew not" till the hour of destruction burst upon them; yet they had been faithfully warned in season to escape, had they only believed the men sent by the Lord. So it is now. But the faithful watchmen who are sounding the alarm are treated like Lot when he went to his sons-in-law, to tell them of the approaching destruction of Sodom. Mockery and scorn are the reward of their labors. Their prayers, entreaties and tears are turned aside and considered but the follies of bigots, or fools, and are objects for fun in many of the gatherings of popular church members, "who are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God."—G.

"Cling not to me."

There is a passage in John 20: 17, which is veiled with obscurity as it now reads, which is as follows:—"Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father." We have often wondered why the Savior was unwilling to have one of his beloved disciples "touch" him after his resurrection. It sounds unlike Jesus. But when we found that the following translation was more in harmony with the original, and expressed the true idea of the text, the whole was plain:—"Jesus saith unto her, cling not to me." Thompson's translation.

Now, when we take the context, all is clear. Mary was clinging unto Jesus with no thought, perhaps, of leaving him to tell others of the good news that he was risen from the dead, hence he says, "Cling not to me; . . . but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father, and to my God and your God." Instead of clinging to him, he wished her to go and inform his brethren of his resurrection, that they might rejoice with her in the glad tidings.—G.

The War.

The war is assuming gigantic proportions, and the Union forces are obtaining a decided advantage over the South. They have nearly surrounded the seceded states, and like the anaconda with its victim, are drawing the cords of union so tight, that there is a fair prospect they may soon crush the rebellion, and cause men to cry "peace and safety," when on the very brink of everlasting ruin. The enemy of all good is sparing no pains to turn the mind from the real event,—the personal coming of the Lord,—to some fable or false issue.

Thousands are dreaming of "a good time coming," when all nations will bow once more to the "stars and stripes," and prosperity fill our cup again; but we see no ground for such a hope. A dark cloud is rising behind the present terrible scene of bloodshed, giving omens, that the worst is yet to come, though in a form somewhat changed from what we now behold.—G.

"The Day of the Lord."

We think our readers will be interested in the series of articles from Joseph A. Seiss, D. D., which we commence this week. His exposition of 2 Pet. 3: 8–14 is one of the best we have ever seen. Do not fail to read the articles. It is cheering to know that there are some men who have their eyes open and dare tell the people what they see. The lecture, from which these articles are taken, was delivered last year in the St. John's (Lutheran) church, Philadelphia.—G.

CORRECTION.—In Bro. I. Fancher's article on "What is truth," in the Crisis of Feb. 19th, near the bottom of the first column, read Benson said, instead of "The serpent said."—G.

The Cause in Boston.

It will be gratifying to our readers to learn that the Second Advent cause in this city is again reviving. Sunday last was a deeply interesting day to the congregation worshiping at Chapman Hall, who have recently effected a more complete organization, and yesterday afternoon set apart two Elders, and four Deacons. They have succeeded in securing the pastoral care of the Rev. F. H. Berick, B. L., who will shortly remove to this city and devote his attention to the care of this faithful and tried people. The congregation yesterday was very large and attentive.

The new congregation recently gathered at Lowell St., have obtained the labors of Eld. Edwin Burnham, late of Philadelphia, for the month of March. We are informed their congregation is good, with a fair prospect of usefulness.

The congregation worshiping at the corner of Hudson and Kneeland Sts. have a beautiful chapel, and is the oldest congregation of Adventists in this city; but with the multiplied obstacles that have seemed inseparable to the Advent cause, their ranks have been greatly thinned; but it is thought their prospects are rather brightening just now. In absence of Eld. Himes, Bro. J. Austin, from Sandy Hill, N. Y., an able and earnest young man, is preaching there, much to the acceptance of the congregation.

The church in East Boston, enjoying for several years past the faithful watch-care of Eld. J. S. White, are now without a pastor, Bro. White thinking it best to dissolve their former relation. They are for the present as sheep without a shepherd. Bro. H. Munger was with them Sunday last.

Eld. G. W. Brown, a faithful gospel preacher, discoursed to the congregation worshiping on the corner of Cambridge and Joy Sts. Of their prospects we are not informed.—M.

FEB. 28. This is the last day of Winter, which seems to take its leave of us as with a dying struggle. All day the wind has been howling at our windows, while it has continued snowing since yesterday, blocking up our railroads so as to prevent travel, and make our mails quite light for the day. We bid the winter a hearty good bye, and welcome the advent of Spring; though it comes like a lion, it is but in keeping with the world around, and we rest in the positive assurance that it is the harbinger of sunnier days, when field and forest, loosed from the death grasp of frosts, shall again bud and blossom—fit types of the millennial dawn.—M.

ELD. I. K. LOMBARD.—This young brother, who has done good service for the cause in Maine for the year past, has recently gone to labor in New Jersey. His centre and P. O. address will be for the present Hammonton, N. J. It is to be hoped, now that he has got near "the seat of war," he will do still better execution in wielding the weapons that are not carnal.—M.

France and Rome.

Rome has become a burdensome stone for the nations of Europe, and must, ere long, be disposed of forever. The Lord is at work among the nations of the earth in a most signal manner at present, preparing them to take the last draught from the bitter cup. They dread to drink, but there is no alternative left. The great image seen by Daniel, in vision, is about to be "broken to pieces," and become "like the chaff of the summer threshing floors." It appears certain that "the God of heaven" will soon "set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it . . . shall stand forever." It is truly sublime to be living in these eventful days, so near the closing scenes of the present dispensation. There is comfort in the thought that sin and misery are soon to come to a perpetual end.

Just before we arrive at the all-important day of retribution, the prophet assures us that the "woman," or "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," seated on the "seven mountains," will become an object of hatred by those who have been her supporters. The eighth head, or Napoleon III., who is evidently the last protector of that "woman," appears to be about ready to withdraw his support and leave her to the mercy of the war dogs of destruction.

A Paris correspondent of the Montreal Witness says:—"The struggle between France and Rome is daily acquiring larger proportions."—G.

Progress of the War.

Nashville, the capital of Tennessee, has surrendered to the Federal troops, without a battle. This was contrary to the expectation of many, as it was a place of much importance to the rebel army. They have fallen back to Murfreesboro, formerly the capital of the State, about thirty-four miles south-east of Nashville, on the Nashville and Chattanooga R. R.

It is expected that we shall soon hear startling news from the field of battle, and of great victories gained by the Federal troops. The latter seem determined not to stop till they have entirely crushed the rebellion. They have gained a most decided advantage over the South within the last three weeks. We are satisfied the war will not close till slavery is abolished; hence we look for stirring times the coming season. All things, in all parts of the world, are rapidly approaching the grand closing scene of this world's history. Let us be ready.—G.

ITALY.—It will be seen by the following, which we glean from the details of the late foreign news, that the people of Italy are gradually but most surely moving on to the final triumph when the "eternal city," Rome, shall be their grand metropolis. The "reconciliation" talked of may sound well, and for a season serve the end contemplated, but students of prophecy will not forget that it is written of the nations, they "shall hate the harlot, and make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire.—M.

THE GOVERNMENT OF ITALY.—The Correspondence Italienne publishes a circular of Baron Ricasoli, addressed to the Prefects, in which he observes:

The government still pursues the execution of the national wishes, and has formally stated by what means and ways it intends to proceed to Rome. The Ministry alone will decide upon these means, and the opportunity of employing them. The dignity and the interests of the nation alike will not permit of its allowing itself to be preceded or hurried away. It is especially important in the Roman question to obtain a great moral triumph, in which the consciences of sincere Catholics, of the civilized world, and of Italy are interested above all others. The government has reason to be satisfied with the success it has obtained. The free Church and the free State together will inaugurate a new order of things, of which the Italians may become the originators. In carrying out the programme of effecting a reconciliation between Italy and the Papacy, the government desires that its labors may not be impeded by inconsiderate acts of enthusiasm and clamorous manifestations. The Prefects should enlighten public opinion, and make use of their authority in order to prevent these popular manifestations taking place."

HERALD OF GOSPEL LIBERTY.—This paper comes to us as usual, but with sundry alterations and improvements, among which are a new editorial corps, (Messrs. D. P. Pike and J. W. Haley,) with vignette, etc. The paper is now in its fifty-fourth year, having the honor to be the oldest religious newspaper on our continent, if not of the world; and is among the best of its kind in the world. The following in Bro. Pike's Salutatory we quite acquiesce in:—M.

"We are in the midst of perilous times, when at any time may be heard, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh.' There is but a narrow margin of time left in which to do this important work of our great mission. The reaping angels may soon appear. There is to be a sharp conflict between truth and falsehood, between right and wrong, between benevolence and selfishness, and between light and darkness. Our ministers and brethren must be christian heroes under the blood stained banner of the cross. We now give heart, head and hand to this cause. . . With us our doctrine is no idle speculation, but the established settled convictions of our belief. For years we have discovered no chance for doubt, and with the growth of years our evidences in its favor increase."

Discussion.

We clip the following from the Jonesville, Mich., Independent:—G.

A THEOLOGICAL DEBATE.

The Methodist preacher of this place, Rev. N. M. Steele, has challenged to a debate, of certain theological points upon which there exists a difference of opinion between them, the Rev. Mrs. M. S. Mansfield, the "Second Advent" preacher. The challenge has been duly accepted by Mrs. M., and the arrangments have already been made for the conduct of the discussion. It will commence on Wednesday evening, March 26th, and continue to Saturday evening, inclusive, or four evenings.

The following are agreed upon as the subjects to be discussed:

Resolved, That the Bible teaches the conscious state of the Dead between Death and the Resurrection.

Affirmative—Rev. Mr. Steele.

Negative—Rev. Mrs. Mansfield.

Resolved, That the Bible does not teach the eternal conscious misery of the Finally Impenitent.

Affirmative—Rev. Mrs. Mansfield.

Negative—Rev. Mr. Steele.

The rules for the conduct of the discussions will be hereafter published; also, the place for holding them. An effort is to be made, we believe, to procure the Presbyterian church (the most commodious house in town) for the purpose, but it having been closed (through the zealous influence of certain parties) to Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield for some time past, its procurement is quite doubtful. Should it not be obtained it is possible the discussion may take place at Hillsdale, for the lack of a church or hall of sufficient capacity.

The controversy will without fail attract a large attendance. The mere fact of a controversial fray between a clerical gent and lady would draw the curious public, and to this will be added the attraction of the acknowledged polemic ability of the latter. Her elocutionary and oratorical power, also, is not by any means second rate.

Should there be no flinching on the part of either disputant prior to the time set for the argument, we may calculate on a pretty severe contest in biblical pugilism.

For the Crisis.

Conference Report.

This meeting was held in the Rechabite Hall, Savoy, commencing Feb. 5th, under very unfavorable circumstances; partly owing to the extreme badness of the going, in consequence of severe snow storms, and partly in consequence of certain errors having been introduced in the church in the which quite a number of our brethren and sisters have fallen, viz., thinking it is right to judge and condemn those that do not think as they do, and also to speak in unknown tongues. Notwithstanding, the Hall was filled to overflowing almost every evening, and on Sunday the Methodists kindly offered us their church, which we occupied Sabbath day and evening; and such was the interest in Bro. Flagg's lectures, he was induced to extend his appointment for two evenings beyond what was expected; and we think great light was brought out in regard to the daily sacrifice being taken away, and the abomination being set up. We were disappointed in not having with us some other preachers who were expected, there being present only Bro. H. K. Flagg and B. Starks; but we were satisfied at the conclusion of the meeting that it was all in the order of the Lord, and that great good was done in removing prejudice from the minds of the people, which had arisen from the introduction of the above named errors, and also in throwing light upon the prophecies in regard to our proximity to the coming of Christ, and to the practical and doctrinal teaching of the Bible; and we trust that the seed sown will result in bringing many to a saving knowledge of the truth, preserving them blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Book Notices.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH."—The following notice of Thessalonica is from "The New Englander," a Congregationalist Quarterly, published in New Haven. The Editor sent for a copy in great haste, and his notice shows how well sectarians like the book.

"THESSALONICA.—The author of this book is a believer in the premillennial advent of our Lord, and sundry other questionable opinions, and has made this volume the medium of enforcing these views, as well as of conveying his ideas of practical christianity. We submit, however, the question whether, if Paul were to revise the volume, he would not say that Mr. Hastings thinks very much too well of the old christians at Thessalonica, and very much too badly of the modern christians and ministers whom he belabors so stoutly and ill-naturedly."—New Englander, p. 726. July, 1861.

To all of which I have to answer that Paul told what he thought of the Thessalonian church, and I agree with him. I have told what I think of modern sectarians; and I suspect if Paul was here, he would say more and please them less than I do.

RETRIBUTION AND UNIVERSALISM.—Bro. "W. H. S.," Williamstown, Mass., writes:

"The books and tracts came to hand the 8th inst. The first I did was to look the pile over, and my eyes lit upon one tract, 'Will all men be saved?' That was the first thing I read. I can truly say after reading it, that it is worth the price of the whole ($1.00.) I hope you will keep yourself well supplied with that tract, for I consider it the best tract to circulate I ever saw. It is a 'jaw breaker' for Universalists, and will keep others from becoming such; and a tract with that title will get read a great deal sooner than almost any thing else, for the doctrine of universal salvation is spreading fast, and why should it not? for if the doctrine of the immortality of the soul is true, it leads to that, does it not? But that tract kills two birds with one stone: while it deals a death blow to Universalism, it leads men to the true doctrine.

The next thing I read was that long-looked-for-book, 'Retribution'; and, as strange as it may seem to you, I found the 'no resurrection doctrine' clearly proven there. But, instead of it being the sinner that dies to rise no more, it is Mr.——'s theory; and if any one doubts that, let them read the book, and if they dont say so, I will pay for the book."

"Will all men be saved?" and "Retribution" are for sale at this office, and by the author, H. L. HASTINGS, Providence, R. I. See his book list.

Correspondence.

From Bro. W. A. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—It is now about a year since I embraced most of the cardinal doctrines of our precious faith, and within that period have been led to see a beauty and sublimity in the perusal of God's precious word, to which I was before comparatively a stranger. Accustomed to regard as figurative, much that should be understood as literal, and even tangible, I seem, in many instances, to have lost sight of the substance in view of the shadow. Not now, as once, do I look upon death as the "gate to immediate and endless joy." Not now, as once, do I regard heaven as some aerial phantasm, far but rather, if faithful unto the end, after a short repose in the common receptacle of all the living, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality. Then will be sung the triumphant song of victory over death, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Beyond the bounds of space and time."

On opening the oracles of divine truth, I now find clearly revealed a God almighty to defend; a heavenly Father all gracious and willing to forgive; the advent, life, sufferings and death of a Savior—the Son of God—the image, power and wisdom of God, full of grace and truth, rising from the tomb as the justification of our faith. This we are furnished with the elements and principles of a pure and undefiled religion—a religion the sacred prerogatives of which make the terms of our salvation conditional by precluding the least shadow of claim upon our good works, or the least shadow of merit upon our faith; yet, inculcating both faith and works as indispensable to our obedience and acceptance through the atonement. And in view of our fallen and lost estate, it admonishes us to be humble, to be penitent, even to prostration in the dust from which we are taken, as becoming mortals and sinners bound to a solemn judgment. And while this religion holds out to the wicked solemn warnings, and awful denunciations, it opens up to the gladdened view of the faithful multiplied privileges, proffered helps, hallowed influences, immortal hopes, with bright and growing promises, that if they endure unto the end, they shall be saved, and in the great gathering day stand all faultless before the throne of God. O, for this religion let us live, for this religion let us die, that we may be numbered among the saved ones, in the morn of the resurrection!

East Stoneham, Me.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

DEAR BRO.:—A protracted meeting has just closed at Jonesville, Mich., under the ever faithful labors of our very worthy Brother and Sister Mansfield. It continued about three weeks, or over four Lord's days. Multitudes were attracted to the meeting from one to ten miles and over; the interest became apparent at once, and it continued with unabating and increasing interest to the last. Eighteen happy souls were brought to submit to Christ by the power of the gospel, and went forward in the pleasing ordinance of baptism, by which they arose to a new life and to a glorious hope of a resurrection and change to immortality, to be enjoyed in the kingdom of God; and many more are on the way. On Saturday evening, before the meeting closed, twelve manifested a determination to shoulder the cross and march towards Beulah's plains. The truth is taking a deep and wide range, and the prospect bids fair for an abundant harvest. If the church, that numbered only about twenty-two when the meeting commenced but has arisen to fifty, only continue strongly united, cemented together by the strong cords of christian forbearance and love, and if their zeal is a commendable one, according to knowledge, characterized by a godly life, a firm steady purpose to glorify God in all things, and to labor with a determined energy to persuade sinners to submit to God, nothing can stop their onward progress; the cause of truth will prosper in their hands; and although wicked men and proud Pharisaical religionists may throw incumbrances in the way, in hope of stopping up the way of reformation, yet the truth will prevail.

Then, dear brethren and sisters, onward move! Let every energy of your being be sanctified to God and devoted to his service. When duty presents, bear the cross faithfully. When temptation crosses your pathway, resist it manfully; nobly stand up for the right; thus you will gain strength, and the grace of God will bear you onward from grace to glory. A rich reward is just before you. Let no man take thy crown. Dear brethren, remember our warfare is not carnal, but spiritual; our weapons of defense are not constructed by human skill, but by infinite wisdom, and when wielded by sanctified souls, who love God with all their hearts, the enemy must lie prostrate and bleeding before you, crying for pardon through the merits of a crucified Savior. Then labor, be working christians according to the apostolic pattern, and the result will be glorious indeed.

Feb. 18th. {Harbinger notice.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—It seems to me the time is come when Satan is come down having great wrath, knowing that his time is short, and now is the time for patience, for it is "the hour of temptation" that will try every man, and every man's character. I feel the need of more grace than I ever did. Dear Simeon is gone, and it seems that one half of me is gone. Oh, the loss I have sustained in his death! but precious thought, he will soon live again. Pray for me, that my faith fail not in this day of sore trials. I never had more of [illegible] than now, yet there are some bright [illegible]. In Pownal, where I labored from the spring of '44 to the spring of '59, I have seen for the past few weeks the word of the Lord prosper, and some souls desire to be buried with Christ in baptism. Sixteen testified for Christ after I addressed them from the 1st chapter of Isaiah last Monday evening. I go there again next week, to be there over the following Sunday. Praise the Lord for any bright spot in this gloomy vale of tears. Oh! when will Christ come? is the prayer of yours in hope, M. BATCHELOR.

Rutland, Vt.

From Sr. J. P. Lombard.

BRO. GRANT:—* * * I have reason to believe that there are some among the Advent people who have the gift of healing. I have had the greatest desire to see some of them, and have come to the conclusion that it is my duty to ask them through the Crisis to come and pray for my recovery. If I am asking a favor impossible to be granted, I want you to pray for me where you are; if not, come as soon as possible, and may the Lord direct. I don't know but every one who reads this will think I ask too much; but perhaps my trying situation, which it is impossible to explain, may answer for an apology. I should not feel as though I had done all that was duty for my recovery, without making this request. It may be thought strange that I do not write more particularly. I should if it were possible. Will not some one who is interested on the subject of healing write to me their views and experience. It would be soul-cheering. I have often felt sad to think there was no more written on this subject, and have watched for it more than they that "watch for the morning." If any one should come, they can inquire for the house of Jeremiah Higgins, Truro, Mass., about the centre of the town. I believe the day of the Lord is near and hasteth greatly. Yours in affliction.

From Bro. and Sr. Mansfield.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—We have just returned from our labors at Jonesville, having been absent about three weeks. Eighteen new converts put on Christ by baptism, twenty-nine additions to the church at the close of our meeting, and eight more arose to signify their determination to seek Christ in his appointed way. We have had a good share of opposition to meet with during our labors there. Our plan of getting along with it was to turn it all over to our account, and rejoice that the poor have the gospel preached to them. We expect to return and give them another meeting next month. May the Lord help them to hold on whereunto they have attained, that no man take their crown.

Buchanan, Mich., Feb. 20, '62.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BERLIN, Feb. 13. Important events are approaching in Germany, Saxony having proposed the reconstitution of Germany more strictly as a confederacy. Prussia replied that she considered the German confederation as an international and not a federate pact.

Prussia hinted also that a reform of the Federal Constitution might be carried out in such a way that besides the German union, comprising Austria, a closer Federal union might be formed between Prussia and such minor German States as might join her, thereby establishing a kind of political Zollverein.

Although this was no formal proposal, but a mere suggestion, Austria, Bavaria, Hanover, Saxony, and a majority of the other States, Baden and Coburg excepted, remitted a collective note to Prussia protesting against her views, and announcing their intention to hold a conference for the reorganization of Germany, in accordance with the views of Saxony, and inviting Prussia to join the conference. Prussia declined, and this was expected to lead to a dissolution of the Federal Diet. Debates on the German question are expected in the Prussian Chambers, which may bring about a crisis in Germany.

MADRID, Feb. 13. The Sumter is still at Gibraltar, although the English authorities have given her notice to quit. Several of her crew have landed and will not re-embark.

GREAT BRITAIN

In the House of Lords on the 10th, Earl Carnoval said he had received information that no less than three British subjects were confined in the prisons of the Federal government, and had lain there for some months, and were denied a trial or release unless they would take the oath of allegiance to the United States. He hoped Government would take earnest steps in the case, and at once declare what was to be the position of British subjects in the Federal States.

Earl Russell said Lord Carnovan would hardly have read the papers which had been laid on the table, for if he had he would have seen that these cases have been brought under the notice of the government. Neither had he made allowance for the peculiar state of affairs in the United States, which justified urgent measures.

The American Government alleged that they had undoubted proof of the complicity of these persons and conspiracies, and Her Majesty's Government was not in a position to contradict, but they had entered strong remonstrances against the manner in which arrests were made and prisoners treated, and the case of these persons would be earnestly watched by them.

FRANCE.

A Paris letter says Slidell had been received by M'Thouvenal in a private capacity, his diplomatic assumption of character being distinctly ignored.

ITALY.

Great popular demonstrations took place at Genoa on Sunday, 9th inst., in favor of Victor Emmanuel, and having Rome the capital of Italy.

Baron Riccasoli had issued a circular on the Roman question, in which he observes the government still pursues the execution of national wishes, and has formally stated by what means and ways it intends to proceed to Rome. The Ministry alone will decide on these means, and the opportunity of employing them.

TURKEY.

A severe engagement between the Turks and Montenegrins had taken place near Scutari. Loss heavy on both sides.

LATER.—Constantinople, Feb. 15. A commercial treaty has been signed between Russia and Turkey.

WARSAW, Feb. 15. The churches have been solemnly re-opened.

PARIS, Feb. 16. The French papers think the question of Mexico may lead to the fall of the Cabinet of Palmerston. It is believed England will withdraw from the expedition should its aim be abandoned by Spain and France, and should they interfere with the internal policy of Mexico.

The belief continues in Italy that Austria meditates war against Piedmont.

The emigration of young men from Venetia continues.

It is generally believed that Prussia will recognize the kingdom of Italy.

Victor Emmanuel will send a frigate to the Mexican waters for the protection of Italians.

A supplementary naval estimate asks for an extra vote of £364,000, which is regarded as representing the expense of the Mason and Slidell affair.

Prince Napoleon offered an amendment to the address in the French Chambers, regretting that the Pope did not listen to the conciliatory propositions of France for a settlement of the Roman question, but withdrew it on the understanding that the address is to contain a mild rebuke to the same effect.

The Austrian Concordat is to be revised with the consent of the Pope.

The January mails from the West Coast of Africa have reached England. There was increased activity in the slave trade. The reported withdrawal of the American squadron led immediately to a large increase in the number of vessels carrying the American flag.

Austrian letters from Vienna are filled with most lamentable accounts of an inundation. The district submerged in Vienna alone comprises a population of 80,000 persons, who have to be provided for. The rain fell four days almost without interruption. Several towns were also inundated by the Danube, including Presburg and Pesth.

The Prince of Wales had arrived at Vienna. He was visited by the Emperor and Archduke.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

THE SURRENDER OF NASHVILLE.

St. Louis, Feb. 25. The Republican's Cairo dispatch says the occupation of Nashville is confirmed. Our troops took possession without opposition. Floyd fled as usual. The report that Gov. Harris had ordered all the Tennessee troops to lay down their arms and go home, is confirmed. The Tennessee Legislature is called for next Monday. No opposition to Union movements is made anywhere on the Cumberland. It is reported that white flags are flying at Memphis.

Cairo, Feb. 25. The following is a special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune:

Nashville was yesterday occupied by 20,000 troops under Gen. Buell. The Federal flag is now flying over the State House. The Tennessee Legislature adjourned on Saturday week and met again at Memphis.

It is reported that Commissioners have been appointed to confer with the Federal authorities at Washington to arrange terms for the transfer of allegiance, and that Gov. Harris offered to turn the rebel forces over to the Union.

A gentleman who escaped from Columbus arrived here last night. He represents that there is a general Union sentiment in Tennessee, and thinks the Legislature will acquiesce in the nomination of Governor Harris, because fearful of the rising Union sentiment. When he left Columbus there were 30,000 rebel troops there.

Another gentleman who arrived from Nashville reports that the rebels will make another stand at Murfreesboro. All the troops had left Nashville except a police force. When Gov. Harris fled with the Legislature to Memphis he burnt the State library and distributed a large amount of commissary stores and provisions among the citizens. The stores were closed and business entirely suspended. The secessionists were leaving with their stock and negroes, following the Confederate army.

Louisville, Feb. 25. A deserter from the rebel army arrived at Munfordsville to-day. He reports the National flag flying over Nashville, and that the rebels pretend to be concentrating 200,000 men at Murfreesboro, intending to give battle there.

St. Louis, Feb. 25. Two old citizens of St. Louis, who left Memphis on Tuesday last, have arrived here. They report that the day they left Memphis the Legislature arrived there from Nashville. They were to meet on the following day to discuss State affairs. They state that people were rapidly arriving from Nashville, and in large numbers.

All the gold and silver that could be got hold of had been moved to Memphis. A panic had seized the people of the State, and Confederate scrip was of no value whatever.

Sunday evening last, thirteen steamboats landed a strong force of Federal troops at Commerce, a few miles above Cairo, whose destination is supposed to be some point in Arkansas.

Gen Halleck this morning telegraphed Gen. McClellan as follows:

"Gen. Price's army has been driven from his stronghold at Cross Hollow. The enemy left his sick and wounded, and such stores as he could not destroy. He burned his extensive barracks at that place to prevent our troops occupying them."

New York, March 1st. A special dispatch to the Herald, dated Bolivar, Jefferson Co., Va., via Baltimore by telegraph from Sandy Hook, Md., Feb. 28, says: "Since Monday night Harper's Ferry and vicinity have changed hands."

Our advance guard, consisting of the 28th Pennsylvania regiment, passed over the Potomac from Sandy Hook to Harper's Ferry, before daybreak Monday morning, by a rope ferry, and took possession of the town.

A great change has already occurred in the political feeling of Tennessee.

The War Department has authorized the raising and arming of volunteer troops in that State. The indications are that a large force of loyal Tennesseeans will soon be under arms to aid the United States.

Washington, March 2. Gen. Lander died this afternoon at Paw Paw, Western Virginia, from the debilitating effects of his wound received at Edwards Ferry. His body is on the way to this city, where his widow resides.

Gen. Shields succeeds Gen. Lander in command.

St. Louis March 3. A special dispatch to the Democrat from Cairo, says—A great light was seen in the direction of Columbus last night. It is supposed that the rebels have burned everything of an inflammable nature.

The Memphis Appeal of the 28th ult., has the following:

We have information from Nashville up to noon of Wednesday. Gen. Buel and Commander Foote had arrived and occupied the place. The U. S. flag was raised over the dome of the Capitol and floats there now.

St. Louis, March 3. It is officially reported that Jeff. Thompson with a large force came north from New Madrid. Our forces advanced from Bird's Point and met his forces at Sykestown. He was pursued into the swamps. Three pieces of artillery were captured. Gen Pope pursued another detachment South, capturing three more pieces of artillery, one captain, one lieutenant and a number of privates.

New York, March 3 The Times' Washington dispatch states that Gen. Buell telegraphed to Gen. McClellan last night that the rebels have abandoned Murfreesboro, and are in full retreat toward the Tennessee river. Crossing this river will place them in Alabama, and free middle Tennessee of every armed rebel force.

Washington, March 3. There is much talk here to-day of a great onward movement by Gen. McClellan from the banks of the Potomac.

New York, March 3. It is rumored upon secesh authority that the divisions of the rebel Generals Kirby, Smith and Jackson are at Winchester, with 20,000 men, mostly Virginia militia, over thirty pieces of artillery, and 3000 cavalry.

The rebels yesterday threw a number of shells at the buildings used as storehouses at Edward's Ferry, but did no material damage. They were fired from the fort which Stone allowed them to build under his guns.

Kansas City, Mo., March 3. The Santa Fe mail has arrived with Fort Craig dates to the 14th. There has been no battle yet.

The enemy's forces are variously estimated, but it is thought they number 2200, mostly mounted, and eight pieces of artillery. It is thought that an encounter cannot much longer be delayed.

Charlestown, Va., March 3. From 600 to 1000 barrels of flour, belonging to the rebels, have been seized and stored here. A woolen mill, has also been seized, with considerable stock.

Richard Washington, brother of the late John Washington, is now confined at Harper's Ferry.

Our national interests in this section appear to be in prosperous progression.

Washington, March 2. It is said to be understood between the allied powers that a monarchy in Mexico will result from the invasion of that country, notwithstanding the assurances given to the United States that they should not seek any political objects there. It is believed that they have disposed of these assurances by saying that the monarchy will be established by the free will of the Mexican people, just as the empire was established in France by the free choice of the French nation. [illegible]

Louisville, March 3. There is railroad communication between here and Nashville, except over a creek ten miles north of Nashville.

General mail accommodation is established to Bowling Green. Col. J. Milor, Government mail agent for Kentucky, is making energetic exertions to extend mail facilities to every part of Kentucky.

TERRIBLE FLOOD AT MECCA.—The following letter has been received at the office of the American Board of Foreign Missions in this city:—

"BEIRUT, Jan. 15, 1862.—There has been a flood of rain at Mecca. Three hundred lives were lost, and one third of the city destroyed. The great sacred mosque, Haram esh Sherif, flooded; the Holy Black Stone submerged, and the great library almost destroyed."—Boston Journal.

DEBT AND GRACE, by C. F. Hudson.—We have just received a supply of the new edition—fourth thousand—of this valuable work, containing, among other improvements, a copious and well arranged index of twenty pages. Price $1.25, or $1.50 by mail.—H.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at ONCE the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than ANY TRACT SOCIETY in the COUNTRY, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in TRACTS, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

Western Grove Meetings.

Spring is approaching, and the season for holding grove meetings will soon be here. My arrangements for this enterprise will be made sometime in advance. All who are desirous of my services in this enterprise will please remember that they must correspond with me in season. Don't expect that I can comply with a tithe of the calls, for want of time, but will try to arrange for the interest of the cause. W. SHELDON.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held in Amboy, Lee Co., Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 28th, at two o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

H. G. M'CULLOCK, Sec. of Conference.

THE TWO VOLUMES of the "Voice of the Prophets," bound in paper covers, are ready, and can be sent by mail or otherwise to any part of the country.

They contain lectures by Dr. Cumming, and important views of Dr. Elliot, and Dr. Croly and others, of England, and Shimeall, Rice, and many other distinguished expositors in this country.

These eminent men stand up in these last times and speak more distinctly and boldly than others. While a host of the faithful ones have adopted these views of the time, and are proclaiming them to the world, every sect and party in the Protestant church have representative believers and teachers of this doctrine. These volumes, therefore, will be found to contain much information on glorious themes, of which the ancient prophets have spoken, from the ablest minds in Europe and America.

We call on all in these wonderful times to read, and seek, by the blessing of God, to understand and prepare for the day of final account. Price of these volumes is 25 cents each; postage 4 cents each, but they will be put to agents to sell again at a discount of 25 per cent. Almost every family will take one if properly introduced to them. Let us keep the subject before the people. One of these volumes with its beautiful cover, with the pictures of Daniel and John holding up in full view the scroll of the prophetic periods given them by the Holy Spirit, will not fail to attract attention, and lead to an examination of the "times and seasons."

Notice.

My appointment at Cheshire Street, Ct., the second Sabbath in March, is necessarily postponed on account of the two days' delay of the train. I arrived at East Boston Sunday, three o'clock, P. M., and the congregation was disappointed, and justly claim me the following Sabbath. I therefore feel it duty to hold meetings with them from the 5th to the 10th of March.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Eld. J. V. Himes' Notice.

I shall be detained in New York city another week, and close on the 9th of March. The cause here is very low, and requires much labor to bring it up. "Brethren, pray for us." I leave New York March 10th, and preach in Dansville (and visit "Our Home") on the 11th; Springwater, N. Y., the 12th; Lewiston, 13th; Hamilton, C. W., 14th; London, C. W., Sabbath, the 16th, and continue for a time in that vicinity. My P. O. address will be London, C. W., till further notice. J. V. H.

New York March 1st, 1862.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The next session of the Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will be holden in Danielsonville, Ct., commencing Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and closing Friday evening, the 28th.

This conference has been signally blest at nearly all of its sessions in the past. Though never large in numbers, it has sometimes been mighty in power. Those who have come have brought life and love and strength with them. Dear brethren and sisters of R. I. and Ct., let the coming conference be no exception. Let each church send one delegate or more without fail; what if it does cost a trifle to come, the good imparted and received will repay "an hundred fold." The first one of these meetings I attended cost me five dollars. The blessing I got wealth could not buy. If really impossible to send a delegate, then send us a good hearty letter. No matter if several in each church write. You don't know how eager we listen to tidings coming from the scattered "household of faith." Cheer us with a word. If you are burdened, we beg a chance to share those burdens with you. Come, then, let us rally for God. Come from far and near. Come, brethren in the ministry, in the name of the Lord. Come, and the hospitality of the church in Danielsonville shall bid you welcome. H. F. C., Secretary pro tem.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth, for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

MILES GRANT, per order of Publishing Committee.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as TUESDAY MORNING, as our paper goes to press about noon, otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

Reasons for my Hope, and the Tokens of its Speedy Realization. 3d 1000. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

Containing an exposition of the hope of the Church—abounding in facts pertaining to Prophecy, the signs of the times, the increase of knowledge, spread of the Gospel, Missions, Tracts, Bible translations, Bible societies, &c. The Statistics alone are worth many times the price of the book.

Retribution; or, The Doom of the Ungodly, after the Resurrection of the Dead, Just and Unjust. Paper, 25 cts. Cloth, 40 cts.

A solemn and earnest argument in proof of the resurrection of the dead, just and unjust; the punishment of the ungodly in the lake of fire, the second death; and a refutation of the notion that wicked men have no resurrection, judgment or conscious punishment after death. Judging from the reception it meets with, it hits the nail on the head!

Pauline Theology; or, The Scripture Doctrine of Future Punishment, as taught in the Epistles of Paul. 12th 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

This work contains the passages on future punishment found in Paul's FOURTEEN EPISTLES. His words are quoted and defined in Greek and in English. Many, upon reading it, have given up their sectarian theology to embrace the theology of Paul. The wide circulation of the work, which has never been refuted, indicates its value and interest.

The Old Paths; or, The Primitive Doctrine of a Future Life. 3d 1000. Paper, 15 cts.

Beginning where Pauline theology closes, this treatise exhibits the teachings of all the Apostolical Fathers, as found in the writings bearing their names, such as Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp giving large quotations illustrating their opinions upon the questions of Life, Immortality, Future Punishment, and the Kingdom of God.

Tracts on Immortality: containing Pauline Theology, The Old Paths, Milton on the State of the Dead, and other minor tracts. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

Tracts on Prophecy: containing more than Twenty pointed, stirring, and earnest Tracts on Prophetical and Practical subjects. Bound in cloth, 50 cts.

The Perfect State; or, Forever with the Lord. A Book of Instruction and Consolation. PREPARING. $1.00.

This work contains a statement of the Scripture teachings concerning how men shall come to be forever "with the Lord," including lengthy and critical discussions of Paradise, Hades, Sheol, the Intermediate State, and other matters of interest; while it serves to cheer the heart-stricken and sad with the hope of glory when Christ, who is our life, shall appear.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer; or, a History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor. Edited and revised by H. L. Hastings. 6th edition. 420 pp. 12mo. Price, $1.00.

This is the ablest work extant on this subject. It proved that the common belief of the world's conversion was unknown to the Church of Christ for 1500 years. It quotes the views of some four hundred of the greatest theologians living, giving quotations of each, and presenting their statements on either side, in their own words. Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion and a Sign of the Times. By William Ramsey, D. D. Edited by H. L. H. Price, cloth, 40 cts. Paper, 25 cts.

A masterly expose of the grand delusion of the age, which has deluded many and recovered some from this snare of Satan. The author, a profound scholar, long conversant with spirit manifestations among the heathen, while a missionary in India, has shed much light upon the question of this strong delusion.

Lines.

AIR—"Prairie Flower."

BRO. GRANT:—The following lines were published in the Crisis about two years ago, but part of the chorus was omitted. I have been requested to have it reprinted by those who will sing truth, regardless of poetry.

When the King of glory shall to earth descend,
Then the pilgrim's sorrows have an end:
Every tear is wiped, and hushed is every sigh,
With light and love shall beam each eye.
Round Him shall be gathered all the sons of earth,
From the halls of mourning and of mirth,—
From the toils of life, and from the dreary tomb,
They haste to hear their final doom.

CHORUS.

Meekly each angel folds his wing,
Listening with wonder while they sing,
"Holy, holy, holy, holy is the Lamb!
Let all the earth his praise proclaim."

Angels shout above and mortals shout below,
Shouting still to meet them mortals go;
All the pure and holy, lovely ones and fair,
Then meet their Savior in the air.
Ever in His presence all the faithful stand,
Having palms of victory in their hands;
Singing the "new song" that never can grow old,
They strike the harp, the harp of gold.

Then, ye mourning mothers, surely ye shall meet
All those lovely flowers ye thought so sweet;
Fondly ye shall fold them in immortal arms,
And smile to see their new-born charms.
Jesus smiles upon them in their Eden home,
Met at last where sorrows ne'er can come;
Happy, happy beings, free from every care,
Ye fadeless crowns of life shall wear.

Believe and Obey.

God wants his children to believe and obey. Jesus says, as it was in the "days of Noah," so shall it be in the "days of the Son of Man." "Days of Noah" refer to the period of time from and after the warning from God to Noah, and until the flood came; so "days of the Son of Man" refer to the period of time from and after the warning to the world of coming destruction, by signs in the sun, moon and stars, and until the great day of wrath. We have passed these signs and are living in the last of the days of the Son of Man. How was it in the days of Noah? He believed God, and built the ark, and by receiving and obeying that present truth was saved. The antediluvians believed anything and everything except that, and perished for want of faith in present truth.

When God destroyed the cities of the plain for their wickedness, we have another instance where faith in present truth saved the believer. Lot obeyed God by believing the truth God designed for him. It was faith and live, or unbelief and perish. He could not put it off by saying, It is to be fulfilled in the future, or has been fulfilled in the past. "Believe it now!" he did, and lived. As Lot told his relations this present truth, he seemed to them like one that mocked, crazy, beside himself. So shall it be in the days of the Son of Man.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." "Truth"; but can we believe on him and reject his word? No. Is it believing on Christ to say we don't know anything about his second coming, while Christ's words, left upon record for the express purpose of warning us of that event, are having their fulfillment and speaking in thunder tones—"When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."—Luke 21: 25, 36. While [illegible] are distressed [illegible] and perplexed, and fear is gathering upon the countenances of men as the storm-clouds loom up in the distance, and grew blacker and more terrible as the day of wrath draws near, many of the professed followers of Jesus, together with the worldling are saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" "I don't believe he will come in hundreds of years." "All things continue as they were from the beginning." Would this kind of faith have saved Noah and Lot? Will it save in the day of Jesus Christ? Says Jesus, "But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow servant, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the Lord of that servant shall come in an hour when he looketh not for him, and shall appoint him his portion with hypocrites." He did not believe present truth, and thus disobeyed God. He is not ready when his Lord comes, from the fact he did not believe he was coming so soon; hence his portion with unbelievers. He talks about preparing for death, and if he trusts in death for salvation, probably will get death, as did the antediluvians. The wise servant talks about preparing for life, and in order to live, obeys God, believes his word; and as the apostle Peter says, "Seeing we look for such things, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness"; lets his light shine as the Lord gives him light. He may be called a fool, fanatic, deranged,—this is sure evidence that he has something the world has not—faith in God's word. He must live soberly, righteously, godly, in this present world, ever "looking for the blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Then we shall be made like him, for we shall see him as he is. Then we shall be made immortal. Then we shall have eternal life. Then we shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, till the indignation is past, and then take the kingdom under the whole heaven and possess it forever.

Thus the righteous are recompensed in the earth, and much more the wicked and sinner. Scoffers and unbelievers, the proud, and all that do wickedly say, "When are you going up?" Ah! the day is nigh, even at the doors, when they will wish they could go up. As the righteous were all taken out of the place of destruction in Noah's and Lot's day, so when Christ comes, all the righteous will be taken away from the scene of destruction, till the indignation passes, and that fact alone saves them. The wicked will all be left, as in the old world, upon the earth; and says the prophet, "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth to the other end of it; they shall not be lamented, nor gathered, neither buried; they shall be dung upon the ground." The fact that they are left proves their destruction; hence they are recompensed in the earth. Have we a faith that will save us from this awful doom? Then believe God's word, and may he increase our faith; and if he denies us everything else, may he not deny us the gift of faith in his word.—Luke 18: 8. O. D. WOODRUFF.

A Plea for the Poor.

NUMBER ONE.

"There are so many ways for money, there seems to be no end!" These words were uttered rather petulantly by a lady, as she contributed a dime toward the purchase of a calico dress for a poor, but worthy girl, who was toiling as best she could for the support of a widowed mother. A friend of the family, who had long seen the need of a better dress for the young lady (for such she is in every essential particular), than the worn out and faded print she wore, called one afternoon upon several of her acquaintance, to ask them to assist in buying a dress for her. Some altogether refused even a paltry dime; others gave cheerfully this small sum from quite an abundant store. The lady, whose language we have quoted, lived in the most costly house of all—rich Brussels, aglow with splendid tints, covered the parlor floor—elegant pictures and furniture abounded;—everything indicated not only comfort, but luxury. And yet how grudgingly the dime was given for the aid of the poor! If riches sear the heart, if they make their possessor covetous, let me never be rich!

I think we can learn much of human nature by going out on such errands as this. You can understand pretty well where the real benevolent heart dwells, and where the selfish are. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." It has long been a mystery to us how professing christians could live in the enjoyment of the good things of this life, and seldom if ever seek out the homes of the suffering and the poor, who hardly know what it is to sit at a table such as they daily surround, or to be clothed with comfortable garments. The cold penetrates their frail tenements, and the scanty, miserable fuel scarcely affords them any warmth. When they lie upon their hard beds, they are not sufficiently protected to enjoy a refreshing sleep. The invalid turns away from the brown crust or potato, unblest with the sweet butter which would make it palatable to the hungry man. The poor [illegible] outcast dies unpitied, unblest with temporal comforts, and destitute of spiritual instruction. And these scenes of woe are daily experienced within sight of the rich man's door, and in the midst of those who could, without diminishing aught from their own comfort, minister to the actual necessities of those suffering ones.

Many a cast-off garment could, by a little effort, be made comfortable for a shivering child. Bed clothing from the well-filled closets and drawers, sufficient to render neat and comfortable the poor invalid bed, might be bestowed; and the giver suffer no inconvenience thereby. A tumbler of tempting jelly, or preserves—a bit of broiled steak, or a bowl of savory broth, might be sent to tempt the weakened appetite, and not be missed. And those who have no such delicacies to offer, can give the friendly call, and drop the sympathizing word. All can, all ought to contribute something towards alleviating the sufferings of others.

God has not made any one duty more prominent, more incumbent on us, than that of ministering to the necessities of others. He will that we remember the poor. Richer blessings are promised to those who consider the poor, than are connected with the performance of any other duty. When the reward is bestowed upon those found at the right hand of the Judge, it will not be because they were always found in the house of prayer,—because there they spoke most eloquently, or prayed most fervently,—not because they had cast out devils, and done wonderful works in the name of Jesus,—but because they had fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and visited the prisoner. Think of this, ye who make a great show of your zeal for the Lord of Hosts, and then consider whether on this same ground you will inherit the kingdom! Do you know what pure and undefiled religion is? James will tell you in the last verse of the first chapter of his epistle. Do you have this religion? "Yes," says one, "I keep myself unspotted from the world; I live very separate from its associations and fashions; I dress very plain, even peculiarly so; my life is spotless; no one can bring aught against my character." Very good so far; but do you visit the widows and orphans in their affliction? Do you relieve the destitute? The Scripture teaches the duty of seeking their abodes—not wait until application is made to your door. You are to visit them. Say, does the blessing of the widow and the fatherless rest upon your head?

Prayer.

The Savior of mankind "spake a parable to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." The prayerless soul is sure to faint. It is impossible to live religion without prayer. It is impossible to be a true christian without prayer. Yes, it is utterly impossible to have our hearts illuminated by the sweet sunlight of Divine love, unless we move in the sacred element of prayer. Our prayers should not be called forth by some sinister motive, or arise from indifferent hearts, but "praying in the Holy Ghost," is required of saints. Prayer in secret, where none but God can hear, should not be omitted; and if sufficiently practiced, praying in the prayer meeting would be a pleasure, and family prayer would be more refreshing. Alas! how many have no relish for prayer. Such faint. Such are not heavenly minded. Though they may have a name to live, they are like clouds without water, and like trees without fruit. W. SHELDON.

An Acrostic.

BY VESTA H. CUDWORTH.

Music is sweeter when softened by sorrow,
Innocence dazzles in contrast with sin;
Love blooms, though sure of a frosty to-morrow,
Envy may wither, but goodness must win—
Safe is the armor that praise cannot dim.

Girdle of truth; bind the talisman 'round thee,
Radiant with promises richer than gold;
Arml for the "Meroz-ites" flee, and the alien
Now cometh down like a wolf on the fold;
Take thy sword quickly, and tell for the world.

Thoughts.

How strange is life, time, nature and existence! How long it takes us to learn that "all is vanity"! How soon we grow old! How the human tide rushes on, passing away, one after another! Old ones are gone, and again there are old ones going. Young ones rise up and pass away with the others. Then the hopes of youth, how they cheat us! The promises of man, how they fail us! The strength of mortals, how weak, how vain! Friendship! what is that? We can write about it, think of it, and feel it for awhile; but as link after link breaks, snatching friends from our grasp, what means the word friendship then? Friends die, friends prove false. We can neither depend on them or ourselves. We are all weak, erring, and sinful. O what a world! Hear its mirthful songs, sung by lips of guile,—see its smiles, which only hide a broken heart,—its hollow, empty laugh, that [illegible] in tears. What of its sunshine? Clouds are dark ever. Its roses fade, its fruits fail, its waters murmur and roil. Though its fairest fields look well in their green, waving robes, there the turf rises, the earth scatters, and only waits with greedy impatience to cover us. The dust on which we tread longs to hide us away from the storms that gather overhead.

Then the love of earth. Ask those who love most, and they tell us of inconstancy. Some fault is found with the best. There is no love so pure and angelic as the love that christians have toward each other. Yet here it is weak. The objects we love prove unmoveable, or pass away. Changes come. We change in look, in act, in feeling, in name, in location. "Always moving," is this world's motto. Ere we are aware the last move must be made, and we shall move to the grave. How our own hearts deceive us! Before we know it, we have thought and spoken evil of our brother. Then comes a trial of our goodness and morality. We must confess and forsake.

Ah! how worthless am I, weak and unworthy. How humble ought we to be. Grace alone must save the most holy of mortals. More grace! more grace! should be our prayer. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us now and evermore." Amen and amen. Then can we be saved.

"Just as I am, without one plea
But that thy blood was shed for me,
* * * * * *
O! Lamb of God, I come, I come."

M. MATHEWS.

Treachery.

If there is anything in this world worthy to be made a spectacle of pity and disgust, it is that feature of moral character which, when brought into action, developes itself in a miserable, dastardly counterfeit of religious principle. I mean that clique and cast of people who are always professing great respect for anything in the shape of a divine ordinance, or christian precept; but in the event of a conflict between the the indulgence of their own gross, sensual passions, and these behests of a benign Redeemer, rather than concede the pre-eminent claims of the "Son of God," they are ready to trample under foot the binding force of his commands; while by their wicked, pernicious example, they are practically nullifying every mutual relation which makes them mere human dependencies on His gracious mercy. Show me the graceless libertine, the degeneracy of whose character has covered him all over with the filth of moral stupefaction; show me the unprincipled profligate, whose whole nature is seared by a long career of black iniquity; show me these, and I'll show you individivals who have not a tithe of that impious presumption which sets aside, as inapplicable, the legal, generous claims of Jesus Christ. No. Such do not profess to follow him. The malevolent and malignant aspirations of such may bring disgrace upon themselves and kindred relations; but there the result ceases; but a religious TRAITOR!—a thing of mercenary hypocrisy, who, for the gratification of an idea, will coolly repudiate their faith with heaven, and give the heritage of Christ to reproach, is incomparably wicked and insulting to God. Not satisfied with scorning the beckoning of heaven by loving the "praise of men more than the praise of God," but them that would enter in they hinder. Better have no hope, than to indulge a blasphemous one. Neither be ashamed of Christ, nor put Christ to shame. Obedience is the ladder, with polished rounds, whose top is in heaven, and whose base is among men. It is the climbing of this that brings us near to God.

Again, this pernicious evil is not confined exclusively to a few, but the whole church of Christ is infected with the hateful bane. Look at preachers of (not the gospel) that for which they are paid to interest a few monopolizing financial pillars of some pretending christian organization! Did you ever hear, or perceive, the kingdom of heaven incorporated in any theological argument? If not, where is the vitality of the plan of redemption to be found in lessons of rhetorical construction, which have for their object the satiating of a morbid, sensual intellectualism?

Look over the list of "Sunday Services" as found in the Boston Journal, and you will find not more than one out of twenty subjects, selected for the occasion, gleaned from the Bible. There may be a few honorable exceptions to this rule; but, as a general thing, God's great love to man—his pity, which foresaw the inevitable doom hovering over a lost world—or his gracious plan of rescue—find but a limited scope within the logical flourish of the pulpit. This fact may be demonstrated by reading the reported sermons from week to week. I ask, can we see God in this? Where is the Sabbath School, that hope of the christian church? Can it find within the wide, well-scoured field of metaphysics any anchor of hope, any element of internal strength? Does its existence suggest any signal favor from heaven, derived from the faithful oversight of its consecrated shepherd? The blood of souls will yet be found on somebody's garments.

Perhaps some may think I am unwarrantably furious in this disclaimer; if so, let me say, the grave, that detestable maw, that womb of death, is already gorged with the deluded victims of christian faithlessness. Am I in earnest? The hurricane of God's wrath, preceded by the angel of judgment, is impending over us. Do I betray a lack of charity? When I plunged beneath the purple flood, and the benignant eye of Jesus rested on me, I vowed to battle sin with a vigor and vigilance which never tires; and I rest assured that when God shall purge away the filth of the "Daughter of Zion"—in that day of investigation, when he shall adjudicate the iniquities of a purse-proud church—I shall appear before him with the consciousness of having warred with the insidious apostacy of a faithless generation. To such as subject themselves to worldly ordinances, and not to Christ, I submit the searching inquiry of the prophet, Isa. 10: 3—"And what will ye do in the day of visitation, and in the desolation which shall come from far? To whom will ye flee for help? and where will ye leave your glory?"

Blackstone, Ms. C. G. CARR.

For the Crisis.

The Spirit of Christ.

"If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

But what is the spirit of Christ? or, what spirit did Jesus, our example, manifest when here? In the early part of his mission we hear him exclaim, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me." We mark his onward course until nearly finished in that hallowed garden. As the crushing weight of a guilty world rested upon him, as his burdened soul gave utterance to the earnest prayer, "O! my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass," He adds, "nevertheless, not my will, but thine." O, to be baptized with this spirit! My brother, sister, do we possess it? As cold, chilling winds of adversity rudely cross our path, as hope after hope is frustrated, as disappointment succeeds disappointment, as one by one are snatched from our presence, no more to return, amid the thousand irritating and perplexing scenes of every day life, as we earnestly pray, is this our spirit, not my will, but thine?

O! how strangely this spirit contrasts with the oft manifest spirit of those who profess to follow in Christ's footsteps. While Jesus closely studied the approval of God, they as closely study to gain the applause of clay. While the anxious thought arises with them how self can be most easily gratified, or benefited, the Spirit of Jesus prompts the inquiry, how can I most effectually be a co-worker with God in benefiting the creatures of his care, the objects of his matchless love? O Spirit of Jesus! rest upon us. Take full possession. Abide continually, that we may teach transgressors the way of the Lord; that in meekness we may instruct those that oppose themselves; that we may live not for self, but for those for whom Jesus' precious blood is spilt. That our natural spirit may be subdued so perfectly, as to always manifest the spirit of Christ in its stead, is the prayer of Dreams.

Through night's silent watches, while calmly we sleep,
And angels, enticing, their watch o'er us keep,
Then softly creep o'er us those visions of joy
Our Father in heaven sees it best to employ.

When weary of earth, with its toil and its tears
Increasing in power as we number our years,
Then dreams of forgetfulness, sweet to our souls,
Are given by Him who no blessing withholds.

They come to the pilgrim with visions of home,
He seems to be there, and no longer to roam,
And shouts as he sees his dear Master appear,
While heavenly music falls sweet on his ear.

Oh! sweet are our dreams through the night's silent hours,
Reviving our hearts as the May-dew the flowers!
Our Father his loved ones a blessing has given,—
In dreams we have had our best visions of heaven.

A Contrast.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say a few words in regard to the enlisting of christians to fight the enemies of the Union. It is a fact that the unholy rebellion of the Southern portion of (that which was) the United States has the greatest tendency to work on the sympathies, not only of all the loyal patriots of the North, but on christians; for they, above all others, do feel a sympathy for the oppressed and downtrodden slave; and as the desire to extend slavery is the whole cause of the present ungodly rebellion and civil war, (perhaps there never was such an unnatural and ungodly war on the earth,) therefore it is well calculated to enlist the feelings of the christian to have the rebellion quelled, and slavery destroyed. But the question is, can a christian bear arms and fight the enemies of the union? I answer, no. But why not? Because there is such a great contrast between the law and requirement of the government and the requirement of the gospel. The government makes it a crime of treason, punishable with death, to aid, or give comfort to the enemy, although he may be in a state of starvation. You must not suffer provision to be conveyed to him directly or indirectly. But Paul says to his Roman brethren, "Avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath; for it is written, vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord. Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink."—Rom. 12: 19–20. Among others a certain soldier asked John the Baptist what he should do to inherit eternal life. John told him to "do violence to no man."—Luke 3: 14. If a soldier obeys John, how can he fight? Government requires the soldiers to do violence, and fight the enemy, and to use the instruments of death, that it has provided to destroy the lives of our fellow men, and the more lives they can destroy, the greater their joy and rejoicing. In Christ's sermon on the mount, Matt. 5: 43–45, he said to his hearers, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor, and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good unto them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that you may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Now I would ask, can any one claim to be a child of God while he is doing directly the reverse? Jesus answers the question in John 14: 23, 24. "If a man love me, he will keep my words; . . . he that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." Hence we see that the contrast is so great between the requirements of the government and that of the gospel of the blessed Jesus, that it is impossible for a man to obey both. Ye cannot serve "two masters." Whosoever gets eternal life must obey Christ's words. O my brethren, "let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth," and let us "render . . . unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's."—Amen. For the Crisis.

None good but one—God.

Truly, God is good, providing for our wants ever since our first existence to the present moment, also in giving us brothers and sisters of like precious faith, and a privilege to pray for each other, and to love one another fervently and God supremely. Yes, God is love, in that he gave his Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us! that we should be called the sons of God." "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God. . . He that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love." "Herein is love; not that we loved God, but that he loved us." "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another." "We love him, because he first loved us." "And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God loveth his brother also." We ought to love God for his glorious promises to his children in the world to come, or in the earth restored to its Eden glory. Saith Christ, "Fear not, little flock, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." And, "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." "And the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

Yes dear waiting ones, God is good in not keeping the finally impenitent alive eternally in misery. But his love is manifest in his word, that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die"; that "the wages of sin is death"; that "all the wicked he will destroy"—"burn them up, root and branch"—they shall be clean gone, their place shall not be found—they "shall be as though they had not been"—"they are extinct." "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." "Therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish." "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." We can see God's goodness and love in putting the sinner into his original elements, so he does him no injustice; he has merited nothing and gets nothing.

Dear Brn. and Srs., God is good; and in the language of the Psalmist, we will praise him, Ps. 150,—"Praise God in his sanctuary. Praise him in the firmament of his power. Praise him according to his excellent greatness. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. Praise ye the Lord." Now, believing as I do that the race of people on the earth eighty-two years next May 19th will not pass off before Jesus comes, I desire to exhort all to be ready and waiting, having their lamps trimmed and burning, so as to have part in God's ever blessed kingdom, for it will be good ENOUGH. Amen. IRA FANCHER.

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Diphtheria.

Dr. Trall gives the following mode of treating this fearful disease. Dr. T. is noted for his success in the Water Cure Treatment. His Institution is at 15 Laight St., New York. He says:—

"The proper and only rational plan of medication, consists in local and general bathing, regulated precisely and at all times by the local distress and superficial temperature of the patient and a due regard to pure air and proper ventilation. The patient is not inclined to take, and does not require food of any kind until the severity of the local inflamation and the violence of the fever have materially abated. The practice of continually stuffing the patient on stimulating slop-food, or on food of any kind, because he is weak and prostrated, is a most pernicious one, and is enough of itself to cause a fatal termination in many cases. In these low diathesis and malignant forms or diseases, all the powers of the constitution are struggling with all their energies to throw out the morbid matter. If they succeed, the patient will recover; but if this effort is unsuccessful, the patient must die. He has no ability, until this struggle is decided, to digest food; and to cram his stomach with it, or to irritate the digestive organs with tonics and stimulants, is merely adding fuel to the fire; it is adding another to the great burdens the vital powers are obliged to sustain, and thus lessening the chances for nature to effect a cure.

Cloths wet in cold water, well covered with dry ones, should be applied to the throat and upper part of the chest, and renewed so often as they become warm or dry.

Frequent sips of cool water may be taken, sufficient to allay the painful sensations of thirst. The bowels should be freed by copious enemas of tepid water; the feet, if inclined to be cold, must be kept warm and comfortable by warm flannels or bottles of hot water. When the head is hot, painful, or the brain inclined to delirium, a cold cloth should be applied to the forehead and crown of the head, and the whole surface should be sponged with tepid or moderately cold water so often as the surface becomes very warm. When the whole surface is very dry and hot, the wet sheet pack is the most appropriate. In the latter stage of the disease, when the heat on the surface inclines to be irregular and the extremities to become cold, the warm bath, if practicable is the best appliance. Under this management the patient will, in most cases, be fairly convalescent within one week from the attack. Occasionally, however, the disease will continue till nearly or quite the end of the second week.—Herald of Progress.

Origin of Consumption.

The American Medical Monthly for September contains some novel and interesting views relative to the nature and treatment of consumption. The seat of this terrible malady is affirmed to be the lymphatic system of vessels; and as these minute tubes form a close interlacement throughout the whole body, being also endowed with much activity, diseased fluids transmitted through them are liable, under certain conditions, to be deposited anywhere, and to be spread or accumulated with prodigious rapidity. The nature of consumption is stated to consist in a depravation of the fluids which are propelled through these tiny lymphatic conduits. Two theories are proposed to account for the presence of the pernicious elements which here taint and poison the springs of life at their source. One party affirms that the process of nutrition is at fault, and that part of the food eaten is badly and imperfectly assimilated, offering itself in a crude half-prepared state to the action of vessels not adapted to deal with such material, but only with that which has been submitted to a completer preliminary elaboration. Hence cellular development, the first step in organization, is impossible. The fluid cannot be taken up. It never becomes vitalized, or forms a union with any living tissue. On the contrary, it is a burden, and soon causes mischief. Another party thinks that the material thus existing in the far-reaching net-work of lymphatic vessels is due to decay, and contains the products of organic dissolution.

Both opinions are well supported, and perhaps both may prove to be true. That some noxious materials, whether the debris of used-up tissues, or withered dead elements refusing to become new tissues, are thrown copiously near the lymphatics, is agreed; and also that the quantity of such products is so great that this active sewerage-apparatus cannot carry it away. It accumulates and hardens into tubercles. The cause of this dreadful malady is stated by our author to be primarily the want of oxygen, whose presence in sufficient quantity would either prevent the formation of the tuberculous material, or would give power to cast it out as soon as formed. Cures in the early stages of the disease have been secured by the use of chlorate of potash, and other remedies which supply oxygen to the blood. Prevention, however, here as everywhere, is easier than cure, and is seldom impossible, [illegible] be the hereditary tendency to the malady. Muscular exercise, regular habits, fresh air, ample rest, active occupation, well-ventilated apartments, proper clothing, and exemption from corroding anxiety, are among the indispensable and most ordinary precautions.

Effects of Tobacco.

The following testimonies from distinguished physicians, showing the effects of tobacco upon the human system, are worthy of careful consideration by those who use this poisonous stimulant:—

"Dr. Rush says: 'A desire is excited by tobacco for strong drinks, and these lead to drunkenness, chewing and smoking tobacco.' Says Dr. Stephenson, 'exhaust the salivary glands, producing dryness and thirst. Hence, after the use of a cigar and the quid, brandy, whisky, or some other spirit is called for.' Dr. Woodward says: 'I have supposed that tobacco was the most common stepping-stone to that use of spirituous liquors which leads to intemperance.' Dr. Mussy says: 'Smoking produces a huskiness of the mouth which calls for some liquid; hence, the kindred habits of smoking and drinking.' Numerous other names might be added, whose words should be law, who proclaim the same sound doctrine that the opinions of men cannot make it right to take poison as nutritious and wholesome food."—Christian Messenger.

OUR BED ROOMS.—Our bed rooms are too often fit only to die in. The best are those of the intelligent and affluent, which are carefully ventilated; next to these come those of the cabins and ruder farmhouses, with an inch or two of vacancy between the chimney and the roof, and with cracks on every side, through which the stars may be seen. The ceiled and plastered bed rooms, wherein too many of the middle classes are lodged, with no apertures for the ingress or egress of air but the doors and windows, are horrible. Nine-tenths of their occupants rarely open a window, unless compelled by excessive heat, and very few are careful to leave the door ajar. To sleep in a tight six by ten bed room, with no aperture admitting air, is to court the ravages of pestilence, and invoke the speedy advent of death.

GIVE THE CHILDREN FRESH AIR.—Some parents make the great mistake of keeping their children in-doors during cold weather. Such a practice is pernicious in many respects. It enfeebles the bodies of children, and renders them peculiarly liable to colds and coughs. A child should have its feet well shod with socks and boots, its head and ears securely protected from the cold, and then be let loose to play in the keen bracing winter air. By this means its body will become robust, and its spirits be kept bright and cheerful; whereas, if a child be shut up in the house, it will become fretful and feverish, and perhaps wind up with a severe attack of illness.—Ex.

HAVE YOU COLD FEET?—Every night on lying down and every morning on rising, dip them in cold water and rub them hard with a towel. If this towel rubbing be followed by sharp friction with the naked hand, it is an improvement.

Light Afflictions.

"For our light affliction, which is but for a moment."—2 Cor. 4: 17.

A step from plowing and breaking
The clods for the precious grain,
To the golden harvest reaping,
And bringing the sheaves again.

A step from burthen bearing,
Drooping beneath its weight,
To the crown of the victor wearing,
And bearing the palm of state.

A step from sighing and dying,
From the dark and chilly tomb,
With angel forms to be vieing,
And wearing immortal bloom

A step from tears to the tearless,
From obscurity into renown,
From a sinful age to the sinless,—
A step from the cross to the crown.

The Morning Watch: or,

THE CHRONOLOGY OF THE NIGHT WATCHES

There is something peculiarly interesting and solemn in the Bible description of the watches of the night, especially as they are given as signs of the coming of our blessed, long-looked-for King. The first watch of the night with the Hebrews began at sunset, and ended at nine o'clock; the second began at the end of the first, and ended at midnight; the third extended from midnight till the time of the cock-crowing, or three o'clock; and the fourth from that time till six in the morning, or sunrise; the duration of each watch being three hours. The watches are given us as a warning of the coming of Christ. Mark 13: 35, 36,—"Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh; at even; or at midnight; or at the cock-crowing; or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping." This admonition makes the parable of the ten virgins much more striking, being "the sure word of prophecy"; and in its fulfillment thus far it is evidently "the sign of the Son of man in heaven," together with the heavenly signs preceding. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom: and five of them were wise, and five were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps, but took no oil with them: but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." In order to the fulfillment of this part of the prophecy, there must necessarily be a large portion of the christian church stirred up to believe that the Master is about to appear; and a new search must be made to ascertain that their evidences are sufficient to meet and hail him with joy. The standing churches in their present position can never fulfill this prophecy, for they do not believe in his immediate coming, and of course will make no move like the one described in the parable; but it is prophecy, and though a figure, it must be literally fulfilled by a portion of the church represented as the kingdom of heaven, who are humble enough to take up the cross, and publicly profess faith in the speedy coming of Christ, without regard to the hatred and derision in which all such are held by the world.

Now have we ever seen anything corresponding with the description of going out to meet him? Some will answer, "Yes." When Martin Luther preached the reformation, thousands left the Roman churches and professed the Protestant religion; they believed in the pre-millennial advent, and, when the Second Advent doctrine began to be preached, it was "the midnight cry." It is true that thousands left the Roman church at that time; but not one of them expected to meet him, or to be alive when he should come; for they did not expect him for three hundred years, and till that time was past, there could be nothing like tarrying. But I see no analogy to this view of the fulfillment of the prophecy; for the watches of the night were of equal duration, and each watch in the fulfillment must, so far as it extends, be of equal duration; for we cannot believe that two hundred years more will elapse, in order to the analogical fulfillment of the prophecy which it would require, if the preaching of Luther was its commencement. But this prophecy is not given to mislead us, but to direct us in the right way; and I cannot believe the evening watch was of three hundred years duration, and the midnight watch only thirty years; and both the others ignored, or swallowed up in these; and besides it is evident that some, both of the wise and foolish who go out to meet him, will be alive when he comes; so that my view of the subject is very different from the foregoing.

It is well known by all students of prophecy that the sun was darkened in May 19th, 1780, and that the moon did not give her light on the following night; and also that the stars fell on the night of the 13th Nov., 1833; and this was the last of the heavenly signs to be given as recorded in Matt. 24th. And it was in or about that same year that the doctrine of the second coming of Christ began to be preached, not only in America, but in Europe and Asia; and I cannot but regard the falling stars, Nov. 13th, 1833, as the bell of the first watch of the parable, and that it extended ten years, till the 10th day of the 7th month, 1843; for between those two dates there was a company numbering thousands, called come-outers for distinction, the most devoted members of the churches in which they had walked, who left their places in the churches, and proved their faith by their works, in embracing the doctrine themselves, and laboring to the utmost to persuade others to do the same.

Says the prophecy, "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." Those who were expecting to behold the face of him they loved, at that time were disappointed; and that disappointment was followed by great indifference to the subject, which continued till 1853—ten years. "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him." A renewal of preaching on time aroused many of them to action, by uniting them in love, and by inspiring them with renewed hope that the time of their deliverance was near. "Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps."

The time of tarrying was between 1843 and 1853, at which latter time the cry was made; since which many, under a second disappointment, have apostatized, and walked no more with us. But a great part of that company are still looking for the Lord, holding out, and though "faint, yet pursuing"; and this state of things will probably continue till the end of the cock-crowing watch. This watch will not probably end till 1863, though I have no authority but analogy to call it ten years, but as the first two watches did so plainly and evidently extend ten years in the fulfillment, I feel confident that the third watch will in the fulfillment extend as long, when we shall probably arrive at the beginning of the morning watch.

It was about the fourth or morning watch that Jesus came to his tempest-tossed disciples, "walking on the sea." It was in the morning watch that king Saul, with his legions, came upon the hosts of his enemies, the Ammonites, and discomfited them, so that no two of them remained together. It was in the morning watch that "the Lord looked unto the hosts of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and of the cloud, and troubled the host of the Egyptians," and finally overthrew them all in the midst of the sea; "there remained not so much as one of them." This overthrow of Pharaoh and all his army is one of the most striking types of the destruction of the wicked at the day of judgment. When "they sunk like lead in the mighty waters," Moses and the children of Israel sung a song of praise and glory to God for their deliverance, on the banks of the sea; and this will reach its antitype, according to Rev. 14: 2, 3, when all the holy ones shall be caught up to meet the Lord, and "stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of gold; where they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints"—the very same song sung by Moses on the banks of the Red sea; and that of the Lamb, to his praise and glory, for their final deliverance from all the oppressions and perils of a doomed world. This seems to be conclusive evidence that the morning watch will not pass away before the vision will speak, and the Bridegroom come. If the morning watch begin in 1863, which I think cannot be controverted, it may extend five years, or half the watch, before He will appear; but this I believe is the extent; for, according to the adjusted chronology of Josephus, which I believe to be the most reliable, the period of six thousand years from the creation will have finished its course in 1868. But human chronology is not infallible, considerably sooner. I am no prophet, but the foregoing view of the parable appears to me the most probable of any I have ever seen.

The next development of the prophecy is something equivalent to an application for oil; the foolish said unto the wise, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone (or going) out." "But the wise answered, saying, Not so; lest there be not enough for us and you; but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves." These applications seem to be events that will be fully developed at the opening of the morning watch, 1863, and not till then; and as soon as they can be persuaded to seek for themselves, the time will expire; for "while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in to the marriage, and the door was shut."

Thus the events represented by the going out, belong to the first watch, which began in 1833, and ended in 1843; those representing the tarrying, belong to the second watch, extending from 1843 to 1853; and those which represent the cry, and the trimming, belong to the third, which will probably extend from 1853 to 1863; after which will probably be seen something like the application for oil; but we cannot now determine what that will be, and may not know till it shall be fulfilled. The lamp represents God's Word; the oil, the Holy Spirit, from whom the saints receive "the oil of joy," which they cannot communicate to another. A writer in the Herald of Nov. 9th says, "I am pained for the lukewarmness and coldness of some who used to have warm hearts and joyful hopes, but who now feel that they have backslidden and lost their first love. Some of this class are now in despair, and cherish the insinuations of Satan that they are irrevocably lost." Such a state of mind as this may precede the call for oil, but a fearful doom awaits all such, when the door is shut against them forever.

O sinner! O backslider! have you forsaken the only hope set before you in the gospel? Return, I beseech you, to Him who has "the keys of hell and death," who is able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by Him. Let no time be lost, for "behold the Judge standeth at the door!" All things concur in proclaiming "the great and dreadful day of the Lord"! Repent, and turn to Him now, while the day of grace continues, that you may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger, and escape the fatal snare which will reserve all the finally impenitent to a righteous retribution. For the Crisis.

Faithfulness to Each Other.

There are duties we owe to each other, which sometimes seem difficult to perform, and are quite too often neglected, because unpleasant. I am forcibly reminded of this, while reading Bro Hastings' last article on "Ministerial rascality." He speaks plainly, faithfully, and all our brethren and sisters ought to be admonished to be as faithful in all such duties as he there suggests—as he is in speaking of them. All religious societies have been often imposed upon by unworthy characters, who claimed to be sent of God to work for the salvation of sinners. We, as a people, have suffered more than others, because we have had less vigilance, and less discipline, in this direction. But have we not suffered enough to put us on our guard? Is it not time to take heed to these things? After we have taken the greatest precaution we can, there will be too many cases in which we shall be abused by bad men, who claim to be "God-sent." One of these "Ministerial rascals" will do more mischief in a church before he is fully "exposed" than ten good ministers can heal up afterwards. Then it opens the door for unbelievers to say all religious persons are corrupt, and shield themselves under their own better conduct.

Many have been the instances where men have claimed to be called to the ministry, who went away from home, got some ministers who did not know them to ordain them, without any proper recommendation from substantial brethren, who know them. Then they go from place to place, where little known, or not known at all, deeply anxious for the cause, and for sinners. This class are usually overmuch pious, and report the wonders that the Lord has done through their labors in other places, and the great and many urgent calls they have from this, that, and another place to preach. Honest brethren receive them on their own appearances and reports, become deeply impressed with their zeal, and unite so heartily with them, that when those who know the man, and state that all is not right, these brethren think the man slandered and abused, and instead of then carefully seeking and learning the facts, become blinded, and often sacrifice themselves, and disbelieve, and then disfellowship each and every old, faithful, and tried brother, who knows the facts and will not fellowship and cover up iniquity. Then a party draws off, who blindly and ignorantly league with sin, while they look henceforth at the faithful ministers and brethren, the committees and councils, who investigate and report, as persecutors of their brethren. Thus the evil spreads, and the rascal minister may lie, dissemble, defraud, forge, slander, and do many other wicked things, and still be upheld by those who have taken sides with him, in full union with a class of hypocrites and apostates, who are always glad to see a chance to hedge up the way of God's faithful servants.

Let us always have our eyes open to look at this thing as it is, and faithfully expose an imposter at once. If it causes you trouble, it will be a blessing in the end. Such men were advertised in an apostolic time, and should be in this time. "The seven sons of Sceva," "Alexander the coppersmith," with "Demas," and others, are faithfully noted down as a warning to all. This course saves many from being imposed upon, and causes offenders to see and feel their sins, that they may repent.

Human Ghostology.—No. 9.

8. Eccl. 12: 7,—"And the spirit shall return to God who gave it." If God is everywhere in general, and nowhere in particular, but just as much in one place as in another, why need the spirit move an inch? With this view, is it not just as near God already as it can possibly be, in point of distance? Could it, with this view, get any nearer to God by leaving the body? Thus modern theology clashes with itself. The text does not read, "The spirit shall go to God," but "shall re-turn to God." I could go to London even if I had never been there before; but I could not re-turn to London unless I had previously been there. So with the spirit, it could not "re-turn to God" unless it had previously come from God. If it came from God as an entity, it will return to him as an entity. In other words, if it came from God as a conscious being, it will return to him as a conscious being, otherwise, it will not. First, observe it is said of the spirit, God "gave it." Secondly, the same spirit which God gave is to return, and no other. Did God give to man an immortal intelligence of prior existence? For to re-turn, it must have had a prior existence. If so, it proves the pre-existence of spirits, and furnishes an argument in favor of transmigration, for why may not the same spirits be repeatedly infused into earth-born mortals, seeing they are said to go back to the same reservoir after a short imprisonment here? And if our spirits existed as immortal intelligences, or intellectual entities, before entering our bodies, why do we not remember our former existence? Can it be that we have spent thousands of years amid the scenes of glory in another world, and yet cannot remember anything that occurred in that long history, when we can so distinctly recollect the trifling events of this life? It will avail nothing to say that our spirits were so diminished in coming into the body, that we forgot what we knew in our former state; for that which can be diminished in the slightest degree, can be totally abolished; which fact would disprove its immortality. Nor will it avail to say that the spirit at first was not matured in stature or intellect; for that which can grow by subsisting upon temporal material, can also decrease, and that which can decrease cannot be immortal. The fact is, if our spirits existed as entities, in an immortal state, before entering the body, we could remember it; and unless our spirits did have such a prior existence, no such spirits are to return, for only that which God "gave" is to return. Now all that God gave at the creation of man was the "breath of life" (Gen. 2: 7), or, more properly, "the spirit of life"—this spirit, and no other, will return to God. This "spirit of life," the element which caused man to live, came from God, but not as an entity; and it will return as it came, but not an entity. This same spirit of life will again set the human machinery in motion, at the resurrection. Ezek. 37: 6. This is the primary signification of the term spirit when applied to man; but in a secondary sense, it signifies the mind, or some of its passions; but the mind, as we have previously demonstrated, cannot exist independent of the body: hence, the only spirit which leaves man at death is the spirit of life.

9. Isa. 57. 1, 2,—"The righteous is taken away from the evil to come. He shall enter into peace." "He," not his ghost, "shall enter," not has entered, "into peace." "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."—Luke 14: 14.

10. Job 32: 8,—"But there is a spirit in man," or, a mind, which is the secondary import of the term spirit. This mind is not an internal entity, but is so inseparably connected with the material system, that when man dies, "in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4.

11. Dan. 7: 15,—"I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body." Daniel was grieved in his mind, as every man is when grieved.

12. Zech. 12: 1,—"Formeth the spirit of man within him." Not a ghost, but the mind.

13. Matt. 10: 28,—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul [soul is here used in its secondary sense, implying "life"]; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Psukee, here translated soul, in its secondary sense, is forty times rendered "life" in the singular and plural form, in the New Testament. "Are not able to kill the life" (psukee) of the christian. What life is meant? Not the present life, which is killed with the body. It is not the present life (psukee) of the sinner which God is to destroy with the sinner in hell (Gehenna), for the body does not go to a hell of fire at death, nor will it go to such a hell till it shall come forth to "the resurrection of damnation," or "awake to shame," at which time it will have a future life, which God will then destroy with the body in Gehenna. But the christian's future life is out of the reach of man's power, and cannot be killed by man. If the sinner's life, which God will destroy with the body in Gehenna, is a future life, then the christian's life which man cannot kill is also a future life. "Are not able to kill the future life" of the saint, is the true sentiment of the text. This life we secure by obedience, we have it prospectively while we stand by faith, and are sure of it in reality if we endure unto the end, and though the sinner can deprive us of temporal life, here is an immortal life which he cannot reach, which bids defiance to the rage of persecutors. This life is secured by faith in Christ, and is invested in him, to be bestowed upon the saint, at his coming.

14. Matt. 17. 3,—"There appeared unto them Moses and Elias." It is conjectured that the ghost of Moses there appeared. But it is evident that Peter did not so understand it, from his remark, "let us make here three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." Peter was not the man to propose building a tabernacle for a mere ghost. Moses was seen there as a real being whether there in his resurrected state, or in vision. It was a reality to Peter for the time being, he saw Moses as clearly as he did Elijah, and proposed the erection of a tabernacle for each, which he would not have done if he had regarded Moses as a ghost. It would have been just as easy for God to take Moses from the grave, and place him upon the mount in his resurrected state, as to bring Elijah down in person, who had previously been translated. They were seen there in "vision," whether in supernatural vision, or in a vision of actual sight. Luke records it, "There talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias." Not one man and a half, or one man and a ghost, but "two men." It is said that Moses could not have been upon the mount in a resurrected state, as Christ was "the first born from the dead." So he was, to an immortal state; but Lazarus was previously raised from the dead, and so might Moses have been on the same principle.

15. Mark 6. 49,—"But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out." There are two orders of spirits in existence, called devils, and angels. They supposed that they had seen one of these spirits. They never would have been thus frightened if they had imagined that they were gazing upon a harmless phantom—a cheat. They did not suppose that they had seen a disembodied human spirit; firstly, from the fact that they did not say so; and secondly, from the fact that the term phantasma, here rendered spirit, is never applied to the human spirit, either in the body or out of it. The term occurs again in Matt. 14: 26,—"They were troubled, saying, it is a spirit; and they cried out for fear." Doubtless they conjectured that they saw a demon. They would not have "cried out for fear," if they had supposed they had seen a spectre, or deceptive vision. W. SHELDON.

☞ The late Rev. Dr. Newton was once speaking of a lady who had recently died. A young lady immediately asked: "O, sir, how did she die?" The venerable man replied, "There is a more important question than that, my dear, which you should have asked first." "Sir," said she, "what question can be more important than "how did she die?" "How did she live?" he replied.

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3–14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 Pet. 3. 3–14.

II. A second point I note in the text is the prediction that, before Christ shall come again, and immediately preceding that great event, this doctrine of his return shall become a subject of cavil, doubt, unbelief, and revilement. The apostle urges his readers to "be mindful of the words which were spoken before by the holy prophets, and of the commandment of the apostles of the Lord and Savior, knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were." I learn from these words that, in the times to which the apostle alludes, the subject of Christ's coming and its accompaniments is to be agitated and discussed; that there will be many who will be very unfavorably affected toward it, some of whom will deny it altogether, some revile it as a foolish dream, some agree that it is taught in the Scriptures but to be understood after a manner very different from what the literal terms import; and that there will be a great lack in the minds of people generally of susceptibility to be seriously moved by this subject, except to revile it and to turn it into ridicule. A scoffer is, properly, an insolent ridiculer, a scorner, a contumelious reproacher. Hence, Henry (in loc.) describes these scoffers to be persons who "laugh at the very mention of Christ's second coming, and do what in them lies to put all out of countenance who seriously believe and wait for it;—who cannot deny that there is a promise, yet laugh at it." Isaiah (v. 19.) Jeremiah (17; 15,) and Ezekiel (12 22) had before prophesied of similar manifestations with reference to the same subject and the same times. And Christ also says, of some of his own professed servants, that, as the time draws near, they will put aside the subject, and say, "My Lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite their fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken." (Matt. 24 · 48–51.

Startling also is it, in this connection, to think how inoperative and null this powerful doctrine of Christ's speedy return has become in the religion of modern times. It is remarked by a distinguished German theologian* that "the second coming of Christ, viewed in connection with the kingdom established by it upon earth, occupies a much more prominent position in the view of the Sacred Scriptures than in that of the modern church." The remark is unquestionably true. It may safely be said that there is not another doctrine in the whole Christian Creed, of equal prominence and importance, which is so coldly and indefinitely apprehended, and so jejunely held, by the great mass even of those "who profess and call themselves Christians." People do not exactly deny that there is a promise that Christ will come again, but it is accepted only with so many allowances, that it can hardly be said to be received at all as an efficacious truth. Ministers and expositors have become so accustomed to gloss, spiritualize, and accommodate to other things the passages which speak of it, and so preoccupy their minds with figurative, providential, and imaginary comings of the Savior by means of his doctrines, gospel, and Spirit, that his real coming—which is the only one the Bible speaks of, and which was never meant to pass out of the view of the Church as near at hand—has well nigh lost its weight and place. It has become to many a mere fable. What earnest Christian does not see and lament the wide-spread influences of rationalism and rationalistic philosophy, explaining away the gospel Revelations, and even the most elementary views of inspiration, of God, and of morality and right? But there are no portions of the Scripture which rationalism so much neglects, despises, or degrades as the prophetic portions, and no class of men whom it reviles with less mercy than those who are so simple as to accept the prophecies in any thing like their literal terms. A few days ago I read, in a sermon preached and published by a divine whose writings are numerous and wide-spread, that "the day of judgment, and the day of the Lord, and the convulsions and changes of nature," spoken of in the prophecies, "are to be interpreted with great latitude of signification, as in the highest degree figurative;" that "the day of the Lord is simply a day of calamity, or a season of suffering; the day of judgment, the time when the consequences of our actions overtake us; the end of the world, often the end of the existing state of things; and a new heaven and a new earth, a better moral condition of the human race"!* The same author, in the same discourse, says, "for my own part, the world seems to me to be yet in its infancy." "To me there is nothing in the Scriptures, nor in the present state of things, to lead me to apprehend the approach of the end of the world, but every thing against it." Even the late venerable Professor Stuart,—for a long time, if not still, the very leader of New England exposition,—in his review of Duffield on the Second Coming of Christ, † jests and jeers over the whole subject, and laughs at those who take it up, as in the volume he reviews, as believers in "putid fables." When Christianity was in its virgin purity, this was among the most vivifying articles of the Creed,—the incentive to repentance, the motive to faith, the encouragement to fidelity, the inspiration of hope, and the spring of constancy and zeal, which divested even martyrdom of terrors; but in these last days it has become so powerless in the consciences and hearts of men that any serious and practical concern about it is hooted as unscholarly weakness, and the attempt to set it forth according to the words of the Holy Ghost is ridiculed in high ecclesiastical positions as identical with the advocacy of "patristic legends" that would "dishonor the brains of even the Rabbis" in their wildest dreams. Let a man, constrained by his solemn convictions and accountabilities, lift up his voice to reassert it in its true Scriptural vigor and to bid his fellows be ready for its speedy realization, and pulpits and presses point at him as more than a little crazed, and laughingly put him down on their ready list of lunatic saints whose like utterances they say time proved to be but dreams. We look on, and wonder that some of the best and most learned men that have lived should be so flippantly dispatched, and that such momentous subjects should be so jeeringly set aside. And yet we ought not to wonder. The Scriptures long ago said it would be so; and St. Peter, in stirring us up to remembrance, would have us assured, first of all, that such things the last days would bring forth. God has not, indeed, left himself without witnesses. There are those to whom the doctrine of the "coming and kingdom" of the Lord Jesus is a living power; whose hearts are kindled with the blessed "promise of his coming;" who, with eloquent tongues and ready pens, are valiantly contending for this portion of "the faith once delivered to the saints;" and who, though laughed at and reviled by men, are yet honored and prospered of God. Nor are their words without effect in many meek and pious hearts, who with them wait and hope for the coming of the Lord. But the great mass of Christendom has no sympathy with them, and takes pleasure in twitting them for their credulity and want of better learning. And what is all this but Peter's prophecy fulfilling,—the very Church joining in the ribald cry, "Where is the promise of his coming?"‡

† Hints on Prophecy: Appendix to 2d edition.
‡ Those who deny the coming of the Lord, and the other great events of which the prophets speak, instead of proving that the prophecies shall never be literally fulfilled, are themselves striking instances and examples of the certainty of their accomplishment; for St. Peter has expressly prophesied of these men, whom he calls scoffers, that would make a jeer of the coming of the Lord. Our Savior himself prophesied that before his coming men would grow so secure that they would set at naught all the signs and tokens of his appearance. And it is a rule with me, the more I hear people deny the coming of Christ, the day of judgment, and the conflagration, with other things of the like nature, the more to hold on to them; for their denial is to me one of the highest proofs of the certainty of those events."—Winchester's Lectures on the Prophecies, vol. iii. p. 151.

The World's Antidote.

The world is sick, and Jehovah has undertaken its cure. He has felt its pulse, made out his diagnosis, and prescribed.

Sin is the disease, death the penalty; the prescription—"Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world!" As one who has taken this prescription, and been raised up to a hope of life by it, I can now recommend it to every sin-sick soul; and it shall be my business, as nurse under this great Physician, to prepare his remedy as palatable as may be, and induce as many to take it as possible for the coming year. Nurses are wanted by the thousands! Who will enlist? The world is one grand hospital—work enough for every recovered patient! Who can be idle in such a place as this? Come one, come all. H. S. W[illegible]

A Short Sermon.

Text, 2 Tim. 1: 10, last clause:—"And brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Much is said about life and immortality; we hear it in sermons, in exhortations and prayers; we read about it in many books. It must be of great importance to agitate the minds of so many; Pagans, Mohammedans, Catholics, Greeks and Protestants all agitate it. We find a great variety of views on the subject. As the Bible is our standard, it is to the word and testimony we come. We learn from the text that Christ has brought life and immortality to light. We will first examine the light on life. John 1: 4. John speaking of Christ says, "In him was life." Again, 11: 25, Christ says, "I am the life." How came Christ with life? John 5: 6,—"For as the Father has life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." Then we learn that God is the fountain of life. Christ has received it of his Father. Again, John 3: 16,—"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." From this text we learn that man is a perishing being, and God in love to him hath sent the offer of life through his Son; all can have it who receive him. Then those who do not receive him will not have life, but will perish. 1 John 5: 12,—"He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son hath not life." Paul saith, Rom. 6: 23,—"The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Then life must be an object of hope; Titus 1. 2,—"In hope of eternal life, which God who cannot lie promised." Again, 3, 7,—"We shall be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life." It must be an object to be sought for; Rom. 2: 7. We learn from this that we must begin to do well, and have patience to continue in well doing, seeking for eternal life. John 3: 36,—"He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life."

From this we learn that we may have life secured by believing in the Son. But may we not possess it now? Col. 3: 3,—"Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Then we do not possess it in this life, but it is in God secured through Christ. But when to be received? "When Christ who is our life shall appear." Then we may get it in the world to come. Luke 18: 29,—"In the world to come, eternal life." In love to man who is perishing, God has sent his Son as a medium or source of life, through whom man may secure it and obtain it, when the Life-Giver comes, in the world to come. What does the gospel say about Immortality? All that is said about it is found in six places. (1.) In our text Christ has brought it to light. (2.) 1 Tim. 1. 17. Here we learn that God the Father is the Immortal, then, God is the Fountain. He is the Immortal in Ps. 90: 2. We read that God is from everlasting to everlasting, without beginning or end; so Immortality has no beginning nor end. (3.) 1 Tim. 6. 16, beginning with the 14th,—"Until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ: which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light." What is the light? 1 John 1: 5,—"God is light." Jesus Christ sits at his right hand in the light of the Father. He is our Mediator, to whom God has imparted immortality, he being the first of the creation of God. Rev. 3: 14. We may clearly see, if immortality has no beginning or end it cannot be created, but it can be imparted to a created being. (4.) Rom. 2: 7. Here we learn it is an object to be sought for; (hence man cannot possess it while seeking for it). (5.) 1 Cor. 15: 52. Here we learn when those who secure it will obtain it—at the last trump; "For the trumpet shall sound and the dead (saints) shall be raised": then the change, when mortal puts on immortality. (6.) 55th verse. The saying that is written will then come to pass, "O death, where is thy sting? oh grave, where is thy victory?"

In conclusion, what do we learn in the gospel about immortality? God is the fountain, Jesus Christ is medium. It is to be sought for through him, and put on at the resurrection. Why not receive the light, and believe it with all our hearts? May God help us to secure life and immortality "by patient continuance in well doing." MOSES CHANDLER.

Trials.

Trials! what are they? Nought but blessings in disguise. What should we become if all were sunshine and prosperity? Should we not forget the Giver of all things and become worldly minded? Should we not forget how to mingle our sympathies with the tried and tempted? If we had no trials or temptations, could our blessed Savior have any sympathy for us? He was a man of sorrows, tempted and tried in all points like as we are. Many are the temptations of God's chosen ones, but, thank God! "the Lord delivereth him out of them all." It may seem hard when our warmest friends "turn the cold shoulder," and our own relatives, even brothers and sisters, turn against us, and neighbors appear to feel digraced to be seen in our company, simply because we are looking for our blessed Savior. Was not He too despised? Can a servant be above his master? No, indeed! but let us, like Him, be lamb-like, meek, patient, loving and kind; and when they deride us for being Adventists, let us take God's Holy book and show them that we have a reason for our blessed hope. Let us show them also that we love them; that we are strangers to hatred and malice. And above all let us not forget to pray for them. Great things have been accomplished by prayer. "God can work and none can hinder." When I hear a child of God testify that he is above being tried and tempted, and is living so near God he has no need of earnest, heart-searching prayer, but is continually on Pisgah's summit, I cannot go with him; but when I hear a poor stricken soul telling how it is tried and tempted, and all looks dark and dreary, it touches a nerve in my heart that vibrates throughout my whole system, I long to take such by the hand and point them to Jesus, whose sympathies are aroused for them, and who has passed through all this before, and is ever interceding in their behalf. None of us can suffer as did he in the gloomy garden of Gethsemane. Still he murmured not, but for our redemption, suffered and died an ignominious death.

We are tried, tempted and buffeted on all sides, but let us be patient a little while longer, soon we shall be redeemed, all our trials will be past, and we shall reign with God our Father and Jesus our elder Brother forever. O blessed, soul-refreshing thought! that soon, very soon we shall see Jesus, and walk with God, and realize that all trials and sorrows are past. Let us look forward to that bright morning and be thankful that we are counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake. We have come to a period of time when we must expect deep humiliations, crucifying crosses, fiery trials, enemies, slander, hatred, malice, (and that too by the professed followers of Jesus Christ), but with all God's grace is sufficient to sustain. When we are in the fiery furnace, let us be thankful the fire can only burn off the shackles; and, if we have faith and trust in Jesus, we shall come out purified like fine gold. When we get into the kingdom,

"No night shall be there! no dreadful hour
Of mental darkness, or the tempter's power,
Across the e skies no even us cloud shall roll
To dim the sunlight of the raptured soul."

CARRIE.

For the Crisis.

To Arms! To Arms!!

I am thoroughly convinced that the second coming of Christ is, at the farthest point, but a very few years before us. I have of late been giving this heart-thrilling topic a more special investigation from a different stand point, and the conclusion to which I have arrived is, that we have but a very brief space of time to do a great work in. But where are the laborers? Alas! the laborers appear to have their minds too much absorbed in topics of no vital interest in leading sinners to Christ. One is putting spurs to his hobby steed, anxious to drive him over as much territory as possible, forgetting that a world of unprepared men are rushing to the scenes of the judgment, without having the solemn note of warning sounded in their ears. Another is comparatively dilatory, preaching only occasionally, and when he does preach, it does not sound like the preaching of a man whose heart is filled with soul-stirring and thrice solemn conviction that the scenes of eternity are but a step before him. And another is filled with the spirit of bitter contention, and by his injudicious course is scattering the flock to the greedy wolves.

How long will this state of things last? Is it not fully time to turn our attention to the great question of questions? Is it not time that we were endeavoring to get men converted to God, more than to theory? Are we engaged now as Christ will be pleased to find us engaged at his coming? How many can answer affirmatively?

If we are really near the judgment, ministers and editors should not only be at work, but they should be at work for God, and for the salvation of men. Away then with hobby-horses; away with a dilatory spirit. God calls you to a nobler work. Your services are wanted now. The King of glory is at hand. Watchman, sound the alarm! now! NOW!! W. SHELDON.

Retribution.

Having read "Retribution," I can commend it as a fair expression, and an able defense of the Scripture doctrine of the "doom of the ungodly." If any believe without scruple that there will be no "resurrection" of "the unjust"—that they who "have done evil will" not "come forth to damnation"—and that various other plain declarations of Scripture in support of this doctrine are mere idle words, I cannot assure such that this nor any other book will convince them of their error. But if any are in doubt, but sincerely desire to know the truth in the matter, they can find in this treatment of the subject, a fair consideration and successful refutation of their seeming grounds for doubt. I hope the work may make successful progress against this freak of "literalism" among us.

Personal.

We have recently received a letter from Bro. H. A. Chittenden, who labored most faithfully in 1843 in various parts of our country, and spared no effort to arouse a sleeping world and church to prepare to meet the coming of the Lord. We have reason to thank the Lord that he ever visited Winsted, Ct. His lectures in the Methodist meeting house in that place, in Dec., 1842, were greatly blessed. The first discourse sent conviction to our mind that the Bible is true, and consequently that our course of living was wrong. We went to our boarding place—Humphrey's Hotel—and commenced secret prayer, and four days from that time, in a prayer meeting, we obtained pardon, peace and joy. From that night, the work of the Lord broke out in the place, and meetings continued almost every evening for several months, and scores were converted under the labors of Bro. Ebenezer Washburn, who is now sleeping in Jesus.

As many of our readers will recollect Bro Chittenden, and can, doubtless, date their conviction at the time they heard him lecture, we will venture to give a few words from his private letter just received, trusting that he will not be grieved for the liberty taken He says —"I am as much a believer in the advent at hand, as when I first saw you at Winsted twenty years since. I have never given up the idea that the 2300 days relate to this great event, and 'at the time appointed the end shall be'" "The time of the end commenced about the commencement of this century, and will close when the 2300 days close."

This is good news from our brother, and we hope that his warning voice will be heard again from the watch-towers —O

Many Books.

There is a passage in John 21: 25, that has been handled roughly by skeptics, and puzzled some christians. It reads as follows —"And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." The infidel says with much show of truth, "It was not possible for Jesus to perform so many deeds while in this world, that it would not hold the books necessary for an account of those works."

Wakefield renders the passage as follows.—"I do not think that the world even then would receive the books written" Thompson renders the same as follows:—"Even then I do not think that the world would cordially receive the books written" The manifest idea appears to be, that if the world would not believe what is already written, they would not if every event and word in the life of Christ was recorded.—O.

Sprinkling.

Bro. B. Groaves wishes to know if there is any Greek lexicon that gives the definition of the word bapto, "to sprinkle, pour or immerse?" Also, the meaning of the word rendered baptize.

In answer to the first inquiry, we would say, we have never seen any definition of bapto that contained the words sprinkle or pour, but all agree in defining it by the English word immerse, or its equivalents.

The word baptizo, rendered baptize, is defined by different lexicographers as follows:—Waldrus, A. D. 1537, "Immerse." Stephens, 1572, "Immerse, submerge, bury in water, wash, bathe." Scapula, 1579, "Immerse, submerge, bury in water, wash, bathe." George Pasor, 1637, "Baptize, merge, bathe." J. C. Suicer, 1659, "Immerse, wash." Schrevelius, 1667, "Baptize, merge, bathe." Hedericus, 1772, "Merge, immerse, bury in water, wash, bathe, cleanse in water." Schleusner, 1791, 1, "Immerse, dip, plunge into water. 2, Wash, bathe, cleanse in water." Bretschneider, 1819, "Dip or bathe frequently, bathe, wash, immerse, submerge." Donnegan, "Immerse repeatedly into a liquid, submerge, soak, saturate." Passow, 1, "Immerse often, submerge, (hence) moisten, wet. 2, Draw water. 3, Baptize, wash." Liddell and Scott, 1, "Dip repeatedly, sink, bathe. 2, Draw water. 3, Baptize." Greenfield, "Immerse, immerge, submerge, sink, wash, cleanse, baptize." Robinson, "Immerse, sink, wash, cleanse by washing, wash one's self, bathe, baptize."

The following testimonies are from noted Pedobabtist scholars:—Charles Anthon, L. L. D., an Episcopalian, Professor of Latin and Greek in Columbia College, N. Y., says the primary meaning is dip or immerse; and that the secondary refers to the same leading idea. Sprinkling is entirely out of the question.

George Campbell, D. D., President of Marischal College, Scotland, Presbyterian, says in his Preliminary Dissertations to the Gospels, that the original Greek words mean immerse, immersion.

Thomas Chalmers, D. D., chief founder of the Presbyterian Free Church, of Scotland, says in his work on Romans:—"The original meaning of the word baptism is immersion."

Moses Stuart, D. D., Congregationalist, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, says:—"Bapto and baptizo mean to dip, plunge, or immerse into any liquid."

Martin Luther says:—"Baptism is Greek. In Latin it may be translated immersio, since we immerse any thing into water, that the whole may be covered with water."

John Calvin, founder of Presbyterianism, says:—"The very word baptize, however, signifies to immerse."—O.

"Her Spirit came Again."

Bro. Wm. Lucas wishes to know the meaning of Spirit in Luke 8: 55, which reads as follows:—"And her spirit came again and she arose straightway, and he commanded to give her meat." The preceding verse reads:—"And he (Jesus) put them all out, and took her by the hand, saying, maid, arise."

This Scripture is from the account of the resurrection of Jarius' daughter. It is certain that the word spirit does not represent the maid, or the individual indicated by the pronouns her and she, consequently it does not represent the one addressed by the Savior, and whom he raised from the dead; hence it follows that this spirit is not a component part of the maid.

Spirit is used in this passage to represent "the breath of life." In harmony with this fact, Wakefield, Thompson, the Emphatic Diaglott, and the Improved version, render it breath. When "the breath of life" came again, the maid lived. This "breath of life" never thinks, wills or reasons, but no one can think, or live without it. All living creatures upon our earth die when it is taken away. Says David, 'Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled, thou takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust."—Ps. 104 29.

Is it Literal?

Bro. H. G. Smiley inquires if Rev 20 5, is literal? The passage reads.—"But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."

We know of no reason why this passage should not be taken in its most literal sense. We think every word of this passage should be understood literally. Indeed, we find no figures from the 4th verse of Rev. 20, to the close of the book —O

"No Authority."

It is said the Pope has come to a point where he has "no authority." His temporal power is just expiring, and it has become a question of no small interest with France and Italy, what shall be done with him and the city of Rome. It is said he is now sustained by "troops over whom he can have no authority." These are the troops of Napoleon III., hence the French power, directed by Napoleon, is the present and last head, or husband, that is to sustain the "woman" of Rev. chap 17 Then it follows that the "scarlet-colored beast" is near to "perdition," and hence the resurrection of the dead is not far away. O Lord, hasten the time.—O

My Spirit.

We clipped the following sensible article from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, published in Portsmouth, N. H. This is the oldest religious paper on our continent. It was first published by Elias Smith in 1808. He was the founder of the Christian denomination, and believed in the destruction of the wicked. Bro. Kidder, who wrote the following article, is an able Christian preacher, who holds the same views as the supporters of the Crisis. Quite a number of the Christian preachers believe in the "sleep of the dead" and "the destruction of the wicked." These truths are spreading in all directions, and many of the most devoted members of the different churches are seeing the light on these points, and rejoicing in it; notwithstanding the bitter opposition they have to encounter from those who have not examined the subject. Let us now read Bro. Kidder's article:—

"'And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior.'—LUKE 1: 47.

My good brother Haley wishes me to give him an explanation of this text. There are some intricacies about it which I cannot explain as well as some other person might, myself having never been in like circumstances; as he may learn by reading the 24th and 25th verses of this chapter, also the 31st, 36th and 38th verses of the same chapter; read from 38th to 55th verse. See also, Matt. 1: 18th to the 25th verse. For the nice particulars mentioned in those texts, I would refer him to some one who is better informed on the subject. I suppose he does not think that Mary and Elizabeth met to discuss or teach any theological dogma, or to define terms. If he does think so, I hope he may have that error corrected before leaving Andover, for such was not the fact.

I conclude that pneuma in this text, represents feeling; and that Mary's peculiar state of feeling or spirit was joyous; she was filled with exceeding great joy, as can be learned from verse 46th, where she says, 'My soul (psuke) doth magnify the Lord.' 'And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior.' I think it means just as much as Luke 10: 21st, which says, 'In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit.' (pneuma.) The construction of the two texts are so similar that Wakefield arranges them alike.

Joy is a pleasing, emotional sensation, which all feel when circumstances are favorable. Anything which is gratifying or gladdening causes an emotional sensation to pass over us, thereby producing joy. It is a state opposite to that mentioned in Gen. 26: 35th verse 'Which were a grief of mind (ruah) unto Isaac and to Rebekah.' The margin reads, 'bitterness of spirit.' (ruah.)

Bro. Haley's first question to me was this, 'What would you give as a concise, lucid definition of the word pneuma?' I did not give the full definition because it was not asked for. Its full definition as given by Liddell & Scott, is 'wind, air, the air we breathe, the breath of life, life, the spirit of a living being, a spirit, a spiritual being;' metaphorically 'feeling.' This last is undoubtedly its meaning in Luke 1: 47.

Liddell and Scott give twenty different words derived from pneuma. And the words wind, air, windy, breath, or some of their modifications, are given as the definition of each of the twenty words. Of texts containing such expressions as 'The spirit of man,' 'his spirit,' 'my spirit,' &c., where pneuma is used in connection with man, I know of no one in the New Testament which undoubtedly teaches that pneuma is an immortal, conscious entity, capable of living out of the body before birth or after death. From the absence of such testimony I am not a believer in the sentiment.

I know that 1st Thess. 5: 23, is relied on to prove the immortality of the spirit; 'And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit (pneuma) and soul (psuke) and body (soma) be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.' If this text teaches the immortality of one, it does of all. If the spirit is immortal the soul and body are also immortal; for the prayer of Paul places them on equal terms. All need the same help, all need to be preserved blameless until the coming of Jesus Christ; and who can tell that their condition is not equal?

The period of their preservation is specified to be, until the coming of Jesus Christ, and not till death merely. From what Paul has said in this connection, it is evident that he had in mind both classes of saints,—the dead and the living. In chapter 4th, commencing with verse 13th, he says, 'I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.' He offers no word of comfort to those brethren concerning their dead while in the state of death; on the contrary the only comfort administered is, that they will be brought by God from their sleep at the coming of Jesus. His first statement is, 'Jesus died and rose again;' his second, 'even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.' Let the phrases 'even so' and 'them also,' be duly considered and all will be plain. The sleepers are to be brought from their place of rest in the same manner as Jesus was raised from the dead. It is evident that Paul understood the subject in this light, from what he has said in chapter 5th, verse 10th. 'Who died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.' In 2d Thess., he taught that the Lord would not come for a long time; in the 2d chapter this is plain and puts the matter beyond all doubt. He did not believe that Christ was then immediately to appear. Hence his prayer was designed to cover the whole ground from the time he prayed until the Lord should come. The whole 'spirit and soul and body,' whether living or dead needed to be 'preserved by God unto the coming of Jesus Christ.'—A. KIDDER.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"The Apostolic Church."

The Rev. Mr. Andrews has now completed his course of lectures in this city advertised some while since in the Crisis. Among the subjects treated were the following:—

"The order of the Divine Dispensations, The Coming of the Lord, The Ministry of Elias, The Divine Remedy for the Lawlessness of the Last Days, The Rebuilding of the Christian Altar, The Millennial Kingdom, and the Present Work of God in the Church."

There are subjects of vital importance to the present generation of christians, though so esteemed by but few. The views entertained by Mr. Andrews concerning the literal, personal character, and nearness of the Second Advent of the Lord, are essentially those held by American Adventists; his views of the Millennial Kingdom, are those commonly believed by English Millenarians; but his peculiarity lies in his views concerning "The Divine Remedy for the lawlessness of the last days, The Rebuilding of the Christian Altar, and the present work of God in the Church," which are radically those of "The Apostolic Church." The Divine remedy is considered to consist in the Economy of God, as illustrated in the primitive and apostolic order of the Christian church, from which the church has fallen away, and to which she must return as to the "old paths," ordained of God, in order to her finding safety. In this is contemplated the truth in general, together with the ministries and ordinances especially that were first set in the church. The ministries were those enumerated by St. Paul (Eph. 4: 8–11), being Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, and Pastors, which, so far from being accidental or temporary offices, are vital and indispensable to the perfect ministration of the mind and rule of Christ in the world during His absence,—having their germ in Him who is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever"; in whom is "the fulness of the God-head bodily"; whose mystical body is the Church—"the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." So that whatever was in Christ as the "man Christ Jesus," and as such the minister of God, is essentially in the church to-day providing she continues to maintain her high standing in Christ. In this is considered the order, holiness, and peace of God: while opposed to this is the anarchy or babel, the fleshly-mindedness, and convulsions now being realized by the secularised church and world. The Rebuilding of the Christian Altar, and present work of God in the church, is considered to be the restoration of the order and former modes of worship: having its type in the acts of Elijah, who, (1.) after the drought, and (2.) before his translation, restored and rebuilt the Altar of God. Of course much of this has for its proof the promise that Elijah shall come "before the great and terrible day of the Lord," who shall "restore all things."

What will be the result of the Lectures we cannot now say. The attendance has not been large, but if eager attention on the part of those in attendance signifies anything, then we judge quite a number must be deeply interested. Indeed we know a worthy few, formerly of our own congregation and recently worshiping at Joy St., people of much spiritual discernment, who have testified to the pleasure they have experienced in listening to these lectures. A number of the clergymen of Boston have attended. Whether any steps will be taken to organize a congregation of this peculiar faith, we are not informed.

It is now about thirty years since the people of this faith have been gathered into separate congregations. In this country as yet there are not perhaps more than half a dozen fully organized congregations, two or three of which we have happened to know something about. They are, we believe, a people of unexceptional christian character, moderate zeal, and established in the faith of the speedy advent of the Lord, and in the method suggested as the preparation of the first fruits of the harvest, which is to be gathered during the tribulation shortly to come upon the earth. In many respects they resemble the Episcopal church, but have ministers from the various leading denominations of Christendom; among them are some who were eminent as scholars and preachers in their former denominations. Our impression is, they are making perhaps slow but steady progress; and with time would command much greater attention than they have as yet received from the religious public of this country.—M.

MRS. S. P. BLOOD. The Postmaster of Manlius, N. Y., informs us that this worthy sister in Christ is dead, and that her paper is not taken from the office. Sister Blood has for very many years been a burning light in the region where she has lived, and must be lamented as a faithful and we believe consistent believer in the speedy return of our long absent Lord.

She has long been a faithful patron to our publications. Are there none to fill her place as subscriber to the Crisis.—M.

"The woman that lives without eating."

In Chester, Warren Co., N. Y., is a lady by the name of Hays, wife of Simeon Hays, who lives without eating or drinking. Her case has been examined by many physicians, and they are compelled to admit the fact that she lives without food. She is about thirty-one years of age. Her parents are members of the Baptist church, and she has been a member of the same since she was fourteen years of age, and has been known as a consistent christian.

She has not walked a step since the 8th of Nov 1854. During the early part of her sickness she desired her friends to hold meetings in her room that she might enjoy them in company with her brethren and sisters in Christ. About the middle of June, 1855, she was taken with fits, in which she has continued from a few hours to over seven weeks at a time, with intervals of only a few minutes to a few seconds. In these short intervals, varying from five minutes to a few seconds, she seems to be aware of her condition.

From the 28th of June 1855 to the 28th of June 1856, she lived entirely on apple and berry sauce, not averaging more than three or four spoonfuls a day. If she took more nourishing food, it was instantly vomited. From the 28th of June 1856 to the 20th of Feb. 1857, she took nothing only what was in a liquid state, and that was mostly lemonade. During the period last mentioned,—about eight months—all her nourishment was made from sixteen lemons, about one pound and a half of sugar, two tea spoonfuls of berry juice, one of currant juice, and twenty drops of laudanum.

Soon after she ceased to eat common food. She said God would show to the world, through her, that he could "keep people alive without eating or drinking." Her spasms are said to be terrible. While in a fit on Jan. 1st. 1856, it is said, "She threw herself backward and forward, bringing her head and feet nearly together, three hundred and fifteen times, without intermission." Every nerve in the system was strained to its utmost capacity. Previous to her sickness in 1854, she was of a robust constitution. She has been blind since "the first of June 1856, and has been in a state of almost entire unconsciousness." At different periods she has been "from fifty to one hundred and fifty days without evacuation of the bowels and nearly the same time without urinary evacuation." The action of her stomach and liver are said to be suspended. While in her fits, she frequently remains some time without any apparent breathing,—At one time, sixty-two minutes.

Dr. J. L. Stoddard, of Glen's Falls, N. Y., visited her, and says over date of Sept. 21st, 1857,

"I have a number of pages which I took down of Mr. Hay's statements and affidavits, and the testimony and affidavits of others, but as the statements already made about Mrs. Hays are substantially correct, I will only state that, for two years past, she has not eaten as much as she would eat at one meal when in health,—that she has not swallowed any thing, not even a drop of water since the 20th of Feb. 1857, and has not had a discharge from her bowels since June 1857 . . .

The physiological condition of the woman is such as to render it impossible for her to receive nourishment. She is in almost continuous spasms of her whole body—mouth, throat, stomach, &c.,—which renders deglutition impossible. There are also frequent and violent heaving and retching at the the bare smell of food, ever so secretly carried into the room . . . As well might you talk of a person taking food while under the operation of an emetic, as for this woman to take food in the condition she is in."

We have just written to Mr. Hays to ascertain her present condition, and will endeavor to inform our readers as to the result of our inquiries.—O.

"The Cause in Boston."

Under this head, in last week's Crisis, notice was taken of five meetings held in Boston. Some of the ministers connected with these churches were called Elders, one was called Reverend, and one who was at that time stopping with the East Boston church, was called Brother. To all this I do not object, except I have no title, and I do not wish to have one attached to my name. It was also stated that J. S. White had dissolved his connection with the church in East Boston. This is a mistake. I am still with the church as I have been, except I have arranged with them to be away a portion of the time.

I find that the friends abroad want to know why there are so many churches in Boston. The cause for there being so many churches may be seen in Rom. 16: 17, and John 3: 9;—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences, contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." "I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not." J. S. W.

East Boston, March 10th.

☞ We are obliged to our BRO. J. S. WHITE for the correction of our last week's mistake.—M.

For the Crisis.

Be Ready.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

The above is the solemn injunction of our blessed Lord and Master, enjoined on the generation living in the days when the last signs bespeak to the mind of faith the certainty of his near approach. It now seems to me we have entered into the very last moments of probation—moments of awful suspense. A constant and momentary state of preparedness is now the only safeguard. O! what watchfulness and devotion, with firm reliance through faith and obedience to our ever merciful Redeemer is necessary, in order to be found of him in peace. The following anecdote of good, devoted John Wesley is very much to the point, and doubtless he will soon wake up in glory:—

"ALWAYS READY.—A lady once said to Mr. Wesley, 'Supposing that you knew you were to die at twelve o'clock to-morrow night, how would you spend the intervening time?' 'How, madam?' he replied; 'why, just as I intend to spend it now. I should preach this evening at Gloucester, and and again at five to-morrow morning; after that I should ride to Tewsbury, preach in the afternoon, and meet the societies in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's, who expects to entertain me, converse and pray with the family as usual, retire to my room at ten o'clock, commend myself to my heavenly Father, lie down to rest, and wake up in glory.'"

Dearly beloved, let us awake and in the fulness of our heart labor not only to save ourselves, but let us pray, exhort, admonish, beseech, with all long-suffering and doctrine, poor, perishing sinners to flee from the yawning gulf of destruction. Professed preacher, what are you doing? Examine, search, see and find out at once! The fiery indignation of a justly incensed and righteous God, speedily approacheth! This generation is doomed to witness very soon the last act in the drama of all sublunary things. The nations begin to feel some little of the dregs of the cup. They will soon spue and fall and rise no more.

"When the foes' distress comes,
Then the church's rest comes.
We shall have a joyful day
When the King of kings comes."

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH."—"This is a queer book, and every minister at least should get a copy and read it. Its theology is perhaps orthodox, wherever the writer meddles with it. But its intensely practical character can hardly fail to make modern preachers both laugh and wince. We think the 'notes' are, perhaps, the most useful, as they certainly are the most pointed and personal. There is, however, a 'power of truth' evolved by our author, which it would be well for our preachers and churches to ponder."—Phil. Chris Chronicle (Bapt.)

Remarkable Phenomenon.—The Montreal Gazette, of the 7th ult., says that between two and three o'clock on Thursday morning a bright red light, having the shape and appearance of a sword, was seen in the western part of the heavens, and remained visible for some minutes. It had a very striking appearance, and by many was looked upon as an omen of evil potent.

☞ Petetneet, the eminent Utah chief, is dead. His wife was killed over his grave by beating out her brains with an axe.

☞ The British navy consists of 856 vessels in all, building, preparing, or in commission, 702 of them steamers.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship City of Washington, we have advices from Liverpool to the 26th ult., and from Queenstown the 27th. News unimportant.

The Americans in London celebrated Washington's birthday with a public breakfast.

George Thompson asserted that the efforts to create in England hostility to the North had totally failed.

Consul Morse denounced the curse of slavery as the sole cause of the trouble.

Cyrus W. Field proposed a toast of England and of America, and spoke strongly in favor of the maintainance of friendly relation. He explained away many irritating subjects, and asserted that it was the most earnest desire of the Washington government to maintain amicable relations. He did not believe England could for a moment recognize the Southern Confederacy, the corner-stone of which is slavery.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fortress Monroe, March 7. A flag of truce from Norfolk brought down the commander of the French steamer. He represents great excitement in Norfolk. The hotels are swarming with officers, mostly from the Gulf States. The Virginia troops are being all sent away. The people are in dread of the destruction of the city in case of an attack. A strong force was concentrating at Suffolk to check Burnside, who was reported to have occupied Winton in force and moving on Suffolk.

The reason given by the rebels for not returning Corcoran is that maps and drawings have been found concealed on his person.

The rebel House of Representatives have passed a resolution by a vote of 71 to 11, directing military commanders to destroy all the cotton and tobacco that is in danger of falling into the hands of the enemy.

A resolution was also adopted asking the President to inform the House what foreign vessels of war are doing in Hampton Roads.

The Richmond Dispatch says a vessel drawing 16 feet of water passed out of Charleston harbor.

March 8th. A dispatch from Atlanta, Georgia, says the Federal troops have possession of Murfreesboro, and that Gen. A Sydney Johnston has retreated to Decatur, Alabama.

Washington, March 8th. The Commissioner of Indian affairs, Mr. Dole, has returned from the west. While in Kansas and Nebraska the Indian chiefs called upon him and tendered the services of their warriors for military purposes, but they cannot now be accepted.

Upwards of 6000 loyal Indian refugees, including families from the Cherokee country, are in the lower part of Kansas. In their retreat thither from superior forces of the enemy, they threw away everything which impeded their way. The panic among them at that time is represented as frightful. Gen Hunter supplied them with articles for their immediate necessities. Congress has passed an act for their relief.

Poolesville, Va., March 8th. To Brig. Gen Williams.—"Leesburg was entirely evacuated yesterday morning by the rebels. The report is that Col. Geary's advance is there."

N. J. Davis, Brig. General.

The command took many prisoners and stores, and are in possession of the Banks, Post-office, and public buildings. Forts Beuregard and Evans were also taken. This brilliant achievement, by a well timed blow and skillful manoeuvre is of vast importance.

Washington, March 8th. By the President's war order, No. 2, he has ordered the army of the Potomac to be divided into army corps, to be commanded by commanders of corps selected according to seniority of rank, as follows. 1st. A corps consisting of four divisions, to be commanded by Major General Sumner, 2nd, a corps consisting of three divisions, to be commanded by Brig Gen Heintzelman, 4th, a corps consisting of three divisions, to be commanded by Brig Gen Keyes, 5th Gen. Banks and Gen. Shields commands, the latter (late Gen Lander's) to be the fifth corps to be commanded by Major Gen. Banks.

Fortress Monroe, March 8. The dulness of Old Point was startled at 10 o'clock to-day by the announcement that a myterious vessel, supposed to be the Merrimac, looking like a submerged house, with the roof only above water, was moving down from Norfolk by the channel in front of Sewall's Point batteries. Signal guns were fired by the Cumberland and Congress to notify the Minnesota, St Lawrence and Roanoke of approaching danger, and all was excitement in and about Fortress Monroe.

There was nothing protuding above the water but a flag-staff flying the rebel flag, and a short smoke stack. She moved along slowly, and turned into the channel leading to Newport News, steamed direct for the frigates Cumberland and Congress, which were lying at the mouth of James river. As soon as she came within range of the Cumberland the latter opened on her with her heavy guns, but the balls struck and glanced off, having no more effect on her than peas from a pop-gun. Her ports were all closed and she moved on in silence, but with a full head of steam.

In the meantime, as the Merrimac was approaching our two frigates on one side, the iron-clad steamers Yorktown and Jamestown came down James river and engaged our frigates on the other side. The batteries at Newport News also opened on the Jamestown and Yorktown, and did all in their power to assist the Cumberland and Congress, which being sailing vessels, were at the mercy of the approaching steamers.

The Merrimac in the meantime kept steadily on her course and slowly approached the Cumberland, when she and the Congress, at at a distance of 100 yards, rained full broadsides on the iron clad monster. The shot took no effect, glancing upwards and flying off, having the only effect to check her progress for the moment. After receiving the first broadside of the two frigates she ran into the Cumberland, striking her about midships and literally laying open her sides. She then drew off, fired a broadside into the disabled ship and again dashed against her with her iron clad prow, and knocking in her side left her to sink, while she engaged the Congress, which lay about a quarter of a mile distant.

The Congress in the meantime kept up a sharp engagement with the Yorktown and Jamestown, and having no regular crew on board of her, and seeing the hopelessness of resisting the iron clad steamer, at once struck her colors.

On the Congress striking her colors the Jamestown approached and took from on board all her officers as prisoners, but allowed the crew to escape in boats. The vessel being thus cleared, was fired by the rebels.

The Merrimac and her two iron-clad companions then opened with shot and shell on Newport News batteries, which briskly returned the fire.

LATER.

Washington, March 9. [By telegraph from Fortress Monroe.] The Ericsson steamer Monitor arrived at Fortress Monroe last night. Early this morning she was attacked by the three vessels, the Merrimac, the Jamestown and Yorktown. After a five hours' contest they were driven off, the Merrimac in a sinking condition.

St. Louis, March 10. The following is an official dispatch to Major General McClellan:

"The army of the southwest, under Gen. Curtis after three days' hard fighting, has gained a most glorious victory over the combined forces of Van Dorn, McCulloch, Price, and McIntosh. Our loss in killed and wounded is estimated at 1000. That of the enemy is still larger. Guns, flags, provisions, &c., were captured in large quantities. Our cavalry are in pursuit of the flying enemy.

H. W. Halleck, Major General."

Charlestown Va., March 10. It is now ascertained beyond a doubt that Winchester has been evacuated by the rebels. All the prominent places between here and Winchester are occupied by our troops.

Washington, March 10. The Intelligencer publishes a rumor that the rebels are evacuating Manassas, but some do not believe the report.

Those versed in naval affairs have full confidence in the success of our naval operations at Fortress Monroe.

Baltimore. Fort Clinch is taken possession of, also the rebel steamer Darlington, loaded with wagons, ammunition and camp equipage.

Advent Conference.

The Annual Conference of Adventists will be held at Chapman Hall, Boston, to commence Tuesday afternoon, March 25th, and hold over the following Sabbath. It is our purpose to make this gathering a regular old fashioned Second Advent Conference. It is expected that a good number of preaching brethren will be present to speak to the people. We extend a cordial invitation to our brethren abroad, as also to those living in this city and vicinity.

F. H. Berick, for the brethren.

Conference.

The next session of the Maine Western Quarterly Conference will be held at West Poland, Free Chapel, March 20th, 1862. Come, ye who have been called to labor in the Lord's vineyard, and work with us a few days in West Poland. The toiling time is almost over, and still there is much to be done. How important then that we concentrate our forces at such gatherings, and in the name of God strive to prepare men for the judgment. In behalf of the Conference,

Jas. A. Libby.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The next session of the Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will be holden in Danielsonville, Ct., commencing Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and closing Friday evening, the 28th.

This conference has been signally blest at nearly all of its sessions in the past. Though never large in numbers, it has sometimes been mighty in power. Those who have come have brought life and love and strength with them. Dear brethren and sisters of R. I. and Ct., let the coming conference be no exception. Let each church send one delegate or more without fail, what if it does cost a trifle to come, the good imparted and received will repay "an hundred fold." The first one of these meetings I attended cost me five dollars. The blessing I got wealth could not buy. If really impossible to send a delegate, then send us a good hearty letter. No matter if several in each church write. You don't know how eager we listen to tidings coming from the scattered "household of faith." Cheer us with a word. If you are burdened, we beg a chance to share those burdens with you. Come, then, let us rally for God. Come from far and near. Come, brethren in the ministry, in the name of the Lord. Come, and the hospitality of the church in Danielsonville shall bid you welcome. H. F. C., Secretary pro tem.

Western Grove Meetings.

Spring is approaching, and the season for holding grove meetings will soon be here. My arrangements for this enterprise will be made sometime in advance. All who are desirous of my services in this enterprise will please remember that they must correspond with me in season. Don't expect that I can comply with a tithe of the calls, for want of time, but will try to arrange for the interest of the cause. W. Sheldon.

Merrimack, Sauk Co., Wisconsin.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held in Amboy, Lee Co., Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 28th, at two o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

H. G. M'Culloch, Sec. of Conference.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

Business Department.

☞ We would say to those interested that we soon expect some bound copies of the "Reasons of my Hope" and "The Model Church," by H. L. Hastings. These are excellent works.—G.

For the Crisis.

"Tears."

Tears, tears, flowing tears,
Nature's remedy for grief,
Softening sorrow, soothing fears,
Oft to pain a sweet relief.

Tears, tears, scalding tears,
That our cheeks in sorrow lave,
Mar our brightest, happiest years,
From the cradle to the grave.

Tears, tears, childish tears,
Welling up the fount of grief,
Gushing erst for hopes or fears,
A balm for joy—to pain relief.

Tears, tears, bitter tears
Oft in quick succession fall,
When not a ray of hope appears,
And pleasure's cup is turned to gall.

Tears, tears, silent tears,
Shed beneath affliction's rod,
And sighs too deep for mortal ears
Are seen and recognized by God.

Tears, tears, precious tears,
Christ the Savior shed for me,
When his foes, mid taunts and sneers,
Nailed him to the accursed tree.

Tears, tears, there are no tears
In the mansions of the blest;
There may I dwell secure from fears,
Then with Jesus ever rest.

DANIEL W. TELLER.

For the Crisis.

A Plea for the Poor.

NUMBER TWO.

Under the Mosaic economy, special provision was made for the poor. The harvests must not be wholly gathered, but the corners of the fields and the gleanings of the harvest, both of grain and fruits, were required to be left for the poor. See God's care for the destitute as expressed in Deut. 15 : 7 11. He commands those who are blest with earthly good, to open their hand wide unto the poor, and not to let their heart be grieved when they bestowed in charity, but they were to give cheerfully, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

The excellency of Job's character shines not alone in his patience; his kindness to the poor should not be overlooked. So confident was he of his faithfulness in this respect, that he uses the following strong language:—"If I have withheld from the poor his desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel alone, and the fatherless have not eaten thereof; if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep, then let my arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone"! How many of you, dear readers, could make such an appeal as that? He declares that he delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and those who had none to help them. "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor: and the cause which I know not I searched out."

Read the 41st Psalm, and see how rich are the blessings promised to those who "consider the poor." Are they not worth possessing? "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given will he pay him again."—Prov. 19 : 17. We are very ready to lend to one from whom we expect a repayment—no sacrifice is required in this case. But when the Lord becomes the borrower, and gives us his never-failing word in pledge, "Why—I don't know—I really doubt its being my duty—I am too poor," etc., etc.; a hundred excuses are made why we should not lend to the Lord by giving to the poor, showing a lack of faith in the promise, and of christian benevolence toward the unfortunate. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself. He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack." Believest thou these golden promises? Then let thy hands be opened for the relief of the poor and needy in testimony of thy faith. Among the enumerated virtues of the excellent woman given by Lemuel, Prov. 31 : 20, we find this:—"She stretcheth out her hands to the poor: yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy."

We might pass from book to book, and quote passages showing our duty to the poor—God's care for them, and the blessings promised to those who are mindful of their necessities; but the reader can best take a Concordance and trace them out for himself. All through the New Testament we find the same truths conspicuously shining forth, and we cannot be neglectful in this respect without sin. The example of the poor widow, who cast two farthings, which was her all, into the treasury of the Lord, teaches us that none are so poor as to have nothing to give, and that the act of sacrifice thus manifested was so approved by the Lord, as to be recorded for the benefit of his people to the end of time.

The blessed Jesus, though rich with the Father, became one of earth's poor, associating with the poor, blessing the poor, that he might know how to sympathize with them in their sorrows, and leave us an example of humility and love which we ought to imitate. He bids his followers, when making a feast, to invite the poor, the maimed, the halt and the blind to be their guests, promising to recompense them for the benevolent deed, at the resurrection of the just. Who follow this rule? Who? How zealously the apostles labored for the relief of the poor, and how liberally were contributions made for the poor saints. Read Paul's instructions as given in the 8th and 9th chapters of 2d Corinthians.

There are many large-hearted, self-sacrificing ones among us whose labors are abundant in behalf of the poor. Such need no exhortation to stir them up to duty. They love to give, and their liberal souls are made fat by the Lord. Others there are with ample means, who seldom if ever visit the dwellings of the poor; the table of the needy receives no supply from their well-filled pantry and cellar; no comfortable clothing goes from their ample wardrobe to clothe the shivering form of the orphan; the sick widow, toiling in pain to keep her children from starvation and frost, has no sympathy, no aid, from their abundant stores; the invalid dies without any tempting morsel or refreshing beverage from their hands; and yet they vainly dream of standing at last at the right hand of their Judge, and receiving the commendation of "Well done, good and faithful servant." O vain, presumptous hope, fragile as the spider's web! May God help you to awake to a consciousness of your remissness in relation to a most important duty, and to faithfulness in future.

Richmond, Me. M. D. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

An Address

To the Churches within the limits of the Eastern New York, Western Massachusetts and Connecticut Second Advent Conference

May grace, mercy and peace, through our Lord Jesus Christ, rest upon you all now, henceforth, and evermore. Amen. Dearly Beloved: our object in addressing you at this time is, to remove if possible the wrong impressions that have been and are being made, to a greater or less extent, on the minds of quite a number of our brethren and sisters concerning the articles of our Association. Some of them are as follows: First, to institute and then enforce creeds to bind men's consciences. Second, to bring about a localizing system of stationing and removing ministers. Third, to obligate the churches to pay the ministers a stipulated salary, etc. We therefore, on the part of ourselves and our brethren, in all sincerity declare our innocence of all the above or any such designs whatever. We do believe that much evil has ensued, and a vast amount of injury been inflicted on us as a people, for the want of church order, whereby what we consider the truth and cause of God has been made to suffer, and that no injury can possibly result from the administration of Scripture discipline.

Furthermore, we do believe that the New Testament recognizes the association of disciples together, in order to constitute them a church to sympathize, fellowship, and watch over each other in love, "and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone: in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2 : 20–22. The church is compared to a body. "For as we have many members in one body in Christ, and all members have not the same office: so we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."—Rom. 12 : 4, 5. Christ is the head over all things to the church, which is his body."—Eph. 1 : 22, 23. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by one Spirit are we all baptised into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many."—1 Cor. 12 : 12–14.

We also believe it is proper and right to obey the gospel. Eph. 4 : 3,—"Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." 1 Cor. 1 : 10,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment." 1 Pet. 3 : 8,—"Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another; love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous."

We also do believe that it is our duty to obey the apostolic rule, Rom. 16 : 17,—"Now I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them." But we do believe that it is safe to obey the doctrine taught by the apostle. 1 Cor. 5 : 11,—"But now I have written unto you not to keep company, if any man that is called a brother be a fornicator, or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one no not to eat. For what have I to do to judge them also that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person." Such we believe to be Scripture discipline, and a proper rule to govern and be governed by; also, that the gospel demands a separation from unrighteous persons. 2 Cor. 6 : 14,—"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?" Eph. 5 : 11,—"And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Dearly Beloved, we would also address you on another point. We have never undertaken to legislate, nor do we design to legislate in matters of faith, or to interfere with the government of the churches, but may recommend, if desired, as they may deem prudent. And we would now state that the adoption of four articles of church government by the church at Pawling, N. Y., was a local matter, having its origin there, and has not been accepted and recommended by the conference as a standing rule for the churches. We state in conclusion on this point, that all churches are free to adopt such church government as they may consider best calculated to promote the glory of God, and sympathy and fellowship for the body of Christ and members in particular. We therefore reiterate the sentiments of a previous address:

"The object of this conference is to concentrate the labors and sympathies of the preachers and churches within its limits for the effectual spread of the truth, and to improve the moral condition of the churches."

We therefore, believing in the doctrines that have distinguished us as a people, and especially the speedy coming of the Just One, submit the above for your consideration, and in conclusion subjoin the prayer of our Lord and Master, John 17 : 20,—"Neither pray I for these alone, but for them which shall believe on me through their word; that they may all be one as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe thou hast sent me; that they may be one even as we are one. I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one." Eph. 5 : 27,—"That he may present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy, without blemish." Amen.

For the Crisis.

An Appeal to Backsliders.

DEAR FRIENDS:—It is with feelings of deep interest for your eternal welfare, that I with all my unworthiness attempt to address a few lines to you who are wanderers from God and from "Father's house." O! how my heart yearns for you who have once known what it was to have "peace like a river," and that "peace which passeth all understanding." You who have felt the love of God in your hearts, but have gone back to the beggarly elements of this world, how is it with you now? Do you not now and then have a desire for something more lasting than the pleasures of this world, or are you content with your fare? Methinks I hear you say when you speak the sentiments of your hearts, that you are not satisfied with your present situation, but that you oftentimes feel

"An aching void
This world can never fill."

If so, why will you longer remain away? Why not come and seek forgiveness of that dear Friend whom you have so ill used? Do you fear he will not receive you? Then listen while I relate what he has done for me.

I was once like you a wanderer far from the fold of Christ, and seeking for pleasure, but finding none that would satisfy the longings of my soul. For nearly five years I remained away, striving to stifle the still small voice that so earnestly pleaded with me to return to my Savior; and oh! how many times I have resisted the strivings of the Spirit till I have been left without feeling, and almost without hope, fearing that I had grieved the Spirit for the last time, for I knew the Spirit would not always strive with man; but God in his infinite mercy and goodness was very merciful to me, and left me not to go down to ruin; but when almost in despair I threw myself at his feet, oh! how tenderly he received me in open arms, and forgave all my waywardness. Then why need you fear that he will not receive you when he has been so good to me? O! wander no longer, but arise and go to your Father, confess all your wanderings, and be restored to his favor. How many times when seeking the vain things of earth, a stranger to God and his fold, have I brought to mind the precious seasons of prayer I had enjoyed with my Savior in by-gone days, and longed once more to taste of Jesus' pardoning love, and prostrate myself at his feet; but pride revolted, and I remained a wanderer. While I remember these things, I think perhaps you may be in the same situation, and I urge you, if such be the case, to flee at once to Christ. Don't let pride keep you away. Remember if you are not humbled now, that there is a day coming "when every knee shall bow." O break the galling chain that Satan has thrown around you, and fly, oh, fly to Christ, who is waiting to receive you in open arms.

It is not easy work to thus break from the enemy's ranks. You may have a mighty struggle for freedom, but let it come; you will have help from on high, and you will also have the prayers of God's children in your behalf. O that you might realise how precious the moments are that you are wasting! Think how much good you might be doing if you were only in the vineyard of the Lord using your talents for him; but now how different the case; you are wasting the precious moments of time, while thousands around you are traveling the downward road to ruin, and not doing one thing to save yourself or the dying around you. Once more I invite you to come. "The Spirit and the Bride say come." Then why delay? Enlist in the cause of God once more. Valiant-hearted soldiers are wanted, for

"It takes a valiant soldier
To travel the narrow way."

Arise, and covenant once more with God to serve him while time lasts. Could I make the effort for you, oh! how willingly I would do it; but you must act for yourself; you must choose for yourself whether you will have life or death. God help you to make a wise choice, is the prayer of one anxious for your salvation.

"Return, oh wanderer, return,
And seek thy Father's face;
Those new desires which in thee burn
Were kindled by his grace.

Return, oh wanderer, now return,
He hears thy humble sigh;
He sees thy softened spirit mourn,
When no one else is nigh.

Return, oh, wanderer, return,
Thy Savior bids thee live,
Go to his feet, and grateful learn
How freely he'll forgive

Return, oh, wanderer, now return,
And wipe the falling tear;
Thy Father calls, no longer mourn,
'Tis love invites thee near."

All for Good.

"All things work together for good to them that love God"—Rom. 8 28

This is a promise that is difficult for many to realize, notwithstanding it is the word of God. When the humble saint is afflicted and tried, suffers loss of property and friends, is persecuted and forsaken, is it for his good? All for his good if he loves God. But did not Jacob once say, "all these things are against me," when he thought his son was slain? He might have thought so at the time, and the Spirit had not then moved upon the apostle to speak this truth. But look at the results of this supposed bereavement. It did work together for his good, though he spent many days and nights in mourning. The only reasonable solution I can give to this promise is, that the immediate effects of suffering may be grievous to be borne, and we may be led to say it is "against me," and were it not for this precious promise, we should sink in despair.

So I think it is one of the gems in the diadem of promises, left on record for the comfort of the dear ones who are trying to follow the Savior. Then look up when you are under trial, and learn the lesson it is designed to teach, and inquire if there are not multitudes within your knowledge, who are under the same or deeper affliction. Especially call to remembrance the sufferings of Christ, and learn to endure the trials of life without murmuring or repining. D N. SMITH.

For the Crisis.

Seek the Lord all ye Meek Ones.

"Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment, seek righteousness, seek meekness, it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger"—ZEPH. 2 : 3.

There cannot be any doubt but this kind admonition by the prophet applies to the time in which we live, and to those who profess to be the meek of the earth. By reading the latter part of the first chapter, we shall see that it is the great day of the Lord that the prophet says is near, and hasteth greatly, when he will bring distress upon men, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord. This is the condition the world and the professed church are in at the present time; they walk like blind men; 'they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink." But the admonition to seek righteousness and meekness is to the professed people of God. And we as a people, who profess to believe the fulfillment of God's prophetic word, who have been teaching to the world the "good news" of the soon coming of Israel's King, cannot justify ourselves and say the admonition does not apply to us; but we ought rather to humble ourselves as in the dust on account of our sins; because we have not lived before the world as righteously and as meekly as the cause in which we are engaged demands of us. If ever there was a people on earth that should exemplify in their lives the meek spirit and holy life of their Great Leader, and the high and holy calling to which we are called, we ought to be that people. But with deep sorrow it is to be regretted that this cannot be said of us as a people. For fifteen years of the past, we have observed many things, and much that is going on at the present, among those who profess to be looking for the return of our absent Lord which is a "shame even to be spoken of," and a disgrace to those who profess the holy religion of Jesus Christ. We say with deep feeling on this subject, that many have had and still have more religion in their heads than they have in their hearts, or been exhibited in a holy, meek and humble life. We cannot have too great a store of knowledge of the holy and divine things of God,—if it does not "puff" us up, and we think we know more than everybody else. The spirit of combativeness has been made more manifest among many of our brethren, than the spirit of Christ. If one sees a little more truth or error, as the case may be, than some one else, then he must have his views published; so if it can't come out through the press, he gets his hobby horse, and off he goes, trying to make everybody believe as he does. Some believe and some don't. Well, they can't walk any longer, striving together for the one spirit, but there must be a division; and who will say that this is the way to practice meekness and righteousness? Would not Paul say, if here now, ye are carnal? The real christian is a living epistle, known and read by all who know him; not by the correctness of his Bible views, but by his daily walk and conversation, his meek and Christ-like example, "denying himself of all ungodliness and "worldly lusts." Examine yourself and see if you are not daily living in the practice of something that can justly be called "worldly lust." I am satisfied that a great many are living thus, and at the same time read that every one that hath within them the blessed hope of being made like Christ, will purify themselves even as he is pure. And who would acknowledge that Jesus was the Christ—the annointed of God—and that he fulfilled in his first advent, the mission his Father sent him on, if he had lived as many of his professed servants do; instead of healing the sick, curing the lame, giving sight to the blind, he had engaged in bloody war and strife, in putting to death his enemies, and for filthy lucre's sake been always on the lookout for a chance to make a good bargain, and shave his brother (Jewish Bro.,) out of all he could, and then drag him before Cæsar's court to obtain what he got unjustly? No sane person would have acknowledged him to be the Son of God. Neither should any one be acknowledged to be his disciple, who practices such a course. O! beware, my brother, whom you embrace as a brother in Christ. Our Great Leader has told us who he embraced as his brother, and sister, and mother. Matt. 12 : 49, 50.

Let the admonition of the prophet be heeded. Seek righteousness, seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. A little more praying and sobriety is very much needed among many of our brethren and sisters. Some to guard against sectarian forms and practices, jump over all, and do not even have family prayer. To me, such appear more like dead epistles than living ones. Again, there is too much conforming to the world, it aping the world in dress, and many foolish and needless things, which do not add to our comfort or health. My sister, please be more particular in adorning yourself with that ornament which Peter recommends to you, which is in the sight of God of great value. It is high time for the church to awake, and stand in readiness with her bridal robes on, for soon she will be invited to the marriage supper, and none but the meek and righteous ones will be admitted.

"How careful then ought we to live,
With what religious fear,
Who such a strict account must give
For our behavior here."

Many are the perils that surround God's trusting ones at this time, and many are the snares laid for them. And who shall be able to stand in these evil days? The meek who work righteousness, they shall stand and will not be ashamed before him at his coming.—Isa. 25 : 9, 1 John 2 : 28.

The hope and the harvest, the crown and the kingdom, the prise and the marriage supper, should have their proper place in our whole religious life. If there be anything real or reliable in our religion, it must be that which occupies so large a place in Revelation, which involves the veracity of God—the honor of Jesus, and the inheritance of the saints. For this, dear reader, "be ready." The Lord is coming, therefore, be ye also ready." None are ready, but those who are as believing as obedient Noah was in his day.

We are ready only so far as we believe what God has revealed, and maintain a practical conformity to his revealed plan, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

This event must be near. The condition of the political world, the prophetic periods and the descriptive prophecies, and the events called "signs," are about terminating. We cannot swing of into the distant future for the end of the times of the Gentiles, without leaving those essential portions of truth, and also the doctrine of Divine Providence and promise. And in the language of an able writer, "God has guided his waiting people to this age!" Here the time ends; here the leading lines of prophetic light are verging to a focal point; here expectation of a coming crisis is rife; here the church and all reformers are toiling for a speedy triumph; here the heaving world, as if in its last pangs, is struggling to be free. Here it has been warned; here we have entered, says Cunningham, the period of awful expectation indicated by the parable of the virgins; thus the command comes with overwhelming weight, thrilling every nerve, "be ye also ready." "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." Amen.

Seek righteousness, and seek meekness, and ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger. G. DILLABAUGH.

Don't neglect the Children.

Under the above heading it is thought a few remarks might not be wholly out of place, in view of the delusions and evil tendencies that surround the rising generation. And here it may be proper to inquire, Are we, as a denomination, doing what we can to instruct the children in the grand fundamental principles of Bible morality? Can we not do something more by way of imparting Sunday School information? Should we not have some easy digest of Biblical teaching from which useful lessons might be conveyed to the children and youth now growing up amid so many noxious and sin-dyed influences?

Impressed with the brevity of time, and the importance of doing quickly whatever duty, in the light of the gospel, may urge, the writer is persuaded these queries and suggestions will not be altogether without interest to the Advent brethren. The labors of our ministry, being mainly itinerant, present some obstacles to the introduction and success of this enterprise, which are not met with by those laboring in the capacity of pastors; yet, is it not obvious that the subject may be laid before parents, and Sunday Schools organized and put in operation by the ministering brethren, as they go from place to place, and some one in each location induced to take the oversight of them? In this way, it would seem, much valuable instruction might be communicated, Sabbath breaking restrained, the cause of God advanced, and much good done. Everywhere around us may be seen children and youth growing up almost in the entire absence of either preceptive or exemplary moral and religious instruction. In many instances even the reading of the Scriptures is wholly discarded as an unavailing exercise; thus leaving the minds of the young to the unbridled license of the passions. It has ever been the experience of the past, that as parents and others having the care of the young have omitted the plain, ethical, God-sanctioned truths of the Bible, there has been a corresponding departure from the standard of morals in society; and hence have arisen irreligion, dissimulation, faction, and almost every enormity with which the present age abounds.

The religious instruction of the young has received the approbation of God in all ages of the world, and not only so, but it was expressly enjoined upon the patriarch Abraham, of whom he says, "For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him."—Gen. 18 : 19. With God's approbation of Abraham, may be contrasted his sore displeasure with Eli, on account of the sinful indulgence and negligence of that parent in the discharge of his duty towards his sons. In their distress, how great was his own. How imperious the admonition! How awful the example!

A Child's Experience.

DEAR CHILDREN:—As our dear Bro. Grant has given the children a place in the Crisis, I will write a little of my own experience, thinking perhaps it may encourage some who are trying to serve the Lord. When about ten years of age, I heard the sound that Jesus was soon coming. I wanted to be ready that I might be saved with the good and loved of earth, and see my little sister who was sleeping in the grave. I read in the Bible that Jesus noticed even the children, and if we confess and forsake our sins, he will forgive them all. I felt willing to do anything the Lord required; went to him, told him of my sins, asked him to forgive and receive me, and I had real joy and peace, such as I could not find in the pleasures of childhood. I read in the word of God about those who believed on Jesus. They confessed their sins, and were baptized, as he had commanded, to show that their sins were washed away in the blood of Jesus who died to save them; and as he died and rose again, even so all that sleep in Jesus will awake and live again when he comes. I found it was a command to believe and be baptized, and feeling it to be my duty, gladly I obeyed, with one of my companions. After I came up from the watery grave I felt such happiness as tongue cannot express, not transitory joy that is over as soon as the flash of excitement is past. I wanted others to go with me to the better land, and talked with my playmates, trying to persuade them to seek the Lord.

A year or two passed away. She who started with me was soon surrounded with the young and pleasure-seeking throng. Gradually she was led away from the Savior she once loved so well, and now is scoffing at those who travel in the narrow way. And now, my young friends, let us take warning from this sad instance, and be watchful lest we be taken in the same snares, for they surround us. Let us be very watchful and pray much, for we cannot of ourselves resist temptation. We need the help of God. Let us ask, and the promise is we shall receive. Let us not be ashamed of Jesus. The same Jesus that went away will come in a little while, and if faithful we shall be saved. To those who are almost persuaded to be christians I would say, start now for the kingdom. Jesus is waiting to receive you. Come to him and find lasting peace. Sinner, come. From your unworthy sister.

Answers to Questions.

BRO. GRANT:—I think I have found the answers to some of the questions in the Crisis of Feb. 12th.

Amram was the father of Moses.—Obadiah hid the prophets.—The ungodly and sinners will appear on the left hand of the Judge.—The wicked are to be chased out of the world.—Job 18 : 18. It is mentioned as one of the transgressions of Israel that they sold the righteous for silver and the poor for "a pair of shoes," in Amos 2 : 6. Goliah was nine and three-fourths feet high. Og's bedstead was of iron. 1. In Acts 17 : 11, I find an account that looks something like a Bible class. 2. Judges 3 : 29. 3. Jabal was the father of all such as dwell in tents and have cattle.—Gen. 4 : 20. 4. I think Enoch is the oldest man living.

FROM CELINA GILBERT.

Mr. Editor:—I noticed an article in the Crisis of the formation of a "Try" Company or Society. I think such a society would be the means of doing much good. Therefore I will give you my name and influence. I drink neither tea nor coffee, nor any intoxicating liquors; and I despise tobacco in any form.

I should desire the publication of a Sunday School paper. I once took the Youth's Guide, printed at the Herald office. I liked it very much, but I have not seen it for several years. I will get as many subscribers as I can to help start a paper.

Cordova, Ill.

FROM MOSES B THAYER.

I wish to be a member of the "Try" Company. I will try to answer the questions asked in the last paper by giving references.

1. Ex. 6 : 20. 2. 1 Kings 18 : 4–12. 3. Thrust out. 4. The wicked. 5. Amos 2 : 6. 6. Eleven feet four inches. 7. Iron. 8. Gen. 3 : 15. 10. Judges 3 : 29. 11. Gen. 9 : 21. 12. Heb. 7 : 1–4,—Melchisedec.

Now I hope that a good number of children will join the "Try" Company, and let us be doers and not hearers only, and follow the example of our Savior. Yours truly.

I want to be one of your "Try" Company.

The Cross.

"Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."—Heb. 12: 2.

The cross! the cross! the holy cross,
Which Christ my Lord once bore for me!
It cleanses me from all my dross,
And gives me gospel liberty.

It gives me peace and joy divine,
And makes my pathway bright and clear;
Unites me with the living Vine,
And fills me with a heavenly cheer.

When doubts and fears perplex my mind,
And all around looks dark and drear,
I take the cross, and straightway find
The Lord, my present help, is near.

The cross! blest altar, at whose base,
When weary, I can lay me down,
And taste the sweets of Jesus' grace,
And see by faith the promised crown.

O, blessed instrument of heaven,
To purify and make me white!
No greater boon was ever given
To take from us all earthly blight.

Ah! this is what my Savior bore,
And can I not endure the same?
Yes! for the joy that's just before,
I'll bear the cross, despise the shame

O, heavenly King, be thou my shield!
O, strengthen me when sorely pressed!
Teach me the Spirit's sword to wield,
And how to use the weapon best.

Faith and Works.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"—Jas. 2: 14, 15.

I purpose to make a special application of this reasoning of James to the case of those brethren who publish the evidence of our faith. We all know that printing materials and paper cost money, and the laborers must be paid. These "swift messengers" fly through the land, and preach the "everlasting gospel" to many who hear not the voice of any living creature of "the blessed hope"; shall we clip their wings by withholding the means? While the great men of the earth are expending their millions to sustain temporal kingdoms, let us show our faith in the "EVERLASTING KINGDOM" by contributing the means of publishing it to the extent of our ability. We all want the "Messenger" to serve as a "watchman" to tell us "What of the night"; but let not the "hire of the laborers be kept back by fraud," lest the "rust" of that which is kept back should be "a witness against us" (James 5); but let us all "be patient unto the coming of the Lord," while we behold earthly kingdoms tottering and trembling as in the last expiring agony of their dissolution, and witness the awful destruction of human life, and money wasted in the effort to sustain them. Verily, the cries of them which have reaped" for those who "have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton," and whose "hire has of them been kept back by fraud," "have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

If there be any prophecy in the Bible concerning the condition of these United States, I believe it is found in Jas. 5: 1-6. I think, for present is a remarkable "sign of the times"; and if verses 7 and 8 are intended to be connected with them, and to express a reason, as evidently they do by the word "therefore," which expresses a consequence for something previously stated, then I see not how we can avoid the conclusion that the coming of the Lord refers, not to the time when James wrote, but to the time when those things of which he had been prophesying should be fulfilled. If he were not speaking of the last days, why does he mention them when addressing the voluptuous rich, saying, "Ye have heaped treasure for the last days"? And where are the treasures found heaped together, as in the banks, and in the coffers of the rich, locked up in fire-proof safes, from which it was drawn, at the breaking out of the present rebellion, to defray the expense of the war, as though it had been stored up there for that special purpose? Some tell us that James wrote a short time previous to the destruction of Jerusalem, and therefore "the last days" mean the last days of the Jewish nation; and the coming of the Lord means his Providential coming to destroy their city. But James addresses his letter "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad." Now the twelve tribes were not scattered abroad until after the destruction of Jerusalem; therefore, if James wrote before that destruction, he must have spoken of things future as though they were already present, as is often done by the prophets. Again, I see not what consolation it would be to any Jew to know that the destruction of their city drew nigh! The coming of the Lord is introduced as a joyful event, waiting for which, "as the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it," even so, brethren, "be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Did christians fare any better after the destruction of Jerusalem than they did before? Behold the ten bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors which immediately followed, and then tell me what motive James could have in presenting the coming of the Lord as a joyful event, if by it he meant the destruction of Jerusalem.

I am far more inclined to believe that James drew a picture of this nation—such a picture as could be drawn in so few words only by the pen of inspiration,—a christian nation holding their fellow men in involuntary servitude, until their cry has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. The gold and silver thus stained with blood, is cankered, and the rust thereof is now eating the flesh of this nation as it were fire. The hoarded treasure which no persuasion could draw out to bless and save mankind, is now literally poured out for their destruction. "From whence come wars and fightings among you?" We all know the origin of the present war, and since we cannot prevent the destruction of life and property which will result from it, nor avoid paying our proportion of the expense, let us patiently endure the evils we cannot cure; and since the cry is now being raised, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," let us arise and trim our lamps. We all need the "Messenger" as a medium of communication through which to encourage and strengthen each other in these "perilous times." Was Paul speaking of the last days of the Jewish nation in 2 Tim. 3. 1-9? or did the Jews command to abstain from meats, and forbid to marry? 1 Tim. 4: 1-3; or was he speaking of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to destroy Jerusalem in 2 Thess. 2: 1-12? or was any "man of sin revealed" previous to that destruction? or did the Lord himself descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the Roman war trumpet at that destruction? 1 Thess. 4: 16; or did "the sign of the Son of man in heaven appear immediately after the tribulation of those days"? Matt. 24: 29-31; or did he then "send forth his angels, and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity"? Matt. 13: 38-42; and did "the righteous (then) shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father"? verse 43; or did they meet the ten bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors?

These, and many other questions we want to solve through the "Messenger," and thus "prove all things." Shall we receive light through it while we withhold their means of sending abroad light into the world? Shall we pay tribute to this nation to defray the expense of destroying men, but withhold it from those who are seeking to save them? Are the claims of this civil government stronger upon us than the claims of the Lord and his servants? Nay, brethren; the claims of those who publish salvation are paramount to all others. Let us therefore not only wish our Editorial brethren "A Happy New Year," but along with the wish send the means of making them happy by paying them in advance, or sending whatever arrears may now be their due. To withhold it year after year is "keeping back the hire of the laborers by fraud." Pay the honest debt, and then we shall escape the reproachings of a guilty conscience while we read its pages. We shall then know that the brethren are not destitute of daily food through our neglect, and have the satisfaction of knowing that so far as they are answered we "owe no man anything." Yours in faith and works.

EVIL PASSIONS.—Evil passions exert a powerful influence over the understanding; they derange its action. Of the drunkard, it is known that he is a poor judge of himself, often imagining himself sober when he is not. It is very much so with all the evil passions that prey upon fallen humanity; they beguile and deceive, ruin and destroy, without any advertisement of their presence, except in their results.

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3-14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation, etc.—2 PET. 3: 3-14.

III. A third point I notice in this passage is the important chronological statement which it contains with reference to the second coming of the Lord. In reckoning whether God has been slack or not concerning this promise, the apostle urges it upon us very particularly not to overlook the fact, but to remember, "that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." David in the ninetieth Psalm, had made a similar statement nearly two thousand years before. It was also a common thing among the ancient people of God to reckon days as typical of thousands of years. And as there are but seven days, (all the rest being but repetitions of these,) it was held that these seven days represented so many thousands of years, in which the world, and God's administrations concerning it, would be consummated. They said that as the world was six days in making, so it will continue for six thousand years, to complete what has since been undertaken with regard to it; and that as God rested the seventh day and hallowed it, so the seventh thousand years is to be a great and hallowed world-Sabbath, in which the finished works of grace shall exhibit to God and furnish to its subjects a perfect rest.* Paul tells us, also, that there does remain to the people of God a rest, which Joshua did not give, and that that rest is a sabatismos,—a Sabbath-keeping. (Heb. 4-7) we are told of a certain thousand years, far down at the end of the world, at the commencement of which Satan is to be bound, the powers of wickedness overthrown, and the saints raised from the dead, and during which the martyrs are to sit on thrones, and all the pious dead to be made blessed and holy as the priests of God and of Christ, and to reign with him, —which answers exactly to the idea of a Great Sabbath. These statements, taken along with this declaration of St Peter, that one day is to be taken as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, seem very well to bear out the old tradition—referred to Elijah the prophet—that the world shall continue for six thousand years,—two thousand years void, or without the law; two thousand years under the law, and two thousand under the Messiah,—and that the seventh thousand years will be "the day of the holy, blessed God," "the day of judgment, and the world to come." It is very certain that a very large proportion of the profoundest and best Christian teachers have accepted it as presenting the truth of God, and regulated their faith on this subject accordingly.

The apostolic Barnabas, the companion of St. Paul, "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost," has left us an Epistle, in which he says, (chap. 13. 3-5,) "God made in six days the work of his hands, and he finished them the seventh day, and he rested the seventh day, and sanctified it. Consider my children, what that signifies: he finished them in six days. The meaning of it is that in six thousand years the Lord will bring all things to an end. For with him one day is a thousand years, as himself testifieth. Therefore, children, in six days —that is, in six thousand years—shall all things be accomplished. And what is that he saith, And he rested the seventh day? He meaneth this: that when his Son shall come, and abolish the season of the wicked one, and judge the ungodly, and shall change the sun, moon, and stars, THEN he shall gloriously rest in that seventh day."

Irenæus, whose Christian preceptor was the distinguished Polycarp, one of those "angels" of the Churches to whom the Savior in the Apocalypse directed one of the seven Epistles, also says, "In whatever number of days the world was created, in the same number of thousands of years it will come to its consummation. God on the sixth day, finished the works which he made; and God rested on the seventh day from all his works. This is a history of the past, and a prophecy of the future; for the day of the Lord is as a thousand years."

Victorinus, Bishop of Pettaw, who was one of the martyrs in the persecution A. D. 303-313, says, "The true and proper Sabbath shall be kept in the seventh millenium: therefore the Lord hath assigned to those seven days individually a thousand years."

Lactantius, who lived about the same period, says, "Let the philosophers, therefore, who reckon up thousands of ages from the beginning of the world, understand that the sum total has not yet reached the six thousandth year; and, when that number is complete, an end must be made of the present state of things, and the condition of humanity be moulded anew for the better. . . . As, then, all the works of God were finished, he rested on the seventh day, and blessed it, it follows that upon the end of the six thousandth year all evil and wickedness must be wiped away from the earth, and justice reign for a thousand years, and the world enjoy a calm and repose from the labors it has now so long endured."

Cyprian, the noted Bishop of Carthage, who died a martyr to his faith, also says, "In the Divine arrangement of the world, seven days were at first employed, and in them seven thousand years were included."

It would be easy to cite numerous other authorities of this sort from among the ancient Christian fathers, such as Clement, Justin Martyr, Papias, Tertullian, Hilary, Jerome, and Augustine.

The Reformers also reckoned after the same manner. In the British Museum, in a copy of the first edition of Luther's German Bible; on the third page of the fly-leaves of the second volume, there is an entry in the handwriting of Melancthon, dated and signed by himself, in these words:—"Six thousand years this world shall stand, and after that be burned:—two thousand years void; two thousand years the law of Moses; two thousand years the day of the Messiah."*

Luther acquiesced in the same view. In the preface to his Chronica, as translated by Aurifaber, he says, "The chronology of Philip Melancthon, published under the name of 'Cartonis,' is one in which the entire course of the world is most excellently embraced or distributed in six millenniums, or six thousand years, which I also have followed;" and concludes with these words, set out in large letters, line for line:—

"A SAYING OF THE SCHOOL OF ELIAS THE PROPHET
Six thousand years shall the world stand
Two thousand, void.
Two thousand, the Law
Two thousand, Christ.
These are unto God the six days of the we
The seventh is the everlasting Sabbath.
Psalm xc. 4, and 2 Peter iii. 8.
A thousand years are to the Lord as one day." †

Bishop Latimer also says, "The world was ordained of God to continue, as Scripture and learned men agree, six thousand years."

Shall we, then, receive or reject this computation of the times of this world? I believe that we accept much upon far more slender grounds. Where to find serious objections to it, I know not. How to confute it, I am at a loss. Thus far, God himself has conformed the order of his providence to it. The passages of Scripture to which I have referred more than harmonize with it. If they do not absolutely assert or require it, they suggest it and are best interpreted by it. It conforms to that typical system upon which nearly every thing was originally constructed. It has been believed and taught as a revelation from God by a very large number of the ablest and most reliable of Christian teachers. The ancient Jewish Church held it as a settled verity. And for one, I feel bound to accept it, until God shall teach me better.

In what year of the world's age we are living, it is not possible at this day accurately to ascertain. According to the common reckoning, it will yet be about one hundred and thirty-five years to the end of the six thousand. But there is nothing upon which learned men differ more than on the subject of chronology. I know of no system which can be received with confidence. Some make the time more, and some less, to the end of the six thousand years. Jarvis calculates yet one hundred and twenty years; Browne, about thirty; Bliss, about twenty; Shimeall and Saville, about seven; Bowen, five; and Fynes Clinton, but one. The truth is, that nothing very definite is known on the subject. We know only that we are in the evening of the last mystic day,—the Saturday of the world's long week. At any rate, Peter's remark is true, that "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness." Though always presenting "the day of the Lord as near, and really and truly so in various important respects, yet so in the highest and fullest sense only according to that system which takes a thousand years as one day." This was his gracious plan from the beginning, to which he has all the time been working, delaying to execute speedy vengeance upon the wickedness of men, and exercising upon them his great long-suffering that they might repent and be saved. He always meant to come, and to come soon; but he never promised to come any sooner than at the end of six thousand year-days, which are only now for the first time verging to their close.

We may, accordingly, take this text as an intimation that a great Sabbath of rest and glory is in reserve for this world, and that, if no special providence shall come in to shorten the time, we may expect it to commence at the conclusion of the six thousandth year from the creation, which cannot any longer be far off. May God hasten the time!

* "The tradition that the earth, as well as the moral and religious state of its inhabitants, were to undergo a great change at the end of six thousand years, has been detected in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and Christians. It is found in the most ancient of those commentaries of the Old Testament which [illegible] in the Rabbinical schools, [illegible] by several centuries the introduction of the Christian faith."—Bishop Russell on the Millennium, p. 89.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

This world is very dreary,
With all its winds and waves,
Its tears, and sighs, and sorrows,
Its groanings and its graves.

The brightest days bring darkness
To some poor mortal's heart,
The dearest friends we ever meet,
Most quickly from us part.

The waves of yonder ocean
Sublimely look, we know;
But many a soul has kindred
In icy bands below.

The fields, the trees, the flowers
Are pretty, great or small;
Yet wintry winds destroy them,
Though "our Father" made them all

The smiles of youth are joyous,
The songs of home are dear;
But death comes to our dwellings,—
No more these songs we hear

This world will not be dreary
When Jesus comes once more,
To fill it with his glory,
And reign from shore to shore

"Preparation."

The following interesting article, headed "Preparation," is from "The Last Vials," an English work, ably edited by a devoted minister of Christ. The Editor is one of those faithful men, who dares to tell the people the truth at the expense of a good salary and name. Would that there were more such watchmen.—G.

"In the last number we took a general view of the time of Judgment that is certainly to come, and may be very near. We also noticed the twofold artifice of Satan—SPIRITUALISM, which prepares the world for Satanic manifestations in their utmost reality by habituating the world to those Satanic manifestations which are either spurious or absurd, and "SPIRITUALIZING interpretations, which rob the Word of God of nearly all its force and beauty, and reduces it to a series of enigmas." To counteract these devices God has given us the "sure word of Prophecy," as a light from heaven shining in a dark place. The earth is darkened by the shadow of death, and the dark valley is filled with spectral forms, and dread realities. A guilty conscience creates the one; and actual guilt the other. The light of the prophetic truth shines on the dark valley, and shows us the one only path by which we can escape. Yet the whole effort of what we call "Christian instruction" seems directed to the closing up, shutting out, or concealing this path, as if it were the way of eternal destruction. It is a fact, however incredible, that for 1500 years the light of Prophecy has been studiously hidden from the Church—or utterly extinguished; while the false lights of "SPIRITUALIZATION" have been held up to lead men from their course, and to bring them among shoals and quicksands. "The treacherous dealers" of the Gospel "have dealt very treacherously," and at the present day they are more treacherous than ever.

The Word of God, as we have said, has given us a light in a dark place, and has provided us with the means for counteracting the devices of the enemy. The troubles of the world will increase, more and more, until they have grown from ordinary troubles into the GREAT TRIBULATION. What support can you find under these increasing troubles if you lean upon the "Spiritualizing" interpretations of the day? Gospel preachers tell us that the world is to improve, and that the magnificent descriptions of millennial blessedness mean nothing more than a large outpouring of the Spirit, and the conversion of all mankind by missionary exertions. But our missions are growing more feeble and barren from day to day—our converts are relapsing into heathenism—or dishonoring the Christian name by their vices. We know, from high authority, that in one of our large colonies no one will hire a converted heathen as a domestic servant, because the converts are worse than the unconverted. Christendom itself is on the brink of war and revolution. All nations are engaged in military preparation. Heresies abound—Atheism openly avows itself with unblushing front—as in the publication called the "National Reformer"—and, shameful to tell! the religion of Mahomet is screened from all attack by the model nation of Christendom! Mahometanism is supported throughout the whole of Turkey, and in the Holy Land itself, by English power, for the sole purpose of securing our possessions in the East. With such horrible crimes before our face, we must be blind indeed if we imagine that the world is IMPROVING; or, rather, if we do not see that it is hastening on to the pit of destruction. What comfort, then, can we derive from our "spiritualizing interpretation? It tells us that the world is to grow better and better—and we find it growing worse and worse, that missionaries are to convert the world—and yet the very nation that sends out those missionaries is the firmest upholder of Mahometanism. And, above all—when the Great Tribulation shall begin—what will then become of our "spiritualizing"? How will the empty shadow of Good counter-work the dread reality of Evil? As long as the sea is smooth the crazy bark of "spiritualization" floats along in dreamy tranquility. The winds arise, the waves beat, it founders and goes down, and is seen "again no more forever." It disappears like the Egyptian host—and the true Israel stand on the seashore to collect the spoils. This, we are sure, will be the end of our spiritualizing interpretations. They fill the mind with dreamy satisfaction in a time of tranquility; they interfere with no worldly sentiment; they leave the CONSCIENCE undisturbed; they yield no solid hope to out-outweigh the fascinations of life; and when the Great Tribulation comes, they will vanish like the smoke, and the dreadful array of Divine judgments will be suddenly unmasked before the eyes of an unprepared world.

What is the true preparation for the Day of the Lord? If spiritualizing afford no solid shelter, what other preparation is to be adopted? Our answer is,—The hope and expectation of the KINGDOM. Not the imaginary kingdom which is ignorantly preached—but the real scriptural kingdom of God. When the "kingdom" is preached it means nothing but a dream. It means no more than the mere fact of being saved, which, of course, is not a KINGDOM at all. When a criminal has been reprieved from execution, we should consider it most absurd to say that he was promoted to a kinkdom, and yet our gospel preachers are guilty of the same absurdity every hour; for they invariably tell you that the kingdom of God means the fact of being saved." But the true scriptural kingdom is a very different thing. It is the coming down of the Son of God from heaven, in the form of man, to reign as literally over the earth as the king or queen of England. . . . . Such is the true scheme of the "Kingdom of heaven." It is called the kingdom of heaven, not because it is the kingdom, or kingly power, exercised by heavenly beings over the earth. The KINGDOM of HEAVEN does not mean a PLACE, it means a DISPENSATION. To have a part in the kingdom does not mean simply getting into heaven; but it means having a share with Christ in his kingly GOVERNMENT. Angels are in heaven, but angels are not in the KINGDOM of heaven. To make the kingdom identical with salvation is as much an error as to say that angels are to share with the Lord and the Church in the government of the world. The confusion of ideas which prevails upon these subjects is a sad proof of the degeneracy of Christendom. Sunk in the world, or occupied with silly questions of church government, and church policy, it has entirely thrown aside all thought of futurity, and all the glory revealed and offered in the Word of God. Yet this kingdom, and the prospect of it, are the only solid resting place of the human mind, under the pressure of life; as they will hereafter be the only support under the terrors of approaching JUDGMENT.

This leads us on to another part of the subject, which deserves the utmost consideration, for its grandeur and importance. All religions, whether true or false, have made the PRESENCE OF GOD UPON EARTH the foundation of all earthly prosperity, and the very acme of their hopes. Yet this PRESENCE of GOD is despised, disbelieved—even hated—by those who call themselves the People of God. Before Adam fell, the dispensation of PERFECTION existed, as the first of earthly dispensations. In that dispensation the presence of God was a familiar thing. In the "cool of the evening" God walked in the garden of Eden, just as a man walks out amidst his flowers and plantations on the evening of a summer's day! Here we find the Divine presence to its utmost possible extent. Adam was the master of the demesne, and the Lord visited him, on a summer's evening, as a man calls upon his neighbor, after the business of the day is over. Beyond this it would be impossible to go; unless man had been taken out of the earth and conveyed bodily to heaven. Then came the PATRIARCHAL TIMES, when sin had spoiled the world, and robbed it of all familiarity with God. Yet, still, the Divine Presence was both longed for and vouchsafed. The Lord visited Abraham as a familiar friend —talked with him face to face—and, lastly, dined with him. A wonderful instance of Divine condescension. He calls Abraham his "friend," as a man speaks of some intimate acquaintance. He wrestles with Jacob, foot to foot. Next came the Mosaic dispensation. Still the Presence of God continues, as it should be—the first desire of every enlightened heart, and the glory of his people Israel." The Lord was perpetually with Israel, in "a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night." For forty years he never quitted the sands and solitudes of the Arabian desert. "If THY PRESENCE go not with us (said Moses) carry us not up from hence." As time advanced, the Presence of the Lord became more rare, as well as more brief. The forty years Presence in the wilderness had shrunk into an occasional, momentary visit, to Gideon, to Manoah—or even to Joshua himself, though captain of the host of Israel. In the time of David the Divine Presence seems to have been completely withdrawn as to extraordinary visits. As men became more settled, more worldly, and more knowing, the visits of God became more rare. It is only in the simplest ages of pastoral life that the Lord can condescend to visit man. The visit, even of a created angel, to the present shrewd and knowing generation, would shock the coarsest mind. As the world improves it always becomes more vulgar, and the Lord will not associate with vulgarity. But still the Presence of God was the highest point of the Mosaic religion, and since the Lord could no longer associate familiarly with men, he provided another medium for the continuation of his PRESENCE. He withdrew from the knowing, earthly-minded crowd, and took up his abode between the Cherubim of the Ark. He had once walked amidst the flowers of Eden; he had once sat in the shade beneath the oak of Mamre; he had once stood by the threshing floor of Gideon, and watched the threshing of the barley sheaves. But those old familiar days were gone! Progress and vulgarity had moved hand in hand, as they do now, and the "Angel of the Lord" appeared no more. The Divine Presence became limited to the sanctuary—but still it was not quite withdrawn.

[illegible] sation succeeded that of Moses. From that instant the presence of God was utterly withdrawn! Not a trace was left of celestial glory, to meet the eye of man,—and most deservedly. The abominations of the world—the shrewd, sordid, money-loving character of the age, were too hateful to be even approached in any celestial intercourse. Could the angel of the Lord visit a modern statesman as he once stood by the threshing floor of Gideon? It would be profanation to think of it. Could the Lord appear familiarly to a modern Divine with his pedantry of mind, his pedantry of sect—his pedantry even of dress—his narrowness of heart, bound in by laws, and rules, and rubrics, and formulas? We cannot dream of such a thing. The Divine presence is never to be hoped for in an age like ours, and for that reason we ought to long for a new and better age.

It has been reserved for the CHRISTIAN world to banish the Divine Presence altogether from the earth. Christendom, the domain of Christ, purchased with his blood, has the disgrace of being the first that ever excluded God from his own creation,—as it will also be the last. The Jews look for a Messiah; the heathen glory in the imaginary presence of their imaginary gods; but Christendom labors with all its might to exclude the true God altogether. What has been the teaching of the Church for the last thousand years? Simply that the Lord is never to come again, except for one single day; and in that one day he is to try, and judge, all men that ever lived—amounting to 100,000 millions. One hundred thousand million of trials are to be thoroughly got through in twenty-four hours —and got through so well that every human being shall be able to hear, see, and understand every separate trial! This enormous absurdity is the regular teaching of all Christendom, and yet it is more unscriptural and more false than the doctrines of Mahomet. But it serves its purpose—it puts an end to all apprehension of that hateful event, the Divine presence upon earth—the Divine conquest of the globe. Anything but that! Any absurdity you please we will swallow, and be thankful, if you will only secure us from the presence of God. One day we can bear—but his constant presence is insupportable. Such is the grateful return for the redeeming love of Christ. Because for our sakes he spent three-and-thirty years on earth, in misery and poverty—[illegible] are determined he shall not spend even one day upon earth in glory. We have not the least objection to his being on earth as our SERVANT—but we have a determined objection to his living on earth as our King. We take all the fruits of his service, but

The Cross.

"Looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith; who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."—Heb. 12: 2.

The cross! the cross! the holy cross,
Which Christ my Lord once bore for me!
It cleanses me from all my dross,
And gives me gospel liberty.

It gives me peace and joy divine,
And makes my pathway bright and clear;
Unites me with the living Vine,
And fills me with a heavenly cheer.

When doubts and fears perplex my mind,
And all around looks dark and drear,
I take the cross, and straightway find
The Lord, my present help, is near.

The cross! blest altar, at whose base,
When weary, I can lay me down,
And taste the sweets of Jesus' grace,
And see by faith the promised crown.

O, blessed instrument of heaven,
To purify and make me white!
No greater boon was ever given
To take from us all earthly blight.

Ah! this is what my Savior bore,
And can I not endure the same?
Yes! for the joy that's just before,
I'll bear the cross, despise the shame.

O, heavenly King, be thou my shield!
O, strengthen me when sorely pressed!
Teach me the Spirit's sword to wield,
And how to use the weapon best.

Faith and Works.

"What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit?"—Jas. 2: 14, 15.

I purpose to make a special application of this reasoning of James to the case of those brethren who publish the evidence of our faith. We all know that printing materials and paper cost money, and the laborers must be paid. These "swift messengers" fly through the land, and preach the "everlasting gospel" to many who hear not the voice of any living creature of "the blessed hope"; shall we clip their wings by withholding the means? While the great men of the earth are expending their millions to sustain temporal kingdoms, let us show our faith in the "EVERLASTING KINGDOM" by contributing the means of publishing it to the extent of our ability. We all want the "Messenger" to serve us a "watchman" to tell us "What of the night"; let not the "hire of the laborers be kept back by fraud," lest the "rust" of that which is kept back should be "a witness against us" (James 5); but let us all "be patient unto the coming of the Lord," while we behold earthly kingdoms tottering and trembling as in the last expiring agony of their dissolution, and witness the awful destruction of human life, and money wasted in the effort to sustain them. Verily, "the cries of them which have reaped" for those who "have lived in pleasure on the earth and been wanton," and whose hire has of them been kept back by fraud, "have entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

If there be any prophecy in the Bible describing the condition of these United States, I believe it is found in Jas. 5: 1–6. If so, the present is a remarkable "sign of the times"; and if verses 7 and 8 are intended to be connected with them, and to express a reason, as evidently they do by the word "therefore," which expresses a reason for something previously stated, then I see not how we can avoid the conclusion that the coming of the Lord refers, not to the time when James wrote, but to the times when those things of which he had been prophesying should be fulfilled. If he were not speaking of the last days, why does he mention them when addressing the voluptuous rich, saying, "Ye have heaped treasure for the last days"? And how was that treasure found heaped together in the banks, and in the coffers of the rich, locked up in fire-proof safes, from which it was drawn, at the breaking out of the present rebellion, to defray the expenses of the war, as though it had been stored up them for that special purpose! Some tell us that James wrote a short time previous to the destruction of Jerusalem, and therefore "the last days" mean the last days of the Jewish nation; and the coming of the Lord means his Providential coming to destroy their city. But James addresses his letter "to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad." Now the twelve tribes were not scattered abroad until after the destruction of Jerusalem; therefore, if James wrote before that destruction, he must have spoken of things future as though they were already present, as is often done by the prophets. Again, I see not what consolation it would be to any Jew to know that the destruction of their city drew nigh! The coming of the Lord is introduced as a joyful event, waiting for which, "as the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it," even so, brethren, "be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Did christians fare any better after the destruction of Jerusalem than they did before? Behold the ten bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors which immediately followed, and then tell me what motive James could have in presenting the coming of the Lord as a joyful event, if by it he meant the destruction of Jerusalem.

I am far more inclined to believe that James drew a picture of this nation—such a picture as could be drawn in so few words only by the pen of inspiration,—a christian nation holding their fellow men in involuntary servitude, until their cry has entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. The gold and silver thus stained with blood, is cankered, and the rust thereof is now eating the flesh of this nation as it were fire. The hoarded treasure which no persuasion could draw out to bless and save mankind, is now literally poured out for their destruction. "From whence come wars and fightings among you?" We all know the origin of the present war, and since we cannot prevent the destruction of life and property which will result from it, nor avoid paying our proportion of the expense, let us patiently endure the evils we cannot cure; and since the cry is now being raised, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," let us arise and trim our lamps. We all need the "Messenger" as a medium of communication through which to encourage and strengthen each other in these "perilous times." Was Paul speaking of the last days of the Jewish nation in 2 Tim. 3: 1–9? or did the Jews command to abstain from meats, and forbid to marry? 1 Tim. 4: 1–3; or was he speaking of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to destroy Jerusalem in 2 Thess. 2: 1–12? or was any "man of sin revealed" previous to that destruction? or did the Lord himself descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the Roman war trumpet at that destruction? 1 Thess. 4: 16; or did "the sign of the Son of man in heaven appear immediately after the tribulation of those days"? Matt. 24: 29–31; or did he then "send forth his angels, and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity"? Matt. 13: 38–42; and did "the righteous (then) shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father"? verse 43; or did they meet the ten bloody persecutions under the Roman emperors?

These, and many other questions we want to solve through the "Messenger," and thus "prove all things." Shall we receive light through it while we withhold their means of sending abroad light into the world? Shall we pay tribute to this nation to defray the expense of destroying men, but withhold it from those who are seeking to save them? Are the claims of this civil government stronger upon us than the claims of the Lord and his servants? Nay, brethren; the claims of those who publish salvation are paramount to all others. Let us therefore not only wish our Editorial brethren "A Happy New Year," but along with the wish send the means of making them happy by paying them in advance, or sending whatever arrears may now be their due. To withhold it year after year is "keeping back the hire of the laborers by fraud." Pay the honest debt, and then we shall escape the reproachings of a guilty conscience while we read its pages. We shall then know that the brethren are not destitute of daily food through our neglect, and have the satisfaction of knowing that so far as they are answered we "owe no man anything." Yours in faith and works.

EVIL PASSIONS.—Evil passions exert a powerful influence over the understanding; they derange its action. Of the drunkard, it is known that he is a poor judge of himself, often imagining himself sober when he is not. It is very much so with all the evil passions that prey upon fallen humanity; they beguile and deceive, ruin and destroy, without any advertisement of their presence, except in their results.

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3–14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3–14.

III. A third point I notice in this passage is the important chronological statement which it contains with reference to the second coming of the Lord. In reckoning whether God has been slack or not concerning this promise, the apostle urges it upon us very particularly not to overlook the fact, but to remember, "that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." David in the ninetieth Psalm, had made a similar statement nearly two thousand years before. It was also a common thing among the ancient people of God to reckon days as typical of thousands of years. And as there are but seven days, (all the rest being but repetitions of these,) it was held that these seven days represented so many thousands of years, in which the world, and God's administrations concerning it, would be consummated. They said that as the world was six days in making, so it will continue for six thousand years, to complete what has since been undertaken with regard to it; and that as God rested the seventh day and hallowed it, so the seventh thousand years is to be a great and hallowed world-Sabbath, in which the finished works of grace shall exhibit to God and furnish to its subjects a perfect rest.* Paul tells us, also, that there does remain to the people of God a rest, which Joshua did not give, and that that rest is a sabatismos,—a Sabbath-keeping. (Heb. 4–7) we are told of a certain thousand years, far down at the end of the world, at the commencement of which Satan is to be bound, the powers of wickedness overthrown, and the saints raised from the dead, and during which the martyrs are to sit on thrones, and all the pious dead to be made blessed and holy as the priests of God and of Christ, and to reign with him, —which answers exactly to the idea of a Great Sabbath. These statements, taken along with this declaration of St Peter, that one day is to be taken as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, seem very well to bear out the old tradition—referred to Elijah the prophet—that the world shall continue for six thousand years,—two thousand years void, or without the law; two thousand years under the law; and two thousand under the Messiah,—and that the seventh thousand years will be "the day of the holy, blessed God," "the day of judgment, and the world to come." It is very certain that a very large proportion of the profoundest and best Christian teachers have accepted it as presenting the truth of God, and regulated their faith on this subject accordingly.

The apostolic Barnabas, the companion of St. Paul, "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost," has left us an Epistle, in which he says, (chap. 13: 3–5,) "God made in six days the work of his hands, and he finished them the seventh day, and he rested the seventh day, and sanctified it. Consider my children, what that signifies: he finished them in six days. The meaning of it is that in six thousand years the Lord will bring all things to an end. For with him one day is a thousand years, as himself testifieth. Therefore, children, in six days —that is, in six thousand years—shall all things be accomplished. And what is that he saith, And he rested the seventh day? He meaneth this: that when his Son shall come, and abolish the season of the wicked one, and judge the ungodly, and shall change the sun, moon, and stars, THEN he shall gloriously rest in that seventh day."

Irenæus, whose Christian preceptor was the distinguished Polycarp, one of those "angels" of the Churches to whom the Savior in the Apocalypse directed one of the seven Epistles, also says, "In whatever number of days the world was created, in the same number of thousands of years it will come to its consummation. God on the sixth day, finished the works which he made; and God rested on the seventh day from all his works. This is a history of the past, and a prophecy of the future; for the day of the Lord is as a thousand years."

Victorinus, Bishop of Pettaw, who was one of the martyrs in the persecution A. D. 303–313, says, "The true and proper Sabbath shall be kept in the seventh millenium: therefore the Lord hath assigned to those seven days individually a thousand years."

Lactantius, who lived about the same period, says, "Let the philosophers, therefore, who reckon up thousands of ages from the beginning of the world, understand that the sum total has not yet reached the six thousandth year; and, when that number is complete, an end must be made of the present state of things, and the condition of humanity be moulded anew for the better. . . . As, then, all the works of God were finished, he rested on the seventh day, and blessed it, it follows that upon the end of the six thousandth year all evil and wickedness must be wiped away from the earth, and justice reign for a thousand years, and the world enjoy a calm and repose from the labors it has now so long endured."

Cyprian, the noted Bishop of Carthage, who died a martyr to his faith, also says, "In the Divine arrangement of the world, seven days were at first employed, and in them seven thousand years were included."

It would be easy to cite numerous other authorities of this sort from among the ancient Christian fathers, such as Clement, Justin Martyr, Papias, Tertullian, Hilary, Jerome, and Augustine.

The Reformers also reckoned after the same manner. In the British Museum, in a copy of the first edition of Luther's German Bible; on the third page of the fly-leaves of the second volume, there is an entry in the handwriting of Melancthon, dated and signed by himself, in these words:—"Six thousand years this world shall stand, and after that be burned:—two thousand years void; two thousand years the law of Moses; two thousand years the day of the Messiah."*

Luther acquiesced in the same view. In the preface to his Chronica, as translated by Aurifaber, he says, "The chronology of Philip Melancthon, published under the name of 'Carionis,' is one in which the entire course of the world is most excellently embraced or distributed in six millenniums, or six thousand years, which I also have followed;" and concludes with these words, set out in large letters, line for line:—

"A SAYING OF THE SCHOOL OF ELIAS THE PROPHET.
Six thousand years shall the world stand
Two thousand, void.
Two thousand, the Law
Two thousand, Christ.
These are unto God the six days of the week.
The seventh is the everlasting Sabbath.
Psalm xc. 4, and 2 Peter iii. 8.
A thousand years are to the Lord as one day." †

Bishop Latimer also says, "The world was ordained of God to continue, as Scripture and learned men agree, six thousand years."

Shall we, then, receive or reject this computation of the times of this world? I believe that we accept much upon far more slender grounds. Where to find serious objections to it, I know not. How to confute it, I am at a loss. Thus far, God himself has conformed the order of his providence to it. The passages of Scripture to which I have referred more than harmonize with it. If they do not absolutely assert or require it, they suggest it and are best interpreted by it. It conforms to that typical system upon which nearly every thing was originally constructed. It has been believed and taught as a revelation from God by a very large number of the ablest and most reliable of Christian teachers. The ancient Jewish Church held it as a settled verity. And for one, I feel bound to accept it, until God shall teach me better.

In what year of the world's age we are living, it is not possible at this day accurately to ascertain. According to the common reckoning, it will yet be about one hundred and thirty-five years to the end of the six thousand. But there is nothing upon which learned men differ more than on the subject of chronology. I know of no system which can be received with confidence. Some make the time more, and some less, to the end of the six thousand years. Jarvis calculates yet one hundred and twenty years; Browne, about thirty; Bliss, about twenty; Shimeall and Saville, about seven; Bowen, five; and Fynes Clinton, but one. The truth is, that nothing very definite is known on the subject. We know only that we are in the evening of the last mystic day,—the Saturday of the world's long week. At any rate, Peter's remark is true, that "the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness." Though always presenting "the day of the Lord as near, and really and truly so in various important respects, yet so in the highest and fullest sense only according to that system which takes a thousand years as one day.* This was his gracious plan from the beginning, to which he has all the time been working, delaying to execute speedy vengeance upon the wickedness of men, and exercising upon them his great long-suffering that they might repent and be saved. He always meant to come, and to come soon; but he never promised to come any sooner than at the end of six thousand year-days, which are only now for the first time verging to their close.

We may, accordingly, take this text as an intimation that a great Sabbath of rest and glory is in reserve for this world, and that, if no special providence shall come in to shorten the time, we may expect it to commence at the conclusion of the six thousandth year from the creation, which cannot any longer be far off. May God hasten the time!

* "The tradition that the earth, as well as the moral and religious state of its inhabitants, were to undergo a great change at the end of six thousand years, has been detected in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and Christians. It is found in the most ancient of those commentaries of the Old Testament which we owe to the Rabbinical school, and which [illegible] preceded by several centuries the introduction of the Christian faith."—Bishop Russell on the Millennium, p. 39.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

This world is very dreary,
With all its winds and waves,
Its tears, and sighs, and sorrows,
Its groanings and its graves.

The brightest days bring darkness
To some poor mortal's heart;
The dearest friends we ever meet,
Most quickly from us part.

The waves of yonder ocean
Sublimely look, we know;
But many a soul has kindred
In icy bands below.

The fields, the trees, the flowers
Are pretty, great or small;
Yet wintry winds destroy them,
Though "our Father" made them all.

The smiles of youth are joyous,
The songs of home are dear;
But death comes to our dwellings,—
No more these songs we hear.

This world will not be dreary
When Jesus comes once more,
To fill it with his glory,
And reign from shore to shore.

"Preparation."

The following interesting article, headed "Preparation," is from "The Last Vials," an English work, ably edited by a devoted minister of Christ. The Editor is one of those faithful men, who dares to tell the people the truth at the expense of a good salary and name. Would that there were more such watchmen.—G.

"In the last number we took a general view of the time of Judgment that is certainly to come, and may be very near. We also noticed the twofold artifice of Satan—SPIRITUALISM, which prepares the world for Satanic manifestations in their utmost reality by habituating the world to those Satanic manifestations which are either spurious or absurd, and "SPIRITUALIZING INTERPRETATION, which robs the Word of God of nearly all its force and beauty, and reduces it to a series of enigmas." To counteract these devices God has given us the "sure word of Prophecy," as a light from heaven shining in a dark place. The earth is darkened by the shadow of death; and the dark valley is filled with spectral forms, and dread realities. A guilty conscience creates the one; and actual guilt the other. The light of the prophetic truth shines on the dark valley, and shows us the one only path by which we can escape. Yet the whole effort of what we call "Christian instruction" seems directed to the closing up, shutting out, or concealing this path, as if it were the way of eternal destruction. It is a fact, however incredible, that for 1500 years the light of Prophecy has been studiously hidden from the Church—or utterly extinguished; while the false lights of "SPIRITUALIZATION" have been held up to lead men from their course, and to bring them among shoals and quicksands. "The treacherous dealers" of the Gospel "have dealt very treacherously;" and at the present day they are more treacherous than ever.

The Word of God, as we have said, has given us a light in a dark place, and has provided us with the means for counteracting the devices of the enemy. The troubles of the world will increase, more and more, until they have grown from ordinary troubles into the GREAT TRIBULATION. What support can you find under these increasing troubles if you lean upon the "Spiritualizing" interpretations of the day? Gospel preachers tell us that the world is to improve, and that the magnificent descriptions of millennial blessedness mean nothing more than a large outpouring of the Spirit, and the conversion of all mankind by missionary exertions. But our missions are growing more feeble and barren from day to day—our converts are relapsing into heathenism—or dishonoring the Christian name by their vices. We know, from high authority, that in one of our large colonies no one will hire a converted heathen as a domestic servant, because the converts are worse than the unconverted. Christendom itself is on the brink of war and revolution. All nations are engaged in military preparation. Heresies abound—Atheism openly avows itself with unblushing front—as in the publication called the "National Reformer"—and, shameful to tell! the religion of Mahomet is screened from all attack by the model nation of Christendom! Mahometanism is supported throughout the whole of Turkey, and in the Holy Land itself, by English power, for the sole purpose of securing our possessions in the East. With such horrible crimes before our face, we must be blind indeed if we imagine that the world is IMPROVING; or, rather, if we do not see that it is hastening on to the pit of destruction. What comfort, then, can we derive from our "spiritualizing interpretation? It tells us that the world is to grow better and better—and we find it growing worse and worse; that missionaries are to convert the world—and yet the very nation that sends out those missionaries is the firmest upholder of Mahometanism. And, above all—when the Great Tribulation shall begin—what will then become of our "spiritualizing"? How will the empty shadow of Good counter-work the dread reality of Evil? As long as the sea is smooth the crazy bark of "spiritualization" floats along in dreamy tranquility. The winds arise, the waves beat, it founders and goes down, and is seen "again no more forever." It disappears like the Egyptian host—and the true Israel stand on the seashore to collect the spoils. This, we are sure, will be the end of our spiritualizing interpretations. They fill the mind with dreamy satisfaction in a time of tranquility; they interfere with no worldly sentiment; they leave the CONSCIENCE undisturbed; they yield no solid hope to outoutweigh the fascinations of life; and when the Great Tribulation comes, they will vanish like the smoke, and the dreadful array of Divine judgments will be suddenly unmasked before the eyes of an unprepared world.

What is the true preparation for the Day of the Lord? If spiritualizing afford no solid shelter, what other preparation is to be adopted? Our answer is,—The hope and expectation of the KINGDOM. Not the imaginary kingdom which is ignorantly preached—but the real scriptural kingdom of God. When the "kingdom" is preached it means nothing but a dream. It means no more than the mere fact of being saved, which, of course, is not a KINGDOM at all. When a criminal has been reprieved from execution, we should consider it most absurd to say that he was promoted to a kinkdom; and yet our gospel preachers are guilty of the same absurdity every hour; for they invariably tell you that the kingdom of God means the fact of being saved." But the true scriptural kingdom is a very different thing. It is the coming down of the Son of God from heaven, in the form of man, to reign as literally over the earth as the king or queen of England. . . . . Such is the true scheme of the "Kingdom of heaven." It is called the kingdom of heaven, not because it is the kingdom, or kingly power, exercised by heavenly beings over the earth. The KINGDOM OF HEAVEN does not mean a PLACE; it means a DISPENSATION. To have a part in the kingdom does not mean simply getting into heaven; but it means having a share with Christ in his kingly GOVERNMENT. Angels are in heaven; but angels are not in the KINGDOM of heaven. To make the kingdom identical with salvation is as much an error as to say that angels are to share with the Lord and the Church in the government of the world. The confusion of ideas which prevails upon these subjects is a sad proof of the degeneracy of Christendom. Sunk in the world, or occupied with silly questions of church government, and church policy, it has entirely thrown aside all thought of futurity, and all the glory revealed and offered in the Word of God. Yet this kingdom, and the prospect of it, are the only solid resting place of the human mind, under the pressure of life; as they will hereafter be the only support under the terrors of approaching JUDGMENT.

This leads us on to another part of the subject, which deserves the utmost consideration, for its grandeur and importance. All religions, whether true or false, have made the PRESENCE OF GOD UPON EARTH the foundation of all earthly prosperity, and the very acme of their hopes. Yet this PRESENCE of GOD is despised, disbelieved—even hated—by those who call themselves the People of God. Before Adam fell, the dispensation of PERFECTION existed, as the first of earthly dispensations. In that dispensation the presence of God was a familiar thing. In the "cool of the evening" God walked in the garden of Eden, just as a man walks out amidst his flowers and plantations on the evening of a summer's day! Here we find the Divine presence to its utmost possible extent. Adam was the master of the demesne, and the Lord visited him, on a summer's evening, as a man calls upon his neighbor, after the business of the day is over. Beyond this it would be impossible to go; unless man had been taken out of the earth and conveyed bodily to heaven. Then came the PATRIARCHAL TIMES, when sin had spoiled the world, and robbed it of all familiarity with God. Yet, still, the Divine Presence was both longed for and vouchsafed. The Lord visited Abraham as a familiar friend—talked with him face to face—and, lastly, dined with him. A wonderful instance of Divine condescension. He calls Abraham his "friend," as a man speaks of some intimate acquaintance. He wrestles with Jacob, foot to foot. Next came the Mosaic dispensation. Still the Presence of God continues, as it should be—the first desire of every enlightened heart, and the "glory of his people Israel." The Lord was perpetually with Israel, in "a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night." For forty years he never quitted the sands and solitudes of the Arabian desert. "If THY PRESENCE go not with us (said Moses) carry us not up from hence." As time advanced, the Presence of the Lord became more rare, as well as more brief. The forty years Presence in the wilderness had shrunk into an occasional, momentary visit, to Gideon, to Manoah—or even to Joshua himself, though captain of the host of Israel. In the time of David the Divine Presence seems to have been completely withdrawn as to extraordinary visits. As men became more settled, more worldly, and more knowing, the visits of God became more rare. It is only in the simplest ages of pastoral life that the Lord can condescend to visit man. The visit, even of a created angel, to the present shrewd and knowing generation, would shock the coarsest mind. As the world improves it always becomes more vulgar, and the Lord will not associate with vulgarity. But still the Presence of God was the highest point of the Mosaic religion, and since the Lord could no longer associate familiarly with men, he provided another medium for the continuation of his PRESENCE. He withdrew from the knowing, earthly-minded crowd, and took up his abode between the Cherubim of the Ark. He had once walked amidst the flowers of Eden; he had once sat in the shade beneath the oak of Mamre; he had once stood by the threshing floor of Gideon, and watched the threshing of the barley sheaves. But those old familiar days were gone! Progress and vulgarity had moved hand in hand, as they do now, and the "Angel of the Lord" appeared no more. The Divine Presence became limited to the sanctuary—but still it was not quite withdrawn.

At length Israel fell, [illegible] dispensation succeeded that of Moses. From that instant the presence of God was utterly withdrawn! Not a trace was left of celestial glory, to meet the eye of man—and most deservedly. The abominations of the world—the shrewd, sordid, money-loving character of the age, were too hateful to be even approached in any celestial intercourse. Could the angel of the Lord visit a modern statesman as he once stood by the threshing floor of Gideon? It would be profanation to think of it. Could the Lord appear familiarly to a modern Divine with his pedantry of mind, his pedantry of sect—his pedantry even of dress—his narrowness of heart, bound in by laws, and rules, and rubrics, and formulas? We cannot dream of such a thing. The Divine presence is never to be hoped for in an age like ours, and for that reason we ought to long for a new and better age.

It has been reserved for the CHRISTIAN world to banish the Divine Presence altogether from the earth. Christendom, the domain of Christ, purchased with his blood, has the disgrace of being the first that ever excluded God from his own creation—as it will also be the last. The Jews look for a Messiah; the heathen glory in the imaginary presence of their imaginary gods; but Christendom labors with all its might to exclude the true God altogether. What has been the teaching of the Church for the last thousand years? Simply that the Lord is never to come again, except for one single day; and in that one day he is to try, and judge, all men that ever lived—amounting to 100,000 millions. One hundred thousand million of trials are to be thoroughly got through in twenty-four hours—and got through so well that every human being shall be able to hear, see, and understand every separate trial! This enormous absurdity is the regular teaching of all Christendom, and yet it is more unscriptural and more false than the doctrines of Mahomet. But it serves its purpose—it puts an end to all apprehension of that hateful event, the Divine presence upon earth—the Divine conquest of the globe. Anything but that! Any absurdity you please we will swallow, and be thankful, if you will only secure us from the presence of God. One day we can bear—but his constant presence is insupportable. Such is the grateful return for the redeeming love of Christ. Because for our sakes he spent three-and-thirty years on earth, in misery and poverty, [illegible] are determined he shall not spend even one day upon earth in glory. We have not the least objection to his being on earth as our Saviour—but we have a decided objection to his living on earth as our King. We take all the fruits of his service, but will not allow him one particle for himself. This state of mind is unpardonable—it is the essence of selfishness and ingratitude—it takes everything, and gives nothing in return; and, therefore, it must lead on not only to a time of trouble, but to the Great Tribulation. The judgment upon the treachery of Christendom will be the heaviest judgment that ever the world has seen. The Great Tribulation will be the appropriate reward of the GREAT TREASON!

The Opening of the Fifth Seal.

NUMBER FIVE.

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."—Rev. 6: 9-11.

If we are to understand the seven seals as giving a series of events in regular chronological order from the opening of the first to the seventh, it is singular that no notice had previously been taken of the martyrs slain for their testimony concerning Jesus Christ. It is generally admitted that all the apostles, John alone excepted, suffered martyrdom, and thus sealed their testimony with their blood. Did the Revelator pass over all the bloody scenes of the Pagan persecution as less worthy of notice to the Christian church, than the prevalence of famine in the Roman empire? If I have rightly interpreted the seals, we have now come back in the world's history to the "era of martyrs." As the leaves of the book were unrolled, John saw a picture or hieroglyphic drawn upon the roll, significant of the scene to be exhibited during that period of the world's history, to be given after all the seals had been opened; for it would be necessary to unroll the whole before the history could be commenced in regular chronological order. I therefore understand the opening of the fifth seal as giving a very significant emblem of the persecutions which Christians were to suffer under the dominion of Pagan Rome, commonly known as the "ten persecutions." Notice of these ten persecutions was given in one of the epistles which John was directed to write to the seven churches of Asia, Rev. 2: 10,—"Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Comparatively few of the martyrs of Jesus had been slain when John wrote; therefore, he did not really see them, nor hear their voice. We must bear in mind that he is describing what he saw pictured upon the roll, not things which really existed. At most, he could only have seen them in vision; for what did not really exist he could not really see. Therefore, all arguments to prove either the conscious, or the unconscious state of the dead, drawn from this hieroglyphical representation, must be utterly futile. But suppose he did really see what he describes; let us see what his language will amount to. These souls were slain, therefore they could not have been immortal. They were seen under the altar, and the altar was on earth, not in heaven. They were to rest yet for a little season; showing that they had remained at rest ever since they were slain. They were to rest until their fellow-servants and brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled; therefore they cannot receive their "crown of life" until the last martyr is slain. This entirely cuts off the doctrine, that the righteous receive their reward immediately after death. The general cry of the martyrs while enduring the horrors of the Pagan persecution, might be written in capitals under the picture to represent a loud cry; therefore it is not necessary to understand that the martyrs ever spake a word after they were slain. It is easy to see that the presentation of white robes might also be represented in a picture drawn upon the roll, all of which John could see, but he must use language to describe it, and must speak or write the words which constituted the general cry of the martyrs. The scene exhibits what transpired during the life of the martyrs, not any communications made to them after their death. They knew the promises while living, and those were their support under the most painful tortures which diabolical ingenuity could invent to produce the most excruciating death. "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. . . . Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." This was a promise made to the living; "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten."—Eccl. 9: 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. Promises to the dead therefore may consist with Romish Purgatory, but they have no place in the theology of the Bible; and we cannot understand the text as conveying the idea that the souls slain knew any thing while dead; and they must rest until the last martyr is slain, and then they all receive their "crown of life" together.

It is singular that any sensible man should understand the fifth seal as pointing out the martyrs of any particular period of the Pagan persecution, as though God were a respecter of persons, and the martyrs of one period were more precious in his sight than those of another; yet we find commentators restricting it to the Dioclesian persecution. It undoubtedly embraces all the martyrs from Stephen down to the days of Constantine, who overthrew Paganism in the Roman empire, and put a stop for a time to those persecutions which Christians had suffered. But they were again revived under the Papal and Mohammedan dominion. This cessation for a time seems to be the natural place for dividing the book, and distinguishing between those who suffered under Paganism, and their brethren that should be killed under Papal and Mohammedan rule. These both were to exist cotemporaneously, and continue down to the end of the kingdoms of this world; or to the time when the martyrs shall receive their "crown of life." Many more have been slain during the long reign of those two horns of antichrist than were killed under the persecutions of Pagan Rome.

The period of the third and fourth seals, being cotemporaneous, was one of great slaughter. "Power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth." The mystery of iniquity began early to work; and when Pagan Rome was subverted, and a Christian emperor was placed upon the throne, then, to human appearance, the time had come to avenge the blood of the martyrs upon them that dwelt on the Roman earth. But no; they must rest yet for a little season. How long? Rev. 20: 1-6, must answer this question. When a professedly christian emperor obtained the exercise of civil power, its corruptive influence soon developed that "man of sin," 2 Thess. 2: 1-12. The lust of dominion, "who shall be greatest?" wrangled even in the bosoms of the followers of Jesus. Mar. 9: 34. Ambition, and the meekness of wisdom, dwelt not together. Domineering priestcraft soon banished the halcyon days of the primitive Christians, eclipsed the light of pure christianity by taking away the lamp of life, and spread dark ignorance over the land by making pure christian knowledge of difficult attainment. Ignorance became blind submission, and priestcraft was advanced into civil tyranny. Then a yoke of superstitious observances was fastened upon the neck of the disciples. Severe and murderous laws were enacted against those who dared to deviate from the standard of doctrine established by corrupt rulers. Whole nations of christians, under the name of heretics, were subjugated or extirpated. Thus death and hell devastated a great part of the christian world. The holy land had fallen into the hands of the Mohammedans, and those long and bloody wars, commonly known as the Crusades, were undertaken by the authority of the Roman Catholic church for its recovery. When we consider the extensive and long continued dominion of these two rival powers, and the many martyrs that fell under them, we see a propriety in the figure representing those that fell under Pagan Rome, as waiting for their "crown of life," until their fellow sufferers who should be killed under Papal and Mohammedan rule, should be fulfilled. Jerusalem was to be trodden under foot by both these Gentile powers, and when he who now holds it shall have "accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people," "the mystery of God" shall be finished. Rev. 10: 1-7; Dan. 12: 6, 7.

For the Crisis.

Starks Quarterly Conference.

This Conference commenced March 6th as appointed. The roads were very bad, yet a good company of the faithful were able to get to the meeting, and more than received pay for their efforts, for the Lord abundantly blessed the people. This is a new field. Some over one year ago, Bro. J. Hemenway went there and sowed the good seed. God blessed it, and a number received "the gospel of the kingdom" gladly. The work has been helped on by Bro. Jones, Lombard and Howard, and the Lord has raised up a good company to stand in defence of the gospel of faith and hope, amidst the elements of error, war, reveling, darkness, and hatred.

Our conference began in the good spirit, and progressed with the power of God. The preaching was good, and the witnesses to the truth numerous and spirited. The children of the kingdom seemed to be greatly strengthened and benefited, while the community was stirred up to see if these things are so. Our congregations were large, and very attentive to the word. Much good will result from this conference.

It is a time of darkness and great apostasy with many of the churches in that region, and the more thoughtful among them are hungering for the word of life, and famishing for want of it. Our hearts were made glad, not only to see our brethren heartily engaged in the work of the Lord, but also to see the deep interest manifested by so large a portion of the community. Sunday evening several arose, asking the prayers of God's people, deciding that they would seek the Lord. This was the last meeting of our Conference, but several of the brethren concluded to stop and continue to labor a few days longer with them.

The ministers present were Elds. Sevey, Haggett, Howard and Wellcome. Bro. Sevey is yet too ill to preach much. Bro. Haggett is recovering his health slowly, but will not be able to do much more, unless he leaves off preaching awhile longer. The work calls for more laborers, and more health and strength to endure the toils to which we are subjected. But the Lord is soon coming, then we may have a day of rest.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, March 19, 1862.

☞ PLEASE REMEMBER to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—O

New Volume.

This is the first number of a new volume, and consequently the time to pay in advance for the next six months, or year, if you wish to have the paper continued. Please send at once that we may know how many to publish. This is also a good time to get new subscribers, and we hope our Bro. and Srs. will make extra effort to increase the circulation of the Crisis, in order that the glorious truths of the Bible, which have been so long buried in mysticism, may be scattered among those who are famishing for the word of life.

We shall try to make our paper such an one as will "feed the flock of God," and cheer those who are waiting for the Son of man. Let us all rally anew for the conflict, that will soon end in the eternal triumph of the saints. This is no time for rest. The foe is awake, and all will be done that can be to keep us out of the kingdom. The wrath of his embattled legions against our coming Prince knows no bounds; but if we are clothed with "the whole armor of God," our conquest is sure. Let every child of the Lord see that he be not found sleeping. Eternal life will soon be gained or lost.—O.

Our Condition.

In answer to the inquiries of our friends concerning the prosperity of the "Crisis," we would say that we have never been before in so good condition, financially, at this season of the year, as now. This, of course, is very encouraging, when we consider the hard times through which we have been passing for some months. We feel conscious that the Lord is our helper, and is blessing our efforts to spread the light of truth among our fellow men.

We are satisfied that our work is important, short, and must be earnest to be effective. Let every true disciple of Jesus renew his efforts in the work of the Lord the coming year. As we value the truths we advocate above every thing earthly, let us do all we can to spread them among our fellow men. We hope every reader of the Crisis will try to get a new subscriber. Lend your paper to your neighbor, and try to get him interested in that which pertains to the future life. All things are rushing to the final issue, and soon the great King will be seen coming in all his glory.—O.

Danielsonville.

Danielsonville is a pleasant and thriving village on the Norwich and Worcester R. R., thirty-four miles south of the latter place. For the last two and a half years, the church in D. have been favored with the faithful labors of Bro. H. F. Carpenter, whose ministry and multiplied pastoral visits have been much blessed. Several have been converted and added to the church of Christ. He is one of the true men who takes the oversight of "the flock of God" with the true motive; and as the result, much good follows. He is about to become the pastor of the church in Poultney, Vt.,—the first of April. This is a source of deep grief to the church in D., but in their sadness, the Lord has recently given them great cause for rejoicing.

Feb. 27th, in company with Bro. C., we commenced meetings in D. in their pleasant chapel, and closed them Mar. 9th. We found the way well prepared by the earnest efforts of Bro. C. A few days previous, he had baptized two happy souls, and others were inquiring what they should do to be saved.

During our meetings, about fifteen were brought from darkness to light, from sorrow to joy, from death to life; seven of whom were baptized Mar. 9th, and in the evening, in company with two others, received from Bro. Carpenter the right hand of fellowship. It was a scene of interest. Ten more came forward for prayers, all of whom arose and expressed by word of mouth their determination to be christians. Many more are under conviction, and almost persuaded to become Jesus' disciples.

One was converted and baptized, who has been a lecturer on Phrenology, and had trusted to the system of "natural religion," advocated by many deluded ones in these days; but he was led to see that the ark of his hopes was no safer for the voyage of life, than an Indian's birch-bark canoe for crossing the ocean. He is now sitting at the feet of Jesus, learning the way of life, rejoicing in the blessed hope of immortality through him. We trust he will yet be useful in the vineyard of the Lord, in persuading others to follow Christ.

We shall expect the good work in D. will continue under the zealous labors of our dear Bro. C. May the Lord give him great success in leading sinful men to the Savior.—O.

New Tracts.

WITCHCRAFT UNVEILED, or the Voice of God against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed, Harvard, Ill. Price 5 cents single, postage 1 cent.

This is "a tract for the times." For sale by Thos. G. Newman, at the Harbinger office, Seneca Falls, N. Y.—O.

SPRINKLING NOT BAPTISM, a reply to a tract entitled, "Scripture Baptism." By H. V. Reed. Price 3 cents, postage 1 cent. For sale as above.

This is a successful refutation of the tract reviewed.—O.

MIRACULOUS POWERS. The Scripture testimony on the perpetuity of Spiritual gifts, illustrated by narratives of incidents and sentiments carefully compiled from the eminently pious and learned of various denominations. By M. E. Cornell.

This is an interesting work of 144 pp. We do not know the price. For sale at the Advent Review office, Brattle Creek, Mich.—O.

THANKS to Bro. D. F. Newton for the articles sent to the Crisis. By the way, we would say to our readers that Bro. Newton is the Editor of the Golden Rule, published in New York. This paper is a valuable monthly, out-spoken against sin in every form, fearless and truthful. We are always glad to see it come. We wish our Bro. much success in his noble enterprize. Bro. N. is one of the live christian men of the day. His excellent paper is only 50 cents a year—worth twice that amount.—O.

Reward according to works.

BRO. GRANT:—Please give your views of Matt. 16: 27,—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—A. M.

We do not understand from this that every particular sin is to have so many hours, weeks, or years of torment; but that if the works have been good, they will receive eternal life as their reward; if their works have been evil, eternal death will be their wages.—O.

Worthy of Attention.

In a late number of the Scientific American, we find an interesting and valuable article on the "hours of study," and the power of attention. Mr. E. Chadwick, of England, has just published a valuable pamphlet on this subject, in which is found the following extract, which we take from the Scientific American:—

"Struck by the frightful disproportion between the powers of childish attention and the length of school hours, he has directed questions to many distinguished teachers. Mr. Donaldson, head master of the Training College of Glasgow, states that the limits of voluntary and intelligent attention are, with children of from five to seven years of age, about 15 minutes; from seven to ten years of age, about 20 minutes; from ten to twelve years of age, about 25 minutes, from twelve to sixteen or eighteen years of age, about 30 minutes;" and continues, "I have repeatedly obtained a bright voluntary attention from each of these classes for five, or ten, or fifteen minutes more, but I observed it was always at the expense of the succeeding lesson."

We are fully satisfied that many of our ablest preachers would produce double the effect for good, if they would not preach more than half as long as they now do. It is said by those who have had great experience, that we seldom convince people after the close of the first half hour of our sermons. But few people can listen attentively longer than that without feeling tired. John Wesley, and other very successful preachers have found that, as a general rule, thirty minutes was long enough for an ordinary sermon. The long sermons wear out the preacher and the congregations, and are much less effective for good. About the only lasting impression made upon the mind, by many otherwise excellent sermons, is in relation to their length. "It was so tedious," says one; "I thought he never would get through," says another; "He preached the everlasting gospel," says a third. "I should like to hear him if he were not so lengthy," says a fourth.

They do not complain of the subject—that was good; nor the arguments—they were sound; nor the doctrine—that was in harmony with the Bible; nor want of devotion or earnestness, on the part of the preacher; these things were all right; but there was too much of it; it was too long. As when we take food for the body, so when we feed the mind,—always stop while hungry for more. Never satiate or clog, lest the appetite be ruined and dyspepsia follow. There are many good preachers who would be heard with double delight if they would not preach but just half as long as they do usually. We know whereof we affirm. When shall we learn wisdom?—learn to be short? Condense the truth into as few and simple words as possible, then press it home with thrilling earnestness. By earnestness we do not mean loudness, but a deep feeling and sympathy for the people, resulting from a living faith and a holy life, that causes the hearers to realize that you are not speaking for the sake of talking, but to urge them to prepare at once for the great day of the Lord. By earnestness we mean the opposite of that careless, indifferent style, so like a schoolboy's declamation, when the leading object is to say it well, instead of aiming to produce an effect upon the audience by the power of the truth uttered. We must never expect to raise an audience above our own feelings. If we are dull and prosy, and have but little interest in our subject; we shall find the feelings of the audience corresponding with our own, excepting their interest will be somewhat less than ours; hence the importance of earnestness, if we expect to see good results from our labors in the ministry. And with a hope like ours, we do not see how any one proclaiming it can be otherwise than in earnest, as he sees the last sands of time dropping out, the Lord about to come, the dead soon to be raised; the kingdom of heaven established, the righteous saved, and the wicked lost. It is a reasonable conclusion that he does not believe what he utters, if he is not in earnest.—O.

The Pantelegraph.

This is truly "an age of wonders." Could our fathers have been informed that in "the last days" men would travel thirty and forty miles an hour; cross the Atlantic Ocean in nine or ten days; get news at noon in Boston, which took place in California but a few minutes before; that the most perfect likenesses would be taken in a few seconds of time; they would have said, it is all a dream, and impossible.

The Pantelegraph, arranged by Signor Casselli, is another item of wonder, in the work of telegraphing. The following from the Daily Telegraph will give the reader some idea of the discovery:—O.

"You are sitting at Florence, gazing upon a piece of blank paper, and as you gaze, the manuscript which a man is writing at Leghorn—nay, the outline which a draughtsman is tracing—slowly makes its appear. on the blank sheet before you. Let us suppose a very possible case. A fugitive flies his home, and a Hogarth, rushing to the pantelegraph, gives you a sketch of the man, with which you meet him, identify him, and capture him. Such are the powers which we are acquiring for ourselves, simply by studying the forces which surround us, and by watching the method of nature at her own works, and imitating her ways. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that we shall stop here. If any man once imagined that this or that invention was the final discovery, the events of the last years have rebuked that perverse and stupid form of human pride. Already M. Leon Scott and M. Rudolphe Koenig have accomplished the printing of sound, so that the imprint of the note itself can be tested and checked by the sense of sight."

Endless Misery.

In the Herald of Gospel Liberty, dated Jan. 30th, '62, published in Portsmouth, N. H., edited by Bro. D. P. Pike, we find the following sensible remarks:—

"But come, brethren in the ministry, there is other work for you to do, without falling to 'beating our fellow servants.' I believe after all we shall admit that believing in 'endless torment' does not necessarily make a good man, nor disbelieving it necessarily make a 'prosing dreamer,' a 'conceited dogmatist,' or a 'reckless schismatic,' and if we are obliged to resort to these unkind epithets, somebody will think we have a bad case on our hands. Yours for 'Unity,' 'Liberty, and 'Charity.'"

I. H. COE.

New Bedford, Jan. 11, 1862.

We think no doctrine was ever preached that has made so many infidels, or so dishonored God, as the doctrine of eternal misery. But if the soul, or "real man," is immortal, there is no way to avoid the conclusion that wicked men will be eternally miserable, unless we take the unscriptural position that all men will be saved. We have reason to thank the Lord that light and truth are spreading.—O.

A STRANGE SAYING.—We are almost daily astonished at the records of passing events. One of the most astounding features of the present day is the war spirit manifested by professed ministers of the gospel of the kingdom. But O how unlike the spirit of our Divine Master and his apostles! The following is an index to the spirit of the times:—O.

"A western clergyman, in presenting a revolver to a volunteer, said: 'If you get into a tight place, and have to use it, ask God's blessing, if you have time, but be sure not to let your enemy get the start of you. You can say amen after you shoot.'"

A NEW TRACT.—We have just received a new tract from the pen of A. N. Seymour, entitled, "Fifty unanswerable arguments against seventh-day-Sabbath keeping." This is a good tract for those who wish to investigate the subject.

Price 8 cents, postage 1 cent.—O.

ORDERS.—Friends sending orders for books that we have not in the office, will please be patient a little, and we will fill them as soon as we can. We are now waiting for some to be bound.—O.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH."—This is a stirring volume, written in pungent style, and abounding in strong points. Without endorsing all the author says, we can earnestly recommend the book, and believe its suggestions would be very useful, especially to pastors.—Chicago Times.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

The Conference at Chapman Hall, Boston, of which notice was given in last week's Crisis, will commence on Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 1-2 P. M., instead of Tuesday, as noticed in last week's paper.

We shall expect a good meeting. No pains will be spared on the part of the church here to make this gathering pleasant and profitable to all who attend. We are anxious to see the faces of our brethren abroad, and expect that those who attend this annual gathering will be comforted and blessed. It is time for all to be awake. The signs of the times, and the stirring events connected with the nations of earth, show the fulfillment of prophecy, and the speedy advent of the Son of man. May all who come to this meeting receive such light and encouragement as shall bless and strengthen them to fight the good fight of faith.

F. H. BERICK, for the brethren.

Light Advancing.

We have received a private letter from a brother at Mariner's Harbor's Island, N. Y., from which we venture to extract the following:—O.

"I am happy to inform you that the Crisis, which I have taken a few months, is highly prized by me, as a valuable family paper. I like it, because its columns are mostly devoted to the all-important subject,—the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, and the literal resurrection of the dead; which doctrine was the great theme of our Savior and his apostles, in their preaching. In a great measure, this has been lost sight of in these later days, by most of our churches.

I have read, also, works written by you lately, by which I have had my former views radically changed; and I do feel astonished at myself, and more so at those who pretend to preach the gospel in truth and verity, who still maintain those views which the Bible no where contains. I am thankful that I have lived to see and hear the truth of the Bible brought to light. There are some few of us,—some Baptists, some Dutch Reformed, who are getting awake; and we intend, by the help of God, to inculcate our new views in our midst. We have got several works, "Death not life," "Bible against Tradition," "The Soul, what is it?" "Pauline Theology," and several others, which we keep before the people. We have not had much serious opposition, as yet, by the preachers, as I suppose all of them are not aware those works are read by their members. One of the Baptist members, a worthy, good christian, has adopted your views, and now begins to speak of them, and gives them as his views publicly.

On Monday evening, at one of their meetings in the church, some one of the members broached the subject, concerning their brother's new belief, and rather spoke as if it was some skeptical or deistical doctrine. He told me they all present were against him. But thank God, he brought all to a stand-still. The minister took down a book, to show him that learned theologians said, thus and so was the proper meaning. But says the new-doctrine brother, "What does the Bible say? The Bible says thus and so, and I believe God's book." However, the minister concluded he would read those works himself, and see how they comported with scripture. What will be the views he may take, time, or a few days, will tell. I do believe, however, that this view, however slow it may grow, must prevail, for it is the Bible view.

I must inform you, though only known by reputation, what delight I feel at having a few scales torn from my eyes. I have been a member in the D. R. church for more than twenty years; and to think how "the blind lead the blind" puts me in mind of what the Savior said, they would all "fall in the ditch." May God speed the truth, is my humble prayer."

"The World's Crisis."

As I speak a passage on this little life-boat, I promise to leave all my luggage at home. But should I not do this, I beg those at the oars to cast it overboard, and ask me no questions, nor fear my displeasure. A life-boat is no place for baggage. If the precious life be saved, we willingly leave all else behind.

I now ask pardon for all with which I have encumbered it, in time past, hoping to do better in the future. The lighter our boat for the rest of the voyage, the better. The gale is increasing, the darkness thickening. Those at the oars will have enough to do to get us through without a pound of baggage.

May the contributors be equally scrupulous in their productions.

For the Crisis.

To the Readers of the Crisis, Greeting

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—As I read from week to week in the Crisis your anticipations of soon meeting your descending Lord and Savior, as he shall come again without sin unto salvation, my heart joins affinity with yours, and I long at once to see you face to face, and talk of our glorious King, and the "new heaven and the new earth," which he is about to prepare for his weary, waiting bride, who has so long mourned his absence. But as it will never be my privilege, while in the flesh, perhaps to meet a single one of you, I will comfort myself by sending to you across the gulf of time this humble letter of christian sympathy and affection. In very early youth I trust I was made to hear and receive the Savior's welcome invitation,—"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And all along my pilgrim journey through maturer years up to middle-aged life, I have trusted in the blessed Redeemer as my guide, my comfort and support, and my exceeding great reward. My Savior has often found it necessary to visit me with the rod of chastisement and affliction, in many and various ways; yet in a retrospect of life, (though often I have been led to say "all these things are against me") I have never had a single trial too many, nor one I trust which has not resulted in the glory of God and my own spiritual improvement. And thus I presume it will ever be until the refining process is fully completed. For several years past I have walked measurably alone, so far as church fellowship was concerned.

Owing to the silence on the subject of slavery of the Baptist church, with which for years I stood connected, and also an unwillingness to express public disapprobation at the hunting down in order to take back for money a poor panting fugitive by a Baptist minister, and viewing as I did the storm of vengeance about to burst upon us as a nation from an offended God for our oppression, I could not consistently any longer walk with the church, and therefore called for a letter, which I received and withdrew. O! that was one of the painful duties of my life, to tear myself away from the body of brethren and sisters with whom I had so long taken sweet counsel in the Lord. But I felt that if I would be the open and consistent friend of God and suffering humanity, it must be done. And how sweetly have I been sustained. God has given me grace and strength equal to my day and trial. And as I became more and more weaned from earth, and sorrowed and sighed for the coming of my blessed Lord and Master, the Crisis was sent to me by a Sister whom I had long known and loved. This, so far as the coming of the blessed Redeemer is concerned, just met my case. I could commune with dear brothers and sisters, who, like myself, were weary, care-worn pilgrims, and had long eaten their bread with "bitter herbs," and now long for the appearing of their divine Master.

But while we are thus so ardently desiring to see the King in his beauty, do not let us cease for a single moment to be bright and shining lights to the world around us. Let us ever and always bear faithful testimony against the wicked system of slavery, which now is eating at the vitals of our government as doth a canker. Let us do all we can, by prayers, conversation and example, to put down this "sum of all villainies," and to bring about the glorious jubilee of four millions of helpless bondsmen; and though our nation may continue to hold on to the oppressed till God shall slay our first born, and the wail for the dead shall go forth from every house in the land, yet let our skirts be clear of our brother's blood; and if we should not rejoice over their emancipation till Jesus comes in person to deliver them, let us so demean ourselves, that when he does "make inquisition for blood," we shall be remembered not as the enemy, nor as the idle looker-on, nor as the heedless passer-by, but as the known and avowed friend of the suffering slave; that when we saw him we fed him, when thirsty we gave him drink, when sick and in prison we visited and comforted him. Then will it be said to us, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

And now, dear brethren and sisters, I have given you a short synopsis of my life and feelings up to the present time. May I have your prayers and sympathies, and very soon be permitted to greet you in the kingdom of our blessed Savior, where face to face I may tell you the wonders of redeeming love in my salvation. Till then I bid you all adieu, with the hope of speedily extending to you kindlier greetings in the resurrection morn of eternity.

For the Crisis.

The Opening of the Fifth Seal.

NUMBER FIVE.

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them: and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."—Rev. 6: 9-11.

If we are to understand the seven seals as giving a series of events in regular chronological order from the opening of the first to the seventh, it is singular that no notice had previously been taken of the martyrs slain for their testimony concerning Jesus Christ. It is generally admitted that all the apostles, John alone excepted, suffered martyrdom, and thus sealed their testimony with their blood. Did the Revelator pass over all the bloody scenes of the Pagan persecution as less worthy of notice to the Christian church, than the prevalence of famine in the Roman empire? If I have rightly interpreted the seals, we have now come back in the world's history to the "era of martyrs." As the leaves of the book were unrolled, John saw a picture or hieroglyphic drawn upon the roll, significant of the scene to be exhibited during that period of the world's history, to be given after all the seals had been opened; for it would be necessary to unroll the whole before the history could be commenced in regular chronological order. I therefore understand the opening of the fifth seal as giving a very significant emblem of the persecutions which Christians were to suffer under the dominion of Pagan Rome, commonly known as the "ten persecutions." Notice of these ten persecutions was given in one of the epistles which John was directed to write to the seven churches of Asia, Rev. 2: 10,—"Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

Comparatively few of the martyrs of Jesus had been slain when John wrote; therefore, he did not really see them, nor hear their voice. We must bear in mind that he is describing what he saw pictured upon the roll, not things which really existed. At most, he could only have seen them in vision; for what did not really exist he could not really see. Therefore, all arguments to prove either the conscious, or the unconscious state of the dead, drawn from this hieroglyphical representation, must be utterly futile. But suppose he did really see what he describes; let us see what his language will amount to. These souls were slain, therefore they could not have been immortal. They were seen under the altar, and the altar was on earth, not in heaven. They were to rest yet for a little season; showing that they had remained at rest ever since they were slain. They were to rest until their fellow-servants and brethren that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled; therefore they cannot receive their "crown of life" until the last martyr is slain. This entirely cuts off the doctrine, that the righteous receive their reward immediately after death. The general cry of the martyrs while enduring the horrors of the Pagan persecution, might be written in capitals under the picture to represent a loud cry; therefore it is not necessary to understand that the martyrs ever spake a word after they were slain. It is easy to see that the presentation of white robes might also be represented in a picture drawn upon the roll, all of which John could see, but he must use language to describe it, and must speak or write the words which constituted the general cry of the martyrs. The scene exhibits what transpired during the life of the martyrs, not any communications made to them after their death. They knew the promises while living, and those were their support under the most painful tortures which diabolical ingenuity could invent to produce the most excruciating death. "Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. . . . Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." This was a promise made to the living; "For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten."—Eccl. 9: 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. Promises to the dead therefore may consist with Romish Purgatory, but they have no place in the theology of the Bible; and we cannot understand the text as conveying the idea that the souls slain know any thing while dead; and they must rest until the last martyr is slain, and then they all receive their "crown of life" together.

It is singular that any sensible man should understand this fifth seal as pointing out the martyrs of any particular period of the Pagan persecution, as though God were a respecter of persons, and the martyrs of one period were more precious in his sight than those of another; yet we find commentators restricting it to the Dioclesian persecution. It undoubtedly embraces all the martyrs from Stephen down to the days of Constantine, who overthrew Paganism in the Roman empire, and put a stop for a time to those persecutions which Christians had suffered. But they were again revived under the Papal and Mohammedan dominion. This cessation for a time seems to be the natural place for dividing the book, and distinguishing between those who suffered under Paganism, and their brethren that should be killed under Papal and Mohammedan rule. These both were to exist cotemporaneously, and continue down to the end of the kingdoms of this world; or to the time when the martyrs shall receive their "crown of life." Many more have been slain during the long reign of those two horns of antichrist than were killed under the persecutions of Pagan Rome.

The period of the third and fourth seals, being cotemporaneous, was one of great slaughter. "Power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth." The mystery of iniquity began early to work; and when Pagan Rome was subverted, and a Christian emperor was placed upon the throne, then, to human appearance, the time had come to avenge the blood of the martyrs upon them that dwelt on the Roman earth. But no; they must rest yet for a little season. How long? Rev. 20: 1-6, must answer this question. When a professedly christian emperor obtained the exercise of civil power, its corruptive influence soon developed that "man of sin," 2 Thess. 2: 1-12. The lust of dominion, "who shall be greatest?" wrangled even in the bosoms of the followers of Jesus. Mar. 9: 34. Ambition, and the meekness of wisdom, dwelt not together. Domineering priestcraft soon banished the halcyon days of the primitive Christians, eclipsed the light of pure christianity by taking away the lamp of life, and spread dark ignorance over the land by making pure christian knowledge of difficult attainment. Ignorance became blind submission, and priestcraft was advanced into civil tyranny. Then a yoke of superstitious observances was fastened upon the neck of the disciples. Severe and murderous laws were enacted against those who dared to deviate from the standard of doctrine established by corrupt rulers. Whole nations of christians, under the name of heretics, were subjugated or extirpated. Thus death and hell devastated a great part of the christian world. The holy land had fallen into the hands of the Mohammedans, and those long and bloody wars, commonly known as the Crusades, were undertaken by the authority of the Roman Catholic church for its recovery. When we consider the extensive and long continued dominion of these two rival powers, and the many martyrs that fell under them, we see a propriety in the figure representing those that fell under Pagan Rome, as waiting for their "crown of life," until their fellow sufferers who should be killed under Papal and Mohammedan rule, should be fulfilled. Jerusalem was to be trodden under foot by both these Gentile powers, and when he who now holds it shall have "accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people," "the mystery of God" shall be finished. Rev. 10: 1-7; Dan. 12: 6, 7. J. C. ROGERS.

For the Crisis.

Starks Quarterly Conference.

This Conference commenced March 6th as appointed. The roads were very bad, yet a good company of the faithful were able to get to the meeting, and more than received pay for their efforts, for the Lord abundantly blessed the people. This is a new field. Some over one year ago, Bro. J. Hemenway went there and sowed the good seed. God blessed it, and a number received "the gospel of the kingdom" gladly. The work has been helped on by Brn. Jones, Lombard and Howard, and the Lord has raised up a good company to stand in defence of the gospel of faith and hope, amidst the elements of error, war, reveling, darkness, and hatred.

Our conference began in the good spirit, and progressed with the power of God. The preaching was good, and the witnesses to the truth numerous and spirited. The children of the kingdom seemed to be greatly strengthened and benefited, while the community was stirred up to see if these things are so. Our congregations were large, and very attentive to the word. Much good will result from this conference.

It is a time of darkness and great apostasy with many of the churches in that region, and the more thoughtful among them are hungering for the word of life, and famishing for want of it. Our hearts were made glad, not only to see our brethren heartily engaged in the work of the Lord, but also to see the deep interest manifested by so large a portion of the community. Sunday evening several arose, asking the prayers of God's people, deciding that they would seek the Lord. This was the last meeting of our Conference, but several of the brethren concluded to stop and continue to labor a few days longer with them.

The ministers present were Elds. Sevey, Haggett, Howard and Wellcome. Bro. Sevey is yet too ill to preach much. Bro. Haggett is recovering his health slowly, but will not be able to do much more, unless he leaves off preaching awhile longer. The work calls for more laborers, and more health and strength to endure the toils to which we are subjected. But the Lord is soon coming, then we may have a day of rest. I. C. WELLCOME, Sec.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, March 19, 1862.

☞ PLEASE REMEMBER to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—O

New Volume.

This is the first number of a new volume, and consequently the time to pay in advance for the next six months, or year, if you wish to have the paper continued. Please send at once that we may know how many to publish. This is also a good time to get new subscribers, and we hope our Brn. and Srs. will make extra effort to increase the circulation of the Crisis, in order that the glorious truths of the Bible, which have been so long buried in mysticism, may be scattered among those who are famishing for the word of life.

We shall try to make our paper such an one as will "feed the flock of God," and cheer those who are waiting for the Son of man. Let us all rally anew for the conflict, that will soon end in the eternal triumph of the saints. This is no time for rest. The foe is awake, and all will be done that can be to keep us out of the kingdom. The wrath of his embattled legions against our coming Prince knows no bounds; but if we are clothed with "the whole armor of God," our conquest is sure. Let every child of the Lord see that he be not found sleeping. Eternal life will soon be gained or lost.—O.

Our Condition.

In answer to the inquiries of our friends concerning the prosperity of the "Crisis," we would say that we have never been before in so good condition, financially, at this season of the year, as now. This, of course, is very encouraging, when we consider the hard times through which we have been passing for some months. We feel conscious that the Lord is our helper, and is blessing our efforts to spread the light of truth among our fellow men.

We are satisfied that our work is important, short, and must be earnest to be effective. Let every true disciple of Jesus renew his efforts in the work of the Lord the coming year. As we value the truths we advocate above every thing earthly, let us do all we can to spread them among our fellow men. We hope every reader of the Crisis will try to get a new subscriber. Lend your paper to your neighbor, and try to get him interested in that which pertains to the future life. All things are rushing to the final issue, and soon the great King will be seen coming in all his glory.—O.

Danielsonville.

Danielsonville is a pleasant and thriving village on the Norwich and Worcester R. R., thirty-four miles south of the latter place. For the last two and a half years, the church in D. have been favored with the faithful labors of Bro. H. F. Carpenter, whose ministry and multiplied pastoral visits have been much blessed. Several have been converted and added to the church of Christ. He is one of the true men who takes the oversight of "the flock of God" with the true motive; and as the result, much good follows. He is about to become the pastor of the church in Poultney, Vt.,—the first of April. This is a source of deep grief to the church in D., but in their sadness, the Lord has recently given them great cause for rejoicing.

Feb. 27th, in company with Bro. C., we commenced meetings in D. in their pleasant chapel, and closed them Mar. 9th. We found the way well prepared by the earnest efforts of Bro. C. A few days previous, he had baptized two happy souls, and others were inquiring what they should do to be saved.

During our meetings, about fifteen were brought from darkness to light, from sorrow to joy, from death to life; seven of whom were baptized Mar. 9th, and in the evening, in company with two others, received from Bro. Carpenter the right hand of fellowship. It was a scene of interest. Ten more came forward for prayers, all of whom arose and expressed by word of mouth their determination to be christians. Many more are under conviction, and almost persuaded to become Jesus' disciples.

One was converted and baptized, who has been a lecturer on Phrenology, and had trusted to the system of "natural religion," advocated by many deluded ones in these days; but he was led to see that the ark of his hopes was no safer for the voyage of life, than an Indian's birch-bark canoe for crossing the ocean. He is now sitting at the feet of Jesus, learning the way of life, rejoicing in the blessed hope of immortality through him. We trust he will yet be useful in the vineyard of the Lord, in persuading others to follow Christ.

We shall expect the good work in D. will continue under the zealous labors of our dear Bro. C. May the Lord give him great success in leading sinful men to the Savior.—O.

WITCHCRAFT UNVEILED, or the Voice of God against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed, Harvard, Ill. Price 5 cents single, postage 1 cent.

This is "a tract for the times." For sale by Thos. G. Newman, at the Harbinger office, Seneca Falls, N. Y.—O.

SPRINKLING NOT BAPTISM, a reply to a tract entitled, "Scripture Baptism." By H. V. Reed. Price 3 cents, postage 1 cent. For sale as above.

This is a successful refutation of the tract reviewed.—O.

MIRACULOUS POWERS. The Scripture testimony on the perpetuity of Spiritual gifts, illustrated by narratives of incidents and sentiments carefully compiled from the eminently pious and learned of various denominations. By M. E. Cornell.

This is an interesting work of 144 pp. We do not know the price. For sale at the Advent Review office, Brattle Creek, Mich.—O.

THANKS to Bro. D. F. Newton for the articles sent to the Crisis. By the way, we would say to our readers that Bro. Newton is the Editor of the Golden Rule, published in New York. This paper is a valuable monthly, out-spoken against sin in every form, fearless and truthful. We are always glad to see it come. We wish our Bro. much success in his noble enterprise. Bro. N. is one of the live christian men of the day. His excellent paper is only 50 cents a year—worth twice that amount.—O.

Reward according to works.

BRO. GRANT:—Please give your views of Matt. 16: 27,—"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works."—A. M.

We do not understand from this that every particular sin is to have so many hours, weeks, or years of torment; but that if the works have been good, they will receive eternal life as their reward; if their works have been evil, eternal death will be their wages.—O.

Worthy of Attention.

In a late number of the Scientific American, we find an interesting and valuable article on the "hours of study," and the power of attention. Mr. E. Chadwick, of England, has just published a valuable pamphlet on this subject, in which is found the following extract, which we take from the Scientific American:—

"Struck by the frightful disproportion between the powers of childish attention and the length of school hours, he has directed questions to many distinguished teachers. Mr. Donaldson, head master of the Training College of Glasgow, states that the limits of voluntary and intelligent attention are, with children of from five to seven years of age, about 15 minutes, from seven to ten years of age, about 20 minutes; from ten to twelve years of age, about 25 minutes; from twelve to sixteen or eighteen years of age, about 30 minutes;" and continues, "I have repeatedly obtained a bright voluntary attention from each of these classes for five, or ten, or fifteen minutes more, but I observed it was always at the expense of the succeeding lesson."

We are fully satisfied that many of our ablest preachers would produce double the effect for good, if they would not preach more than half as long as they now do. It is said by those who have had great experience, that we seldom convince people after the close of the first half hour of our sermons. But few people can listen attentively longer than that without feeling tired. John Wesley, and other very successful preachers have found that, as a general rule, thirty minutes was long enough for an ordinary sermon. The long sermons wear out the preacher and the congregations, and are much less effective for good. About the only lasting impression made upon the mind, by many otherwise excellent sermons, is in relation to their length. "It was so tedious," says one; "I thought he never would get through," says another; "He preached the everlasting gospel," says a third. "I should like to hear him if he were not so lengthy," says a fourth.

They do not complain of the subject—that was good; nor the arguments—they were sound; nor the doctrine—that was in harmony with the Bible; nor want of devotion or earnestness, on the part of the preacher; these things were all right; but there was too much of it; it was too long. As when we take food for the body, so when we feed the mind,—always stop while hungry for more. Never satiate or clog, lest the appetite be ruined and dyspepsia follow. There are many good preachers who would be heard with double delight if they would not preach but just half as long as they do usually. We know whereof we affirm. When shall we learn wisdom?—learn to be short? Condense the truth into as few and simple words as possible, then press it home with thrilling earnestness. By earnestness we do not mean loudness, but a deep feeling and sympathy for the people, resulting from a living faith and a holy life, that causes the hearers to realize that you are not speaking for the sake of talking, but to urge them to prepare at once for the great day of the Lord. By earnestness we mean the opposite of that careless, indifferent style, so like a schoolboy's declamation, when the leading object is to say it well, instead of aiming to produce an effect upon the audience by the power of the truth uttered. We must never expect to raise an audience above our own feelings. If we are dull and prosy, and have but little interest in our subject; we shall find the feelings of the audience corresponding with our own, excepting their interest will be somewhat less than ours; hence the importance of earnestness, if we expect to see good results from our labors in the ministry. And with a hope like ours, we do not see how any one proclaiming it can be otherwise than in earnest, as he sees the last sands of time dropping out, the Lord about to come, the dead soon to be raised; the kingdom of heaven established, the righteous saved, and the wicked lost. It is a reasonable conclusion that he does not believe what he utters, if he is not in earnest.—O.

The Pantelegraph.

This is truly "an age of wonders." Could our fathers have been informed that in "the last days" men would travel thirty and forty miles an hour; cross the Atlantic Ocean in nine or ten days; get news at noon in Boston, which took place in California but a few minutes before; that the most perfect likenesses would be taken in a few seconds of time; they would have said, it is all a dream, and impossible.

The Pantelegraph, arranged by Signor Casselli, is another item of wonder, in the work of telegraphing. The following from the Daily Telegraph will give the reader some idea of the discovery:—O.

"You are sitting at Florence, gazing upon a piece of blank paper, and as you gaze, the manuscript which a man is writing at Leghorn—nay, the outline which a draughtsman is tracing—slowly makes its appearance on the blank sheet before you. Let us suppose a very possible case. A fugitive flies his home, and a Hogarth, rushing to the pantelegraph, gives you a sketch of the man, with which you meet him, identify him, and capture him. Such are the powers which we are acquiring for ourselves, simply by studying the forces which surround us, and by watching the method of nature at her own works, and imitating her ways. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that we shall stop here. If any man once imagined that this or that invention was the final discovery, the events of the last years have rebuked that perverse and stupid form of human pride. Already M. Leon Scott and M. Rudolphe Koenig have accomplished the printing of sound, so that the imprint of the note itself can be tested and checked by the sense of sight."

Endless Misery.

In the Herald of Gospel Liberty, dated Jan. 30th, '62, published in Portsmouth, N. H., edited by Bro. D. P. Pike, we find the following sensible remarks:—

"But come, brethren in the ministry, there is other work for you to do, without falling to 'beating our fellow servants.' I believe after all we shall admit that believing in 'endless torment' does not necessarily make a good man, nor disbelieving it necessarily make a 'prosing dreamer,' a 'conceited dogmatist,' or a 'reckless schismatic,' and if we are obliged to resort to these unkind epithets, somebody will think we have a bad case on our hands. Yours for 'Unity,' 'Liberty, and 'Charity.'"

I. H. COE.

New Bedford, Jan. 11, 1862.

We think no doctrine was ever preached that has made so many infidels, or so dishonored God, as the doctrine of eternal misery. But if the soul, or "real man," is immortal, there is no way to avoid the conclusion that wicked men will be eternally miserable, unless we take the unscriptural position that all men will be saved. We have reason to thank the Lord that light and truth are spreading.—O.

A STRANGE SAYING.—We are almost daily astonished at the records of passing events. One of the most astounding features of the present day is the war spirit manifested by professed ministers of the gospel of the kingdom. But O how unlike the spirit of our Divine Master and his apostles! The following is an index to the spirit of the times:—O.

"A western clergyman, in presenting a revolver to a volunteer, said: 'If you get into a tight place, and have to use it, ask God's blessing, if you have time, but be sure not to let your enemy get the start of you. You can say amen after you shoot.'"

A NEW TRACT.—We have just received a new tract from the pen of A. N. Seymour, entitled, "Fifty unanswerable arguments against seventh-day-Sabbath keeping." This is a good tract for those who wish to investigate the subject.

Price 3 cents, postage 1 cent.—O.

ORDERS.—Friends sending orders for books that we have not in the office, will please be patient a little, and we will fill them as soon as we can. We are now waiting for some to be bound.—O.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH."—This is a stirring volume, written in pungent style, and abounding in strong points. Without endorsing all the author says, we can earnestly recommend the book, and believe its suggestions would be very useful, especially to pastors.—Chicago Times.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

The Conference at Chapman Hall, Boston, of which notice was given in last week's Crisis, will commence on Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 1-2 P. M., instead of Tuesday, as noticed in last week's paper.

We shall expect a good meeting. No pains will be spared on the part of the church here to make this gathering pleasant and profitable to all who attend. We are anxious to see the faces of our brethren abroad, and expect that those who attend this annual gathering will be comforted and blessed. It is time for all to be awake. The signs of the times, and the stirring events connected with the nations of earth, show the fulfillment of prophecy, and the speedy advent of the Son of man. May all who come to this meeting receive such light and encouragement as shall bless and strengthen them to fight the good fight of faith. F. H. BERICK, for the brethren.

Light Advancing.

We have received a private letter from a brother at Mariner's Harbor's Island, N. Y., from which we venture to extract the following:—O.

"I am happy to inform you that the Crisis, which I have taken a few months, is highly prized by me, as a valuable family paper. I like it, because its columns are mostly devoted to the all-important subject,—the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth, and the literal resurrection of the dead; which doctrine was the great theme of our Savior and his apostles, in their preaching. In a great measure, this has been lost sight of in these later days, by most of our churches.

I have read, also, works written by you lately, by which I have had my former views radically changed; and I do feel astonished at myself, and more so at those who pretend to preach the gospel in truth and verity, who still maintain those views which the Bible no where contains. I am thankful that I have lived to see and hear the truth of the Bible brought to light. There are some few of us,—some Baptists, some Dutch Reformed, who are getting awake; and we intend, by the help of God, to inculcate our new views in our midst. We have got several works, "Death not life," "Bible against Tradition," "The Soul, what is it?" "Pauline Theology," and several others, which we keep before the people. We have not had much serious opposition, as yet, by the preachers, as I suppose all of them are not aware those works are read by their members. One of the Baptist members, a worthy, good christian, has adopted your views, and now begins to speak of them, and gives them as his views publicly.

On Monday evening, at one of their meetings in the church, some one of the members broached the subject, concerning their brother's new belief, and rather spoke as if it was some skeptical or deistical doctrine. He told me they all present were against him. But thank God, he brought all to a stand-still. The minister took down a book, to show him that learned theologians said, thus and so was the proper meaning. But says the new-doctrine brother, "What does the Bible say? The Bible says thus and so, and I believe God's book." However, the minister concluded he would read those works himself, and see how they comported with scripture. What will be the views he may take, time, or a few days, will tell. I do believe, however, that this view, however slow it may grow, must prevail, for it is the Bible view.

I must inform you, though only known by reputation, what delight I feel at having a few scales torn from my eyes. I have been a member in the D. R. church for more than twenty years; and to think how "the blind lead the blind" puts me in mind of what the Savior said, they would all "fall in the ditch." May God speed the truth, is my humble prayer."

"The World's Crisis."

As I speak a passage on this little lifeboat, I promise to leave all my luggage at home. But should I not do this, I beg those at the oars to cast it overboard, and ask me no questions, nor fear my displeasure. A life-boat is no place for baggage. If the precious life be saved, we willingly leave all else behind.

I now ask pardon for all with which I have encumbered it, in time past, hoping to do better in the future. The lighter our boat for the rest of the voyage, the better. The gale is increasing, the darkness thickening. Those at the oars will have enough to do to get us through without a pound of baggage. E. S. WILLARD.

Hammonton, N. Y., Jan. 1st., 1862.

P. S. "HONOR TO WHOM HONOR." With delight we speak of the Executive in the Crisis office. We think them worthy of all praise. We are often surprised at the scrupulous nicety of the work. It comes the nearest to us of finding the "Philosopher's Stone" to see such rough materials assume such beautiful proportions, after passing through their skillful hands. May the contributors be equally scrupulous in their productions.

For the Crisis.

To the Readers of the Crisis, Greeting

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—As I read from week to week in the Crisis your anticipations of soon meeting your descending Lord and Savior, as he shall come again without sin unto salvation, my heart joins affinity with yours, and I long at once to see you face to face, and talk of our glorious King, and the "new heaven and the new earth," which he is about to prepare for his weary, waiting bride, who has so long mourned his absence. But as it will never be my privilege, while in the flesh, perhaps to meet a single one of you, I will comfort myself by sending to you across the gulf of time this humble letter of christian sympathy and affection. In very early youth I trust I was made to hear and receive the Savior's welcome invitation,—"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." And all along my pilgrim journey through maturer years up to middle-aged life, I have trusted in the blessed Redeemer as my guide, my comfort and support, and my exceeding great reward. My Savior has often found it necessary to visit me with the rod of chastisement and affliction, in many and various ways; yet in a retrospect of life, (though often I have been led to say "all these things are against me") I have never had a single trial too many, nor one I trust which has not resulted in the glory of God and my own spiritual improvement. And thus I presume it will ever be until the refining process is fully completed. For several years past I have walked measurably alone, so far as church fellowship was concerned.

Owing to the silence on the subject of slavery of the Baptist church, with which for years I stood connected, [illegible] also an unwillingness to express public disapprobation at the hunting down in order to take back for money a poor panting fugitive by a Baptist minister, and viewing as I did the storm of vengeance about to burst upon us as a nation from an offended God for our oppression, I could not consistently any longer walk with the church, and therefore called for a letter, which I received and withdrew. O! that was one of the painful duties of my life, to tear myself away from the body of brethren and sisters with whom I had so long taken sweet counsel in the Lord. But I felt that if I would be the open and consistent friend of God and suffering humanity, it must be done. And how sweetly have I been sustained. God has given me grace and strength equal to my day and trial. And as I became more and more weaned from earth, and sorrowed and sighed for the coming of my blessed Lord and Master, the Crisis was sent to me by a Sister whom I had long known and loved. This, so far as the coming of the blessed Redeemer is concerned, just met my case. I could commune with dear brothers and sisters, who, like myself, were weary, care-worn pilgrims, and had long eaten their bread with "bitter herbs," and now long for the appearing of their divine Master.

But while we are thus so ardently desiring to see the King in his beauty, do not let us cease for a single moment to be bright and shining lights to the world around us. Let us ever and always bear faithful testimony against the wicked system of slavery, which now is eating at the vitals of our government as doth a canker. Let us do all we can, by prayers, conversation and example, to put down this "sum of all villainies," and to bring about the glorious jubilee of four millions of helpless bondsmen; and though our nation may continue to hold on to the oppressed till God shall slay our first born, and the wail for the dead shall go forth from every house in the land, yet let our skirts be clear of our brother's blood; and if we should not rejoice over their emancipation till Jesus comes in person to deliver them, let us so demean ourselves, that when he does "make inquisition for blood," we shall be remembered not as the enemy, nor as the idle looker-on, nor as the heedless passer-by, but as the known and avowed friend of the suffering slave; that when we saw him we fed him, when thirsty we gave him drink, when sick and in prison we visited and comforted him. Then will it be said to us, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

And now, dear brethren and sisters, I have given you a short synopsis of my life and feelings up to the present time. May I have your prayers and sympathies, and very soon be permitted to greet you in the kingdom of our blessed Savior, where face to face I may tell you the wonders of redeeming love in my salvation. Till then I bid you all adieu, with the hope of speedily extending to you kindlier greetings in the resurrection morn of eternity.

One Word.

For the Crisis.

Bro. H. Munger asks if the writers of the Crisis cannot be induced to sign their names to their articles. For my part I love to know who is speaking to me, when I listen to anything read from that paper. I don't fancy the idea of hitching on such long names as some of us have,—longer than the articles they write. But it often happens that some "little one" writes, and in shooting high hits some of the big folks. Then, taking advantage of the name, we hear them saying, "Better have left that for your superiors, or the Elders to write. Rather above your years." In such cases, such folks do not deserve to know an author's name. When all agree to let little folks speak as big words as they can, without reminding them of their littleness, it may be well to spell out names. M. M.

Correspondence.

From Eld. A. Ross.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from my eastern tour; have been absent thirty-one days, traveled five hundred and seventy-five miles, attended forty-three meetings, preached thirty-nine times,—with what effect, I must leave the Judge of all the earth to determine at the great day of assize. So far as my own knowledge goes, I feel compelled to say, "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" I hope, however, time will show that "our labor has not been in vain in the Lord."

In my journey I met many old friends, with whom I have in days past taken sweet counsel; and to look upon them once more was like face answering to face. But my heart was made sad on account of the ravages of the fell monster, Death. There has been a great mortality in the East. Many aged pilgrims have finished their course, and repose in the silence of the grave. But the strange work of the enemy has not been confined to those of advanced years. Blooming youth and innocent infancy have been and are being swept away from scenes of time and sense. From family circles where a few weeks ago was heard the united song of praise, there now arises the bitter wail, like that of Rachel refusing to be comforted for her children because they are not. Our beloved brother and sister Dammon are among the number who have drank deep from affliction's cup. Two of their children, Mary Jane and Lizzie, beautiful young women, beloved by all who knew them, have fallen; but they have gone safe—they "sleep in Jesus." May the sweet consolations of the gospel be the portion of the bereaved family. It is only a little while and "thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." O! how blessed will be the morning of Zion's redemption, when the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations, shall be destroyed; when death will be swallowed up in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth. My greatest ambition is to live so as to welcome the King of glory, and share the blessings of immortality at his coming.

From Bro. Josiah Kellogg.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to ask the Christian Advent brethren, and more particularly those in the western portion of Vermont, do we believe that we have been following cunningly devised fables, while we have tried to get the world aroused to prepare for the coming judgment and kingdom of Christ? If we think we have not, then why not try to do all in our power to rescue our fellow men from approaching destruction? Would it not be for the good of our cause to adopt some more efficient way to do the great work that is before us, by doing as the churches have done in Maine, R. I., Iowa, and nearly all the rest of the States; forming the churches into a conference, or conferences, especially those on the west side of the Green mountains? We have only to look at Maine, to see what the result of such meetings has been.

And now, I wish to ask the churches in Castleton, Poultney, Hebron, Salem, Rutland, Addison, New Haven, Hindsburg, Waterbury, Swanton, Essex, Rouse's Point, and all others that are in those regions, to write on this subject; and at once call a meeting of that kind, at some one of those places. It would be well to appoint such a meeting in as central a place as convenient, so as to make the expenses as equal to the different churches as possible.

Lincoln, Vt., Feb. 16, 1862.

From Bro. Israel Damman.

Bro. Grant:—I would be glad to see you once more in the flesh, and sit down by your side and hear words from you in this trying hour. This winter has been the most trying that I ever saw. The scenes that have passed before me have been such as the prophet saw, when he cried out, "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass." Dear brother, we are in sorrow. Two of our children have been torn from us in haste, and borne to the land of the enemy; but I hear the prophet say in the name of the Lord, they "shall come again to their own border." Yours as ever.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Jan. 25th, 1862, at the residence of her parents in East Weare, N. H., Sister Hattie M., daughter of Eld. Benjamin and Mary Locke, aged 24 years and 8 months.

Her sufferings were long and severe, but she bore them without a murmur, calmly trusting in Jesus. We sorrow not as those without hope, believing that soon Jesus will come and unlock the graves, and bring her with all the saints from the land of the enemy.

She embraced religion when twelve years of age, and even exemplified it by her holy life and godly conversation, rejoicing in the glorious truths connected with the second coming of Christ.

She was deeply interested in the Health Reform, and was a firm supporter and consistent advocate of the reform dress for women, for which cause she suffered much, but she meekly bore the scoffs and reproaches of the slaves of fashion, choosing rather to suffer than stifle her convictions of right. Deeply do we feel her loss, but we hope ere long to meet her where sickness and death are known no more.

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze;
Pleasant as the air of evening,
When it falls among the trees."

[Herald, please copy.

Died at Rocky Brook, R. I., March 5th, 1862 of consumption, Gideon, son of George and Mary Ann Ecclestón, aged 18 years and 5 days.

Our brother and sister are again bereaved. The cruel destroyer has seized upon another inmate of the household, and made him his victim. Truly this world is one of sorrow, especially to them. The bud of two years, the young and light-hearted girl, the young woman, and now the young man, just coming to the prime of manhood, it has been their hard lot to consign to the silent tomb; but their hope is in God, who alone can sustain amid the accumulated trials. They look forward with faith's expectant eye to the time when "them which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him;" when death's cruel hand will be stayed, and "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

"A little while" we'll roam through scenes of sadness,
With hearts nigh broke, with sorrow ever near,
"A little while," and then with hearts of gladness
We'll rest at home, and never know a fear.

Died in Palmer, Mass., Feb. 25th, 1862, Hattie L. M., wife of Orrin P. Allen, aged 19 years.

It was but a few weeks since, that I was called upon to record the sudden death of a dear sister. But now, alas! a higher and stronger wave of affliction has swept over me, beneath which, my saddened soul has well nigh sunk in despair. The strong hand of death has removed a loved companion from my embrace, and now she lies cold and silent in the grave, where tears and prayers cannot call her forth, till the morning dawns.

During the last week of her existence she suffered severely from nervous pain; but during the intervals of quiet she conversed freely of approaching dissolution. She said she was reconciled to the will of God, and felt ready and willing to go at the angel's bidding. I often found her in prayer when I approached her bedside, praying for herself, and for the blessing of God to fall upon her husband and darling child, not yet old enough to feel a mother's loss. For a few hours before she died, her pain ceased, and she remained as if in quiet slumber, till the heart ceased to pulsate, all unconscious of the grief-riven hearts that bled for the departing loved one.

In compliance with her request some days before her death, we carried her remains to Vernon, Vt., where the writer's friends reside. Just two years before, she had passed over the same road a happy bride. Now she returned a pale, cold, silent member, to be looked upon by tearful eyes. Ours was a sad meeting at the station in Vernon, with her brother and two sisters from Boston, and my friends. My pen refuses to describe more of that scene.

Since then, we have listened to the consoling words of the gospel, left on record to bind up the stricken heart of the mourner. Since then, we have taken the last look of her we loved so well, and have deposited her cold form in the cheerless earth. Surviving friends have mingled tears of love and sorrow together, and have parted; yet, not without hope of one day beholding the dead loved one, clothed with immortal life. May we, who survive, so live as to meet her in Paradise restored, where partings are never known, and death never severs the tie of love.

Orrin P. Allen.

Feb. 28th, 1862.

Died in Williamstown, Feb. 22d, Mr. Parker Cook, in the seventieth year of his age.

The deceased was a firm believer in the unconscious sleep of the dead and the final destruction of the wicked, and he labored much to make others believe what seemed to him to be the teaching of the Bible. He was a good man, much loved and respected by all who knew him. Although aged, and somewhat infirm, he never ceased to labor for the happiness and comfort of others. The sick and needy were always sure to receive at his hand all the service he was able to give. Thus he lived and labored until sickness confined him to his room, which was but a short time. He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss; but he has left them a pure example, which, if they follow, will prove of more value than silver and gold.

C. F. Solomon.

P. S. Prof. Albert Hopkins preached an excellent discourse upon the occasion, from Luke 2: 25, 29.

☞ An English embassy has just returned from congratulating Radama II., new king of Madagascar, whose mother, the persecuting queen, (Ranavolo) is dead. She has killed during her reign more than 100,000 persons, sometimes 1,000 at once. She was an unflinching opponent of christianity, and has executed 2,000 christians for their belief.

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Africa, we have news from Liverpool to Mar. 1st, Queenstown, Mar. 2d.

In the French Senate, Prince Napoleon demanded that the French troops should evacuate Rome.

The Committee of the Prussian Chamber of Representatives passed resolutions recognizing the Kingdom of Italy.

Paris, Mar. 2. The discussion in the French Chamber excites the greatest interest. Prince Napoleon asked a suppression of the temporal power of the Pope. La Guerroniere, the known confidant of the Emperor, spoke in favor of the temporal power. The Ministry declared that they would explain the policy of the Government on a future occasion.

ITALY.

Some anxiety is beginning to be felt about the health of the King of Italy, and, if any thing serious were to happen to him, now that Cavour is gone, there might be more continental unpleasantness.

It is officially announced that a treaty of commerce, on free trade principles, and a treaty of navigation, will shortly be concluded between Italy and England.
